"With great pleasure I write about your wondrous medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. I was laid up with scabs all over my face and neck, the result of blood poisoning. While in that condition I could not sleep at night, I had no appetite, and could not attend to my work. I tested the skill of all the doctors in the district, and used their medicines, but was not benefitted. I think I was miraculously saved at last. My aunt advised me to use Paine's Celery Compound. I did so to please her. In two weeks I was so much better that I could go out, and in three weeks I was able to work again. I bless the day I commenced with Paine's Celery Compound. I cannot say sufficient in praise of the great healing medicine. I would not be without it if I were obliged to pay ten dollars a bottle for it."

PETERBOROUGH, APRIL 17, 1902.

LOCAL NEWS-LETTERS.

OMEMEE

—The spring weather has at last come, and farmers have begun seeding.

—There are quite a number of farmers who took in the Peterborough market on Saturday last.

—David Thornton, Peterborough, attended the funeral of his cousin, the late Mrs. Johnston. Mr. Thornton says there is lots of employment in Peterborough for the willing workers.

—R. J. Adams, agent for the Massey-Harris Co., has been selling a good deal of machinery. The Peter Hamilton Co.'s machinery is amongst the most satisfactory.

—The sudden death of Mrs. Jas. Johnston, from paralysis, cast a gloom over the place. Dr. Keith, the attending physician, had Dr. Carmichael, of Peterborough, to consult with, but the best medical skill was of no avail.

—The military tournament and celebration would be quite an attraction if held at Peterborough May 24th.

—Mr. J. Nicholls, proprietor of the saw and shingle mill, is suffering very much from a sore leg. Two of our local doctors are waiting on him. His recovery is doubtful.

—Mr. Carnegie holds his first meeting here on Thursday night. Mr. Heyd and his representatives are invited. In all probability West Peterborough's defeated candidate, Mr. Garvin, will have a hot time if he faces Heyd.

—The announcement of a concert by the Mendelssohn Choir, Toronto, in St. Paul's church, Peterboro, May 12th, would be quite a drawing card for the music loving people of this village.

Literature's Anticipations of Science.

A VERY interesting book might be written, as the "Spectator" observes, by collecting together all the cases in which poets and dramatists and novelists have anticipated the triumphs of later science. A correspondent has just called attention to such a case, in which he claims that the Spanish dramatist Calderon uttered "a very clear prevision of Marconi's wireless telegraphy." Freely translated, the passage in question reads as follows: "They say that when two instruments are properly attuned together they communicate to each other their wind-borne echoes; touch the one instrument and the winds excite its fellow, though none be near it." Calderon's reference is, of course, to the well-known principle of resonance, and can scarcely be used as a prophecy of wireless telegraphy, but in the writings of a contemporary of Calderon there is a much closer approximation to Marconi's discovery. Strada, the learned Jesuit historian, tells us, how two friends carried on a correspondence "by the help of a certain Loadstone, which had such virtue in it that, if it touched two several needles, when one of the needles so touched began to move, the other, though at never so great a distance, moved at the same time and in the same manner." Strada goes on to describe how these two friends made a kind of "alphabetic telegraph"—a dial-face with the letters of the alphabet placed around its edge, and a needle in the center which could be made to point at any of the letters at will. "When they were some hundreds of miles asunder, each of them shut himself up in his closet at the time appointed, and immediately cast his eye upon his dial-plate. If he had a mind to write anything to his friend, he directed his needle to every letter that formed the words which he had occasion for, making a little pause at the end of every word or sentence to avoid confusion. The friend, in the meanwhile, saw his sympathetic needle moving of itself to every letter which that of his correspondent pointed at. By this means they talked across a whole continent, and conveyed their thoughts to one another in an instant, over cities or mountains, seas or deserts." Not only had these correspondents no necessity for wires; they did not even need the simple apparatus upon which Marconi depends, although there are scientific prophets of our day who believe that we shall yet reach even a higher standard of simplicity in the future.

"And she isn't married yet? Gracious, she's well preserved: one is the same Birdie Hoppindyke she was fifteen years ago."

"No, she's not the same. She spells it 'Byrdye' now."—Chicago Tribune.

The Origin of the Loving Cup.

THE loving cup is very common nowadays, and we see it everywhere. But many years ago there were no such things as these queer three handled affairs, and the following story tells how they first happened to be made:

Once upon a time centuries before us, there lived a great and powerful king, who was extremely fond of hunting. He was one day in a forest pursuing a stag, but it was so fleet and clever that it eluded him and his band of followers, and led them entirely out of their way. After wandering about in a hopeless fashion they finally came upon a little hut, and the king himself dismounted and rapped smartly upon the door.

A young girl answered his knock, and soon showed the men the right path. The king was about to go, when he saw a well near the house, and at the sight of the clear water immediately felt thirsty, and, going back, asked the girl for a drink. Without hesitation she went into the house and came out with an earthen jug filled with the well water. But, instead of offering his royal majesty the handle, as most people would do, she held that herself, and handed him the cup the wrong way.

The king said nothing, thanked the girl, and he and his band soon found their way out of the wood.

But when he reached his palace he determined to reward the girl for giving him the water and at the same time to teach her a lesson in politeness.

Sending to his jeweler, he bade him make a silver cup, with two handles, and deliver it to the young girl, without a word as to whence it came.

Perhaps a month after this the king again hunted in that same forest, sought the hut and asked the girl for another drink of water.

This time she entered the house and came out with a beautiful silver cup, full of the sparkling water. "Now," thought the king, "she has certainly learned a lesson." But never was he more mistaken, for the poor, ignorant girl took a handle in each hand, and for the second time offered her liege lord nothing save the side of the cup.

The king rode away deeply perplexed. He resolved to teach the girl the polite way to hand a cup without directly rebuking her, and many were the hours he spent in cudgelling his brains for some way in which to do it. At last a bright idea struck him, and he sent for his jeweler a second time. "Make me," said he to the man, "a silver cup, heavily chased, and with my royal crest, and put three handles on it." The jeweler, much surprised—for remember, no such thing had ever been heard of up to this time—did as he was told, and soon the mug was finished. As before, the king had it privately sent to the girl who lived in the little hut.

One day not long after this for the third time he rode into that forest, and, taking the now well-known path, soon reached the cottage. Dismounting, he knocked at the door and asked humbly for a drink of clear water.

The girl immediately came out with the beautiful three-handled cup, and, taking two of the handles in her hands, she offered him the third.

So the king rode away well pleased with his strategy and, reaching home, ordered three-handled cups to be made in every sort of ware, and they became so popular that we now have them in all our shops and stores.

An Unfortunate Experiment.

SOME years ago there lived in Turin a physician noted far and wide as a specialist of brain diseases. Men and women came to him from the ends of the earth. With the development of fortune, for his fees were in proportion to his prominence, he cultivated a pleasing taste for those precious relics of antiquity in which millionaires alone are privileged to indulge. He had in his library a collection of costly objects of art. The fame of his treasures was loud in the world's ears with the note of his skill. One day a rich American banker came to consult him about his wife, a confirmed kleptomaniac. His life was a burden to him, following her from store to store, continually guarding her reputation against the encroachment of her fingers. Though it had cost him thousands, his wife knew nothing, suspected nothing of her own weakness. Nor should she ever know if he could prevent it.

"If I brought her here to consult you as a physician," said the afflicted husband, "I fear she would suspect something and it would kill her. If you will permit it I'll bring her to call on you as a collector of antiquities. Do not be disconcerted, however, if during the interview you find her pilfering, slipping your relics and coins into her umbrella or pockets. That is the ailment, and, of course, whatever she takes will be returned to you at once. My references are So and So, bankers." This with much dignity and the production of documents.

The physician made the appointment, and next day the couple came. The doctor brought out his treasures, wonderful coins, antique jewelry, on which he descanted with much graceful learning. Every now and then the lady slipped into her pocket or dropped into her parasol a coin, a jewel, a vase, and as she did so her husband winked at the doctor to draw attention to her theft. When the physician finally gave the signal that he had learned all he required, she had accumulated the rarest of his possessions.

"I'll be back within an hour," said the Chicago banker, "with the things my wife has taken. Poor, poor girl!" he burst out. "Doctor, my fortune, my life are yours if you can but cure her."

Two hours passed, then three, then the interval lengthened to five. The physician, rather alarmed, sent his servant to the American's hotel. No persons of the name were staying there. The police were called in, descriptions given, detectives went forth. They identified the culprits, who had time to make their escape. They were London pickpockets, two thieves whose characters and depredations were notorious all over England.

"Why do you call the fast bicycle rider a scorcher?" "Because he goes at a hot pace, makes pedestrians boiling mad, warms up the police, gets roasted in court, and then thinks the whole thing is a burning shame."—"Tit-Bits."

Guest (impatiently)—Say, waiter, how long have you been employed here? Waiter—'Bout a week, sah. Guest—Oh, is that all! Then I must have given my order to some other waiter.—Chicago "Daily News."

The rose six months from now will blow,
The violets will be blue,
And flannelled fools will want to know,
If it's hot enough for you.

Mrs. Graham—Yes, and it is awful to be cut dead, as I was by one of my dearest friends last evening.—Boston Transcript.

The Antiquity of Trousers.

WOMAN'S ever-changing fashions in dress have afforded the men much amusement, and have given the satirical writers any amount of material for their pens. It is clearly a case of people living in glass houses and throwing stones. Men's fashions have passed through quite as many changes, and it is doubtful if the petticoat itself has had a more varied history than have those grim articles trousers. "To the eye of vulgar Logic," said Ruskin, "what is man? An omnivorous biped that wears Breeches." There has never been a Petticoat Bible, yet in the year 1560 an edition of the Scriptures was printed at Geneva known as the "Breeches Bible." The name arose from an unusual rendering of Genesis iii. 7. Adam and Eve, instead of making themselves aprons of fig-leaves, made themselves "breeches." There is no record of Eve wearing petticoats, yet the first man is reported to have worn breeches. The ancients wore breeches—divided skirts probably—on horseback only, resuming their flowing draperies when they dismounted. Among the Romans, trousers, which were called braccae, were worn only by the soldiers who were exposed to cold northern climates. They were homemade, to judge from the pictures, and not in the least stylish. Among the Greeks such garments were confined to slaves, the swells reserving the chiton for themselves. The first faint foreshadowing of trousers as we now see them was in the time of Richard I. of England. In Spain, as well as in the Low Countries, trunk hose, mercilessly slashed, stuffed and decorated, were the smart things among the elegants. The story is related of a luckless courtier who, having seated himself on a chair upon which was a projecting nail, was suddenly obliged to rise to pay his devoirs to his sovereign. Instantly several pecks of dry wheat dust gushed out of his "galloons," and the unhappy courtier stood there diminished to a spindle and cutting a very sorry figure. During the reign of Charles I. of England, when Vandyck's influence was being felt, breeches became of uniform width, open at the knee, where they were fringed or bordered with lace and fastened with ribbons. Trousers comes from Old French: trousses, a kind of hose, from trousse, a truss. Pantaloons owes its origin to St. Pantaleone, a patron saint of the Venetians. His name was commonly received at baptism by the Venetians, and was by them transferred to this garment, which they very much affected. The term "sansculotte" originated in France. It meant, properly speaking, a fellow without breeches, and was used as a term of derision by the aristocratical party for the popular party at the beginning of the Revolution, but was later assumed by the patriots as a title of honor. Another term, one which has offended our ears and our sensibilities, is pants. But good old Oliver Wendell Holmes disposes of it with short shrift: "the things named pants—a word not made for gentlemen, but gents." Even among the poets trousers have not been considered too prosaic to be put into song. The genial Tom Moore leaves behind him a charming little impromptu inspired by a pair of breeches. It seems that the bard was obliged upon one occasion to leave a very pleasant party on account of not having a pair of evening trousers in which to dress for dinner. He scratched upon a fly-leaf the following:

Between Adam and me the great difference is,
Though a paradise each has been forced to resign,
That he never wore breeches till turn'd out of his,
While, for want of my breeches, I'm banished from mine.

A Toast to the Bachelor.

A TOAST is offered to the bachelor. Not to every bachelor, of course. Not all are toastworthy. There are plenty who ought to have married, but were too timid, distrustful, lazy, self-indulgent, or incompetent. There are those who were dazzled in their youth by the spangles and gewgaws of life, and stretched out for them hands too eager to detect the worthlessness of what they got. There are those who were unfit to marry. Toast them in moderation, because they didn't, provided they will give bonds to continue single. There are those who broke hearts, partly from faithlessness, partly from over-much calculation, partly from mere lack of grit. No, we may not toast all bachelors. So much the more toast those whom we may! Maintainers of the unmaintained, bearers of burdens dropped by other men, providers for the unprovided for, succorers of the distressed, defenders of the fatherless, bulwarks of the widow! Oh, what a good, an indispensable man is that bachelor who can make a bigger living than he needs, and is always ready to share his surplus; who counsels his nephews and fortifies them with timely remittances; who surprises his nieces with gowns and opportune hats; who has no serious troubles of his own, and is ready always to shoulder such troubles as others bring to him! The trouble with Benedict is that his hostages are given. There are claims upon his heart, his time, his income. He must consider obligations and proprieties. He is a mortgaged man, though he may be ever so good a one. There is no use of spending much affection on Benedict, for he can get it at home, and he can't repay a large investment in kind without incurring domestic hazards. But a good bachelor, what a great property he is, and how inestimably valuable to those who own him! It is a great calling to be a good bachelor, and about one bachelor in a hundred makes a fairly satisfactory demonstration that it is his.—"Harper's Weekly."

Mrs. Borden—I notice you got a new suit of clothes to-day.

So many persons are operated upon every day that it is becoming quite a distinction to go to the grave all in one piece.—Atchison "Globe."

The Pace That Tells.

In the six day bicycle races the pace tells terribly at the end. Man after man falls out exhausted. The victor wabbles wearily over the line. In the business race it's the same. Man after man drops out exhausted. The successful man is often a dyspeptic, unable to enjoy success. When the stomach is diseased there is not enough nutrition assimilated to sustain the body and repair the daily waste of tissues. The result is weakness, tending to collapse.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enables the perfect assimilation of food by which the body is built up with sound, healthy flesh.

"I have taken one bottle of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for indigestion and liver complaint," writes Mr. C. M. Wilson, of Yadkin College, Davidson Co., N. C. "Have had no bad spells since I commenced taking your medicine—in fact, have not felt like the same man. Before I took the 'Golden Medical Discovery' I could not eat anything without awful distress, but now I can eat anything I wish without having unpleasant feelings. Last summer our baby was teething and was so poor he was almost a skeleton. We gave him your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and now he is as healthy and well as any child. I will speak a good word for your medicine whenever I have an opportunity."

They Staked Their Lives.

NOT long ago, among the varied pictures of human life which go to make up the daily newspaper, appeared a story as thrilling as fiction, although it was only a part of the plain news of the day. It had to do with the life-savers at the Chatham station which guards the end of Cape Cod. For thirty-six hours Captain Eldredge and his crew, who patrol this point of land projecting far out into the Atlantic, went through as hard an experience as brave men are often called upon to endure. The story is outlined by the "Youth's Companion:"

During a freezing hurricane they saw a schooner in distress off Pollock Rip. Ordinarily there could have been no question as to whether or not they should go to her assistance; for although every drop of water froze as fast as it fell, and the sea was mad, and Pollock Rip is a treacherous place, yet life-savers are used to riotous weather and do not hesitate. But this time there was a special element of danger; a northwest wind tearing down past the edge of the land at sixty miles an hour made it impossible for any boat that should set out for Pollock Rip to return against the gale.

But the men of the Chatham station did not stop to reckon their chances of return. Trusting that the schooner might hold out through the storm if manned and pumped by a fresh crew, they struck out in their life-boat toward the Rip.

Although the wind was with them, it was a hard pull. Three times they were nearly swamped, and when they reached the schooner, they dared not pull alongside of her. It took an hour of hard work to get aboard, and even then the crew of the schooner had to pull them up one by one with ropes, as if they, the life-savers, were the rescued, not the rescuers.

They had won their goal, but it might still be nothing but a goal of death; they knew that when they started. One pump was broken, the crew of the vessel was half exhausted, and the water was pouring into the schooner at the rate of nine hundred pump-strokes an hour.

Sending most of the ship's crew to their bunks, Captain Eldredge and his men manned the two good pumps and fought the inrushing water. After thirty hours of fighting they won. That is how the schooner "Emma D. Endicott," Captain Rogers of New York, lived to be towed up to Boston.

If she had not lived, the men of the Chatham life-saving station, who staked their lives on the chance that they could reach her and keep her afloat, who went to her aid knowing they could not return until the wind abated—well, they would not have lived to hear people tell them how brave they are.

Where They Flourish.

Crawford—If you're not going out to buy a new hat, but merely to look at them, what do you want with a dollar? Mrs. Crawford—Why, you can't get a decent seat at the matinee for less than a dollar.

There was a mass meeting the other day of the residents of Clapton Moor, a district of London, in favor of a Sunday delivery of letters for the district. One of the speakers opposed to the measure was the vicar of the parish, who said: "I am here in the name of God Almighty, and those who oppose me oppose Him." This statement seemed to settle the question, for a resolution in favor of Sunday delivery was at once carried by an overwhelming majority.

"At Plevna, Kan.," says The Kansas City Journal, "A 'joint' keeper cornered the Rev. W. H. 'All right,' responded the parson, cheerfully, and two minutes later the friends of the 'joint' keeper were taking him down to the butcher shop for the application of beefsteak to a pair of beautiful black eyes. The hospitality of Scotland is quite as well established as the hospitality of Ireland, but the canniness of the Scot, which has passed into a proverb, is likely to assert itself at any stage. As The Scotsman tells this story, it cannot be suspected of proving false to its own countrymen:—

An Irish friend insisted that a Scotchman should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last cigar.

"Now, look here," said the man from Dunedin, "I'll hae nae mair o' this. Here ye've been keepin' me at your hoose for a month, an' payin' for a' the amusements and cabs and so on—I tell you I'll stan' nae mair o' it! We'll just hae a toss for this one!"

Judge Roger S. Greene, for many years Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory, was eminent not only for his legal attainments, but also for the accuracy of his scholarship and scrupulously correct use of language. A mispronunciation was an offence that he could not permit to pass unnoticed.

In arguing a case before him one day an attorney cited Browne on Carriers, pronouncing the name of the author Brown-ey. The Judge interrupted the argument to give him the correct pronunciation, which he accepted for the moment, but soon relapsed into his error, whereupon the Judge again interrupted with:—

"Mr. ——, that author's name is not pronounced Browney, but Brown. As in the case of many similar words, the final 'e' is silent. There is an 'e' at the end of my name, but you would not call me 'Greney,' would you?"

"T' at depends," instantly replied the lawyer, "on how your Honor decides this case!"—New York Times.

Gambling on the Atlantic.

An English paper charges that the big Atlantic liners are hotbeds of gambling, and supply an easy prey in the shape of foolish young men to the card-sharpers who travel to and fro. Probably there is not a steward on board who does not know the faces of half a dozen of these men, and doubtless the detectives of Liverpool and New York know every one of them. Liners should carry a detective as they carry a surgeon and lifeboats; and a quiet hint to the prey that is walking into the snare should be easy and effective.

At a New York Pier.

The traveler fell on his knees and begged for mercy; but the customs inspector was adamant.

"Once, and once only," said the latter, "I let a man go through without offering him every indignity that savage ingenuity can devise. He proved to be a spotter from Washington, and I nearly lost my job. I sha'n't make that mistake again."

Yes, the traveler would have to have his stomach pumped out; most distinctly, yes.—N. Y. "Life."

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter asking him to tell her over and over again that he loved her with all his heart. There was something pitifully pathetic about the wistful manner in which she asked the question.

Aleck threw back his dark, handsome head with a hearty, good-humored laugh.

"I wonder if every man's wife is as fond of love-making as mine?" he said quizzically. "It seems to me you ask me if I shall always care for you almost every day. Why should you imagine there could ever be any change in my great love for you? The sun could easier change its course, the darkness of night obscure the glad light of day."

"Oh, Aleck!" she sobbed, clinging to him closer, "if anything should ever happen to part us, I should die. You will always remember those words—it would kill me!"

He kissed the lovely face so like the petals of a white rose.

"Nothing but the death of either you or me could part us," he said.

"Look into my face and swear that to me, Aleck," she said, "then I will know that whatever happens you will, you must keep your solemn vow."

An older and wiser man than handsome, gay Aleck would have looked into her words more closely, and found a strange meaning there, a terrible, haunting fear.

Youth never weighs actions and words where love is concerned. Aleck only laughed, thinking that this dainty, sweet little golden-haired bride of his only wanted to be made love to.

"There is no need to repeat it, my darling," he answered smilingly, "for I promised all that on the day we were wed; and there is nothing on earth as solemn and as binding as a marriage vow, you know."

"Nothing on earth so solemn or so binding as a marriage vow!" Heaven help her! It was a wonder she did not fall dead at his feet when she heard those terrible words.

"What if any one were to break a marriage vow, Aleck?" she breathed faintly. "What should you think ought to be done with him?"

"In what way?" he answered, surprised and puzzled at the question.

"Suppose that one of them failed to keep that sacred promise to love and honor the other—suppose that one of them found life so intolerable as to fly from the other—go to the farther end of the world, breaking that vow to cleave to that other until death parted them? Oh, Aleck, my love! tell me what would happen to the one who found life so hard as to break away."

The question amused him vastly.

"You ask such curious questions, my dear, that I can scarcely answer them. In the first place, true love never wearies of its object; where weariness exists, there is no true love; and one who would break those sacred bonds has no honor."

"But when one soul is created, tell me, Aleck, is not another created to go with it?"

"Yes," he said thoughtfully, "I am sure there is."

"But what happens, Aleck, if the wrong souls go together?" she asked. "I am not speaking lightly, Aleck. What happens, what do people do if the wrong souls go together? I know," she went on before he had time to answer, "the wrong souls part and each goes to the right one, Aleck."

The very oddness of their conversation struck him forcibly.

"How does it happen that you have such strange thoughts, my darling?" he asked. "Have you been reading some newspaper scandal, or have you been thinking of leaving me?" he added, with an uneasy laugh.

There was something infinitely piteous in the way she threw her white arms around his neck, and laid her soft, warm cheek against his, murmuring brokenly:

"Leave you, Aleck, my heart's love, oh, never—never, it would be death to me—you are the other half of my soul, my thoughts, my very being are bound up in you! If you should be taken from me, Aleck, in that moment my heart would break!

"Oh, Aleck, my love, we will not talk about it any more, we will never speak about such things again."

Aleck was young —only four-and-twenty —and of course his heart beat with a responsive thrill as the lovely rose-bud mouth of his little bride was pressed to his in love's sweet kisses.

At thirty a man's heart is hardened; the romance and tenderness of youth is, by contact with the world, brushed off like the down of a peach.

He is suspicious, and weighs every act, word and glance. As Aleck had not reached the age of suspicion, he naturally believed that Daisy meant if death should ever take him from her, she, too, would die then and there.

"And now," said he, removing the clinging clasp of the white arms, "why that solemn face?"

"I had something to ask of you, Aleck," she answered wistfully.

"To settle some milliner's bill, I presume?" he said amusedly. "I supposed all this love-making was the forerunner of something of the kind."

"Yes; I do want some money, Aleck," she said, "and you must not ask me what I want it for."

He took out his pocket-book at once and handed out two fifty-dollar bills.

"I want more than this, Aleck," said Daisy, faintly. "I want a thousand dollars."

He looked at her aghast.

"A thousand dollars, my darling," he said. "Why, what could you possibly want it for? I had an idea that all your wants were filled."

"So they are, Aleck; all but this one."

"I hope you are not contemplating starting a charity society, or sending it off to the heathen," he said, curiously; "especially as I am a little short just now; but you shall have it, my dear, how could I refuse you anything? You shall have it in the course of a day or so."

"I must have it now, Aleck," she persisted, her face paling to a dead white.

"But I have not that amount by me, darling," he declared. "You shall have it in the course of a day or two."

"But that will not do, Aleck," she said. "I must have it now; you must raise it somehow."

"If I thought it was for anything imperative I would get it at once, dear," he said; "if you can advance

Anecdotal.

At a recent dinner in New York the Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage told a story of a lady who was asked: "Do you ever think of getting married?" "Think," she answered with asperity, "I worry."

A Toronto man, father of an unusually numerous family, was visited by a Westerner. "I never saw anything like it, old man," remarked the stranger over the cigars; "every time I come you have a new baby." "Oh, don't mind it, my dear fellow; it isn't your fault," was the quick reply.

The late Lord Dufferin had put on record a Sheridan story which is worth repeating. Richard Brinsley Sheridan was one day remonstrating with his son in reference to some peccadillo, and finished by exclaiming, "Why, Tom, my father would never have permitted me to do such a thing." Like lightning came the repartee: "Sir, do you presume to compare your father with my father!"

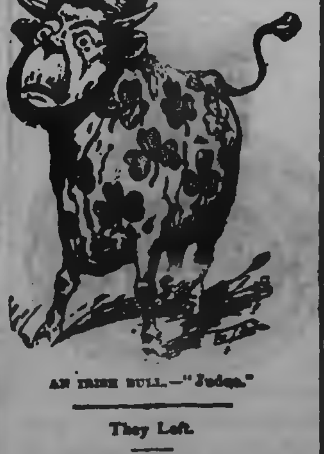
A young heiress with a penchant for farming was explaining at length the many difficulties she encountered in pursuing her fad. "I really am a farmer," she protested, and then added, regretfully, "although it must be confessed that almost all I plant I lose." "Therein differing from me," courteously rejoined her table companion, a rising young physician, "for I find in my case that almost all I lose I plant."

An omnibus full of Parisian students was making its way along the Rue de Rivoli when a priest in his robes of office joined the party. The students hailed the newcomer with delight, and began at once to tell all the objectionable stories they could recall. The priest spoke not a word till he rose to get out. Then he said, politely: "Au revoir, messieurs." The French "au revoir" means literally, "till we see each other again." One of the students evidently had this in mind when he replied. "Um," he said, "we don't want to meet you again, old dismal!" "But, au revoir," repeated the cure; "we are sure to meet again. I am the chaplain of the Mazas prison."

Once when Sir Charles Hotham, Governor of Victoria, was out driving, his coachman nearly came into collision with a wood carter, an Irishman, in a narrow lane outside Melbourne. The Irishman would not pull off the middle of the road, as he had the heavier load, and, by the rough rule of such things, was thus entitled to keep there. The incensed governor thereupon put his head out of the carriage window and shouted: "Do you know who I am, my man? I'm Sir Charles Hotham, the Governor of Victoria!" "Ye are, are ye?" responded the other. "Well, ye've got a thunderin' foine billet, ould man, an' I'd advise ye to shtick to it!"

When called to take up mission work in Chicago, the late Bishop Whipple found busy railway yards close to his chapel. He asked the chief engineer how to reach railway operatives. "Read Lardner's 'Railway Economy' until you are able to ask a question of an engineer and he not think you a fool." So instructed, he dropped in one day on a group cleaning an engine, and ventured a question: "Which do you like the better, inside or outside connections?" A torrent of discussion followed on connections, steam-heaters, exhausts; and at the end of a half hour he remarked, in leaving: "Boys, I have a free church in Metropolitan Hall, where I should be glad to see you." The next Sunday every man was there.

In order to show the feeling of insecurity of the Czar of all the Russias amongst his subjects, Prince Bismarck related the following anecdote of the Emperor Nicholas: The court physician had prescribed massage for some ailment of the Czar, who, however, was unable to find a single person in his entourage to whom he cared to entrust the task. At his wit's end, he at last applied to Frederick William IV. for a few non-commissioned officers of the Prussian Guard; these were sent, and returned to Berlin after the completion of the rubbing "cure" heavily laden with presents. "So long as I can look my Russians in the face everything is well," Nicholas is reported to have said, "but I will not risk letting them work away at my back."



AN IRISH BULL.—"Judge."

They Left.

"It does me good to see a smart Aleck get the worst of it," said the communicative conductor to the man on the back platform. "There were two of them on my car yesterday, and their game was to scare people into thinking that they were just recovering from smallpox. They talked loudly about it for the benefit of the other passengers, and the more nervous ones, especially the women, began to grow apprehensive.

"'Yes,' said one, 'my case was a pretty bad one, the doctors said.'

"'So was mine,' replied the other fellow. 'It seems good to get out of the Municipal Hospital, doesn't it?'

"'That's what it does,' said the first one.

"Sitting next to them was a man who had been taking it all in. At this point he leaned over and said:

"'Say, when did you fellows get out?'

"'Only yesterday,' loudly remarked one of the kidders.

"'Is that so,' exclaimed the man. 'So did I. What ward were you in?'

"Well, say, those fellows jumped off the car as though it had been struck by lightning."

It is somewhat humbling to our pride to know that the greatest speed attained under sail is that of the flying proa of Pacific savages. Until the advent of the turbine motor these tiny craft could outsail any steamer afloat, even the modern German liners. Their lowest estimated speed is twenty knots, and many travelers credit them with more.

Since March 1 the torch in the hand of the Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, in New York harbor, has not been lighted. This does not mean that the statue has lost its significance as the symbol and personification of the broad political and industrial freedom which is enjoyed in the United States. It simply means that no satisfactory method of lighting the torch has been devised, and that the Lighthouse Board does not think it worth while to continue an inadequate electric lamp. The other harbor lights serve all the needs of the mariners, and the statue itself, without its own light, will show more plainly in the darkness than before.

The reputation of Germany as a country where life is regulated as much as possible in accordance with the behests of science is borne out by the regulations of the German military authorities concerning the marching and physical training of troops. The "physiology of marching" has recently been the subject of careful investigation, and the results obtained are taken advantage of for the benefit of the German army. Among the conclusions reached is that during continuous heavy marching the rations supplied are not sufficient to replace the waste of carbohydrates, and that a day's rest is required after every three days' marching, to enable the body to recover its normal power.

In typewriting 500 letters you waste one hour in writing "Dear Sir" and "Yours very truly." Now, the total annual number of letters sent through the post all over the world is 8,000,000,000. Of course this is not all commercial correspondence, nor is it all typewritten, but for the purpose of having some statistical starting-point it will be assumed that it is. To write "Dear Sir" and "Yours very truly" for this number of letters would take one typist 14,000,000 hours, allowing 300 working days to the year, about 4,700 years. To translate this into an approximation of its money value, allowing $10 as the salary of the typist and eight hours as the average day's work, the cost would be $3,850,000.

The Wiarton (Ont.) "Echo" records a remarkable instance of affection between dumb brutes. A Mr. Robertson lost a team of horses through the ice on Colpoy's Bay. It appears that the gentleman mentioned is the owner of a dog—an ordinary collie dog—that was passionately fond of the animals drowned, and they were in constant companionship whenever possible. After the accident occurred, and when the horses were delivered from their watery graves and pulled out on the ice, the large crowd that had gathered quickly dispersed, the horses being apparently "left alone in their glory." It transpired later on, however, that the faithful dog, in his grief for his lost companions, refused to leave the spot where they were, and was tenderly licking the animals' heads and giving vent to his sorrow in various other ways. Efforts were made to console the bereaved canine and to attract him from the spot, but he went not, and refused to be comforted. He remained, it is said, near the scene of the accident till the bay was completely enveloped in darkness. The poor brute then solemnly and sadly wended his way to his master's home.

The other night Thomas J. White, a Brooklyn butcher, found it necessary to remain in his store until after midnight, to finish making up his accounts for the week. Miss Maria Jacobs, his fiancee, was waiting for him to escort her to her home. White took six hundred dollars from the cash drawer and placed it in a wallet, which he put in his pocket. He was just about to don his coat when he was seized with a fit and fell to the floor. Miss Jacobs tried to raise him up, but failed, so she ran out of the store for assistance. The first persons she met were two frowsy-looking fellows, who readily responded to her appeal for help. They rushed into the store, and while one of them lifted the prostrate White the other lifted the wallet out of the butcher's pocket and fled. Miss Jacobs gave pursuit. The other stranger promptly dropped White, ran to the money-drawer, and, finding no money there, looked about him for something of value to seize. There were juicy steaks and toothsome chops, but he selected a big bologna sausage and ran out with the booty. The first stranger, in the meantime, had succeeded in eluding Miss Jacobs and getting away. When she returned to the store the second thief had also disappeared. A policeman was finally called to hunt for the robbers, and a physician to attend White. The doctor succeeded in bringing White out of his fit, but the policeman failed to bring back the thieves or the money.

Recognized Their Old Friend.

THE love which English people, especially British soldiers, feel for Florence Nightingale has been shown at many times and in many places. A new and striking instance of it was recently given by the "Sunday Magazine."

The late Sir John Steell, sculptor to Queen Victoria, was modeling a bust of Miss Nightingale, when an officer of one of the Highland regiments which had suffered so cruelly in the Crimea heard that the bust had just been completed, and was in Sir John's studio. Many of the men in his company had passed through the hospital at Scutari, and he obtained permission from the sculptor to bring some of them to see it. Accordingly a squad of men one day marched into the big studio and stood in line.

They had no idea why they had been mustered in so strange a place. Without a word of warning the bust was uncovered, and the men broke rank, and with cries of "Miss Nightingale! Miss Nightingale!" surrounded the model, and with hats off cheered the figure of their devoted nurse until the roof rang.

So spontaneous and hearty and so inspiring was the whole scene that in after days Sir John Steell declared it to be the greatest compliment of his life.

Anecdotal.

Shortly after Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass" made its appearance, J. T. Trowbridge was walking with Lowell in Cambridge, when the latter pointed out a doorway sign, "Groceries," with the letters set zigzag, to produce a bizarre effect. "That," said he, "is Walt Whitman—with very common goods inside."

A Philadelphia paper declares that Archbishop Ryan was recently about to take a train for Baltimore at the Broad Street Station, when a young man accosted him, saying: "Your face is familiar, where in hell have I seen you?" "I really don't know," replied the archbishop, blandly; "what part of hell do you come from?"

Many years ago, when Senator Ingalls was in the Senate, oleomargarine was a bone of contention. The debate led Ingalls to utter one of those epigrammatic sentences which made him famous. "I have never, to my knowledge, tasted oleomargarine," said Ingalls, "but I have stood in the presence of genuine butter with awe for its strength and reverence for its antiquity."

A lady carrying on mission work in the slums was teaching a little colored girl to spell. She used a pictorial primer, and over each word was its accompanying picture. Polly glibly spelled "o-x, ox," and "b-o-x, box," etc. But the teacher thought that she was making "right rapid progress." So she put her hand over the picture, and said, "Polly, what does 'o-x' spell?" "Ox," answered Polly, nimbly. "How do you know that it spells 'ox,' Polly?" "Seed his tail," replied the apt Polly.

A very popular Oxford dean, crossing the quadrangle of Christ's College one day, was met by a number of undergraduates who passed him without "capping." The reverend gentleman felt annoyed. "Do you know who I am?" he asked. "No, sir." "Then how long have you been at the college?" "Eight days, sir." "Indeed!" replied the dean, sarcastically. "Well, in that case, you stand excused. I know that puppies do not open their eyes until the ninth day." And then he resumed his walk.

While he was in England, Mark Twain says his head was once taxed as gas works. He wrote Queen Victoria a friendly letter of protest, saying: "I don't know you, but I've met your son. He was at the head of a procession in the Strand, and I was on a 'bus." Years afterward he met the Prince of Wales, now King Edward VII., at Homberg. They had a long walk and talk together. When bidding him good-by, the Prince said: "I am glad to have met you again." This remark troubled Twain, who feared that he had been mistaken for someone else. He communicated this suspicion to the Prince, who replied: "Why, don't you remember when you met me in the Strand and I was at the head of a procession, and you were on a 'bus?"

Slason Thompson says that the late Eugene Field was fond of relating the following story of James Whitcomb Riley: "To beguile the tediousness of the return voyage from Europe, it was proposed to give a concert in the saloon of the ship—an entertainment to which all capable of amusing their fellow-voyagers should contribute. Mr. Riley was asked to recite some of his original poems, and, of course, he cheerfully agreed to do so. Among the number present at this mid-ocean entertainment, over which the Rev. Myron Reed presided, were two Scotchmen, very worthy gentlemen, en route from the land o' cakes to the land of biscuits, upon a tour of investigation. These twain shared the enthusiasm with which the auditors applauded Mr. Riley's charming recitations. They marveled that so versatile a genius could have lived in a land reputed for uncouthness and savagery. "Is it no wonderful, Donal," remarked one of these Scots, "that a tradesman suld be sic a bonnie poet?" "And is he indeed a tradesman?" asked the one. "Indeed he is," answered the other; "did ye no hear the dominie intryjuce him as the hoosier poet? Just think of it, mooni—just think of a gude poet dividing his time making hoosiery!"

THE risks that firemen take are an everlasting wonder, even though almost every paper contains stories of their bravery. But the man behind the fire-engine—apparently he has only to keep his machine going, and is as safe as the man who pulls the lever of an upright "donkey." The story of Bill Brown, as told by Mr. Cleveland Moffett in "Careers of Daring and Danger," shows that the engineer's bravery is sometimes put to tests as severe as those which the fireman at the ladder [illegible].

What happened was this: Engine 33, pumping her prettiest, stood at the corner so near the drug-house that the driver thought it wasn't safe for the horses, and led them away. That left Brown alone, against the cheek of the fire, watching his boiler and keeping his steam-gage at twenty-five.

As the fire gained, chunks of redhot sandstone began to crash down on the engine. Brown put his pressure up to eighty, and watched the door anxiously where the four firemen from his squad had gone into the furnace.

Then an explosion of chemicals in the building sent a flame wide as a house clear across the street, enwrapping engine and man, and setting fire to the elevated railway station overhead. Bill Brown stood by his engine with a sheet of fire above him. He heard footsteps on the pavement and voices that grew fainter, crying, "Run for your life, [illegible]!" [illegible] the skin on his hands, face and neck was blistered.

Brown knew why everyone was running. There would be another explosion. It was tolerably certain that he [illegible]. But his four men were in the fire and needed the water. If he quit his engine the water would fail.

He stoked in coal and ran the gage up another notch, easing the running parts with the oiler. He was offering his life for his friends.

In a few minutes the four firemen came out of the building. Then Bill Brown ran for his life with his comrades. A second or two later Engine 33 was crushed by the falling walls.

A Story of Cecil Rhodes.

Mr. Cecil Rhodes' latest biographer, Mr. Hensman, contradicts the story that Rhodes ever used the phrase "he never met a man whom he could not buy." The germ of this fiction, Mr. Hensman says, "is to be found in the fact that one day, many years ago, when discussing his proposed telegraph wire [illegible] to the other, somebody asked him how he proposed to carry it across the Soudan, which was then under the domination of the Khalifa. 'Oh, leave it to me,' Rhodes answered, 'I never met a man yet with whom I could not come to an agreement, and I shall be able to fix things up with the Khalifa when the time comes.' This is the [illegible] version of a story [illegible] quoted."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Turning Smoke Into Gold.

QUEEN ELIZABETH of England was not a thoroughgoing spinster, for she had so little prejudice against the practice of smoking that she permitted Sir Walter Raleigh his pipe in the royal presence. She was sufficiently a woman, however, to twit him openly on his devotion to the weed, and it was on one of these occasions—or so the author of "The Soveraine Herbe" shrewdly surmises—that the knight replied:

"I can assure Your Majesty that I have so well experienced the nature of it that I can tell even the weight of the smoke in any quantity I consume."

"I doubt it much, Sir Walter," replied Elizabeth, holding it was impossible to weigh smoke, and mayhap scenting a joke, "and I will wager you twenty gold angels that you do not solve my doubt."

Gallantly accepting the wager, Raleigh filled his pipe with a weighed quantity of tobacco, smoked it out, and then, weighing the resultant ashes, announced the weight he had smoked away.

"Your Majesty cannot deny that the difference has disappeared in smoke."

"Truly, I cannot," answered the Queen. Ordering the wager to be paid, she turned to the courtiers around her and said: "Many alchemists have I heard of who turned gold into smoke, but Raleigh is the first who has turned smoke into gold."

Little Lottie had gone away from home to visit a little neighbor without her mother's consent, and upon her return Lottie received a rebuke. The little girl pouted for a time and then her mother, anxious to renew friendly relations again, said:—

"You still love your mother, don't you, Lottie?"

"Well," answered Lottie, thoughtfully, "I don't guess I luv you enuf t' notice it."—Columbus (Ohio) State Journal.

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the editor, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The town's new road scraper arrived yesterday.

—A pocket book which was found last week, has been handed to the Chief of Police.

—The annual banquet of the members of the Y.M.C.A. will take place on Thursday evening.

—Rev. E. A. Langfeldt will hold a cottage meeting this evening at 8 o'clock, in the mission church at Auburn.

—A meeting of the Board of Works was held last night, when some street matters were disposed of.

—Master Reggie Deacon, the phenomenal boy singer, has been secured for the band concert on Friday evening next.

—A full attendance of the National base-ball team is called on Thursday April 17th, at half past six o'clock, on their old practice grounds, north of the C.G.E. Works, on Park St.

—The plans for the Carnegie Public Library were displayed at Tuesday night's meeting of the Lindsay Council. They were furnished by Messrs. Miller & Co., Architects, of Hamilton.

—There is some talk of putting on a first class automobile carriage between Peterborough and Chemong Park. We sincerely hope that the report may prove true.

—It is said that considerable spearing of maskilonge has been going on both up the lakes and down the river. Steps are being taken, we understand, to punish the guilty parties.

—Mr. Richard Sheehy, of town, was one of three experts selected by the mayor of Lindsay to report on the foundation walls of the new fire hall in regard to which some question had been raised. The three experts each reported the walls as satisfactory.

—Mr. R. H. Jackson, the genial proprietor of the Crown Hotel, ordered an extra copy of The Times to be sent to his hotel. He says there is a scramble for the paper every morning. In fact several of his star boarders say that they cannot enjoy their early meal without this great family journal.

—Miss Moore, a returned missionary from Japan, will speak at the usual Saturday morning meeting of the St. John's Mission Band. It is hoped that all the members of the Band will be in attendance, and punctual, so that the meeting may begin sharp at half-past two.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. J. H. Brandon, Fenelon Falls, was in town yesterday.

—Mr. W. J. Pearson and his son, Mr. Percy Pearson, were in town yesterday.

—Mr. Robert Ruddy, barrister, Millbrook, was in town yesterday on business.

—Miss Gertie Cornell, of Omemee, is spending a few days in town, the guest of her cousin, Miss Dina Hill.

—The Times had a call yesterday from Mr. S. E. Salls, general agent of the Canada Life Assurance Company, who is in town on business connected with the Company.

KNOCKED DOWN BY A HORSE

A Young Lady Run Over and Severely Injured Last Night

Yesterday evening about half past six a young lady, who was returning from the Electric Works, where she is employed, was run over by a horse and rig when crossing the street at the corner of Hunter and Bethune streets. The Times was unable to learn the name of the driver, who was accompanied by a lady, and who is said to have been going very fast.

The wheels passed over the young woman's legs, bruising them. She was assisted into Mr. Bradshaw's grocer store, where she remained until she recovered herself. She complained of injury to the head, but was able to walk home.

THE CAMPAIGN

The Liberals of West Peterborough More Completely Organized Than Ever Before —Conservatives Also Preparing

The Liberals are not letting the grass grow under their feet, and are said already to have perfect organization from Harvey to South Monaghan. Hon. Mr. Stratton's 1898 majority will not, it is believed by fair-minded thinkers be materially reduced when the ballots are counted.

Major Miller is "pegging" away, and will do what he can to pull his opponents big majority down. Everybody has a good word to say of the gallant Major, and many regret to be obliged to vote against him. His entrance into the political arena in opposition to the Provincial Secretary, was not a wise piece of political strategy, particularly at this juncture.

"Side Tracked" To-Night

The attraction of the season will be the famous comedy triumph "Side-Tracked," presented by A. Q. Scammon's favorite company of clever comedians and handsome and talented girls. "Side Tracked" is a comedy that has few duplicates as a laugh provoker, possessing, as it does, many characteristics that compel all to enjoy it. It has gained public favor by reason of its originality, the quality of its story and the opportunity it affords for good, clean fun and wholesome amusement. The selection of this season's company was made by Mr. Scammon with especial reference to the individual ability of each member to correctly portray the role to which they would be allotted. As a result the collective performance of the company has been pronounced the most satisfactory seen with any comedy this season. The performance abounds in pleasing specialties and sparkling musical features. The piece is particularly pleasing in scenic and costume effects, and the girls of the company are strikingly attractive. "Side Tracked" may be anticipated to prove one of the "real" shows of the season and amusement patrons are advised that it is worthy of their consideration. Reserved seats are on sale in advance at Ormond & Walsh's drug store. Prices, 25c., 35c., 50c.

EVER GET "FULL?"

On Other Things Than Liquor

It is profitable for anyone to study food in order to regulate the health, not with medicine but by building up healthy nerve centres with good food.

A man who has made something of a study on this line writes from Iowa City: "When I first tried Grape-Nuts it was at the table of a prominent state official and the remarkable taste attracted me. I afterwards investigated the subject carefully and discovered that Grape-Nuts contains dextrose sugar. The starchy part of the food is transformed into starch sugar or dextrose. Those same results are produced by the digestive organs by the action of the saliva and the pancreatic juices on starchy foods. These facts convinced me that Grape-Nuts is a natural, pre-digested food and just what I required and needed.

I had been suffering from a full feeling after meals and generally more or less headache. All this trouble left when I quit using white bread, warm biscuits, etc.

It was about this time I came home from school, broken down physically and mentally. I only weighed 120 lbs. At my earnest request mother began serving Grape-Nuts every meal and she said she had never eaten anything that agreed with her physical condition as did my 'new' food," as she termed it.

In five weeks I weighed 133 pounds, a gain of 13 pounds, and I feel so strong that I have been able to do from ten to 16 hours of hard work daily. My mind has never seemed so clear before and I am thoroughly convinced that there is no food like Grape-Nuts to produce health and a strong and clear brain." Lee Arlington, Box 1755, Iowa City, Ia.

"AT HOME" TENDERED THE RETIRING PASTOR AND HIS SUCCESSOR

In the Spacious Schoolroom of St. Paul's Church Last Night—A Pleasant Evening Spent.

The spacious Sunday School room of St. Paul's Church was the scene of a very pleasant gathering last evening. The At Home which was tendered the retiring pastor Mr. Yule, and his successor, Mr. Wilson, was decidedly successful although the voice of welcome mingled with the sadness of farewell.

Both young and old seemed to cast aside all care and the true spirit of sociability pervaded the assembly and contrived to make the evening so pleasant that it will long be remembered by those present.

The speeches delivered during the evening by Dr. Torrance, and different members of the congregation all went to show the high esteem in which Mr. Yule was held, both as a preacher and as a man. During his stay here he has won for himself golden opinions in Peterborough, and he will ever occupy a warm place in the hearts of the people of St. Pauls.

The following is the programme, each number of which was much appreciated and listened to with rapt attention.

Chairman's Address	Mr. Adam Hall.
Speech	Mr. R. B. Wood.

Vocal Solo	Mrs. W. A. Sanderson
Speech	Sheriff Hall
Vocal Solo	Mr. Dawson.
Address	Rev. J. A. Wilson.
Selection	St. Paul's Quartette.?
Address	Rev. G. Yule.

The chair was ably occupied by Mr. Adam Hall, and Mr. Crane in his well-known and masterly style presided at the piano.

During the intermission refreshments were served in the manner which always characterizes anything given in this line by the ladies of St. Pauls. The meeting closed with the benediction by the Rev. Dr. Torrance.

A Girl's Health and Beauty

Malt Breakfast Food

GUARANTEES MANY BLESSINGS

A girl's health and beauty depend upon her home surroundings and education, her dress, her work, proper exercise, and last but not least, upon her food. It matters not if she be rich or poor, elevated or humble, if her food is not of a character to keep flesh, nerves, blood and brain in proper condition, she can have neither true health or beauty.

It has been satisfactorily demonstrated that breakfast regularly begun with delicious and health-giving Malt Breakfast Food, does much to improve a girl's health and beauty.

This marvelous health food is a perfect regulator of digestion, a builder of flesh, bone and muscle and a brain nourisher. Malt Breakfast Food keeps the blood pure, thus insuring clear, transparent skin, sparkling eyes and a face that betokens full health.

A HANDSOME STORE

Mr. George Schneider to Create Handsome Single Store on George Street

Mr. George Schneider, whose building on George street, occupied by Mr. Pete Simons, was wrecked by the falling of a brick wall after the Crystal Block fire, is busily employed repairing the damage, a settlement having been arrived at with the Central Canada Loan Co., who were responsible for the trouble. Mr. Schneider, we understand will turn the shop into a handsome single store, in order to make room for a stairway to the second flat.

It is Mr. Schneider's intention to fit the upstairs into dwelling flats or commodious business offices, for which there is now a demand.

DEATH OF MRS. WM. ALFORD

One of Lakefield's Oldest and Most Esteemed Citizens Passes Away

We regret to be forced to chronicle the demise of Mrs. Wm. Alford, who passed away at the family residence, Lakefield on Tuesday last. The deceased was born in Devonshire, England, on August 12th, 1826, and was married to Mr. Wm Alford on March, 1851, who survives her. Besides her husband, there is left to mourn her demise, two daughters,—Mrs. D. McLean, Moosejaw, N.W.T., and Mrs. Gunn Peterborough, and also a brother in England, besides six grandchildren.

The deceased was for many years a resident of Lakefield, where she was highly esteemed. Her many noble qualities endeared her to those who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, and will make her memory long revered.

EAST PETERBORO' CAMPAIGN

Mr. Wm. Anderson Opens the Ball in Douro Last Night

The campaign in East Peterborough, so far as the Liberal Candidate is concerned, was opened last night, when a meeting was held in the interests of Mr. Wm. Anderson, at S.S. No. 2 Douro.

Mr. Anderson addressed the electors and was heartily received. Stirring addresses were also delivered by Messrs. R. F. McWilliams and G. M. Roger.

To-morrow night a meeting will be held at Stewart's settlement, Otonabee, where the same speakers will be present and address the meeting.

THE TWENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE Western Bank of Canada

OSHAWA, ONTARIO

Held at the Head Office of the Bank on Wednesday, April 9th, 1902

The following shareholders were present: John Cowan, Esq., W. F. Allen, Esq., Thomas Patterson, Esq., Dr. McIntosh, R. S. Hamlin, Esq., Thomas Miller, Esq., John McLaughlin, Esq., C. W. Scott, Esq., W. F. Cowan, Esq., T. H. McMillan, Esq. George Porter, Esq., R. Dillon, Esq., and Thomas Conant, Esq.

The President, John Cowan, Esq., occupied the chair, and Mr. T. H. McMillan acted as Secretary to the meeting.

REPORT

The Directors have pleasure in submitting the Twentieth Annual Report for the year ending 28th February, 1902.

The earnings of the Bank have been in excess of any previous year. The net profits of the year have amounted to $50,325.58, or about 12 1-2 per cent. upon the average paid-up capital of the Bank, which, added to the balance carried forward from the previous year of $11,175.93, amounts to $61,501.51.

Out of this sum two half-yearly dividends of 3 1-2 per cent. each have been paid, absorbing $28,565.97. $16,000 carried to the Rest Account. $12,857.33 to the credit of past due paper, and $4,078.21 has been carried forward to the credit of Profit and loss.

The deposits of the Bank have increased $190,279.08, and the circulation $13,800, and the gross assets $530 452.80 over the previous year. The losses of the year have been below the average of previous years.

The Rest Account of the Bank now stands at $150,000, or about equal to 36 per cent. of the paid-up capital.

The Agencies of the Bank have been recently inspected, and found in a satisfactory condition.

Oshawa, 9th April, 1902. JOHN COWAN, President.

T. H. McMILLAN, Cashier

Moved by the President, and seconded by the Vice-President, that the Report as read be adopted, printed and circulated among the Shareholders.—Carried

Mr. Conant, seconded by Mr. Dillon, moved: That the thanks of the Shareholders are due, and are hereby tendered to, the President, Vice-President and Directors of the Bank for the manner in which they have conducted the Affairs of the Bank during the past year.—Carried.

Mr. Paterson, seconded by Mr. Scott, moved: That the thanks of the Shareholders be given to the Cashier and other officers of the Bank for their attention to the interests of the Bank.—Carried.

Mr. Miller, seconded by Mr. Porter, moved: That this meeting do now proceed to elect, by ballot, seven Directors to fill the place of those retiring, and that Messrs. C. W. Scott and John McLaughlin be scrutineers for said election, and that the poll remain open for one hour to receive the votes of the Shareholders, and that should five minutes elapse at any time without a vote being taken the poll should be declared closed, and that the Scrutineers be paid $4.00 each for their services.—Carried.

The scrutineers reported the following seven gentlemen as having received the unanimous vote of the Shareholders, viz.: John Cowan, Esq., R. S. Hamlin, Esq., W. F. Cowan, Esq., Dr. McIntosh, W. F. Allen, Esq., T. Paterson, Esq., and J. A. Gibson, Esq., who were duly elected Directors for the ensuing year. A vote of thanks was then tendered to the Chairman for his able conduct in the chair, and the meeting then adjourned.

At a subsequent meeting of the new Board, John Cowan, Esq., was unanimously elected President, and R. S. Hamlin, Esq., Vice-President.

LIEUT. PENDRY ELECTED

An Old Peterborough Boy Honored in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Lieut. Bryer H. Pendry, D.U.S., of Company H. Thirteenth Regiment, was a few evenings ago elected Captain of the Company, by a vote of 46 to 15. A Brooklyn paper, in referring to the promotion of Dr. Pendry, says: "Lieut. Pendry's selection is the outcome of a spirited although altogether good-natured contest between himself and his opponent, who was a regular army officer. Both men are capable officers, and the question of election appeared to hinge upon personal popularity. Lieut. Pendry is a young and energetic officer, and is well liked by his subordinates. It is believed by his brother officers that he will do much toward putting Company H. on a plane as high as that occupied by any military organization in the city."

Capt. Pendry is a son of Hon. Dr. Pendry, who, with Mrs. Pendry, is visiting his brother-in-law, Mr. Edward Courtney, Ashburnham. Capt. Pendry, who is also a D.V.S., was born in Ashburnham in 1873, where he spent the years of his childhood. His many friends in Peterborough and Ashburnham will join with The Times in extending hearty congratulations

PREVENTION OF TUBERCOLOSIS

The Emperor of Germany Goes Sailing—The Latest Events from Uncle Sam's Domain

Berlin, April 17—At the invitation of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, Emperor William and the German Crown Prince embarked at Bremerhaven to-day on the steamer Kronprinz Wilhelm for a pleasure cruise of several days in the North Sea

TO PREVENT TUBERCULOSIS

Ottawa, Ont., April 17 —The Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, which was organized at a meeting held two years ago, is holding its annual convention in this city. Many eminent medical men are in attendance and during the two days' session the important question of the cure and prevention of consumption will be discussed in all its phases.

GEORGIA TRAVELERS IN SESSION

Atlanta, Ga., April 17—The largest convention in the eight years' history of the Georgia Division of the Travelers' Protective Association opened in Atlanta to-day and will continue in session until Sunday. The ball was started rolling at two o'clock this afternoon, when the delegates assembled in the ball room of the Kimball and were called to order by President R. L. Wylly of Savannah. The visitors were cordially greeted in addresses of welcome delivered on behalf of the city of Atlanta, the Commercial Club and the local post. These formalities occupied the most of the opening session.

Reports prepared by the officers for presentation to the convention show the organization in this state to be in a flourishing condition, both as regards membership and finances. Strong posts exist in Atlanta, Savannah, Augusta, Rome, Waycross and one or two other cities of the state and the present enthusiastic convention is expected to result in the organization of several more in the near future.

BASEBALL.

New York, April 17 — The race for the National League pennant begins to-day, and from now until the autumn winds begin to whistle about the bleachers the fans will have plenty to keep them guessing. While the conditions surrounding the opening of the season for the old and honored organization might be of a rosier hue, still, all things considered, there has been a lifting of the cloud during the last few weeks and the magnates affect to see a bright horizon. At the polo grounds the Giants lined up this afternoon against the Philadelphies. To-morrow a return game between the two clubs will be played in the Quaker City and the following day the third of the series takes place here. Brooklyn opens the season at home to-day in a game with the Bostons. Pittsburg plays at St. Louis and Chicago at Cincinnati.

CROWDS AT CHARLESTON.

Charleston, S.C., April 17 — From present indications this will prove the banner week in the attendance at the Charleston Exposition. Not since the opening of the big fair have such large crowds passed through the turnstiles as were witnessed during the past few days. The large attendance is due to the many special days celebrated this week. Virginians have been here in force for Virginia Day, and Pennsylvania has likewise celebrated. In addition there have been large delegations from Savannah, Wilmington, Augusta, Chattanooga and other leading cities of the South.

New York, April 17 — Among the passengers booked for Cuba on the Ward liner sailing to-day is General T. Estrada Palma, President-elect of the new Republic of Cuba. General Palma will take up the reins of government on the island May 20. Senora Palma and the children do not accompany the General to Cuba, but intend to join him at Havana early next month.

FAST DAY IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

Concord, N.H., April 17 — In accordance with the recent proclamation of Governor Jordan, to-day was observed as a fast day throughout New Hampshire. Special services were held in many of the churches.

OVER A THOUSAND BENEFITED

Millbury, Mass., April 17 — More than one thousand hands are benefited by the wage advance at the Manchaug cotton mills in Sutton which went into effect to-day. The advance amounts to 10 per cent., and was made without demand from the employees.

Portland, Ore., April 17 — Reports received by the local branch of the Department of Agriculture from the different agricultural districts in Oregon continue to indicate that the condition of wheat in this section is not as promising as expected. The recent continued cold and wet handicapped farm work and while the wheat is generally healthy and well rooted there seems to be little upward growth. This applies mostly to the lowlands and poorly drained sections, the crop in the highlands of the Willamette Valley and in the southern portion of the state being reported as generally in splendid condition.

CANADA AND THE STATES

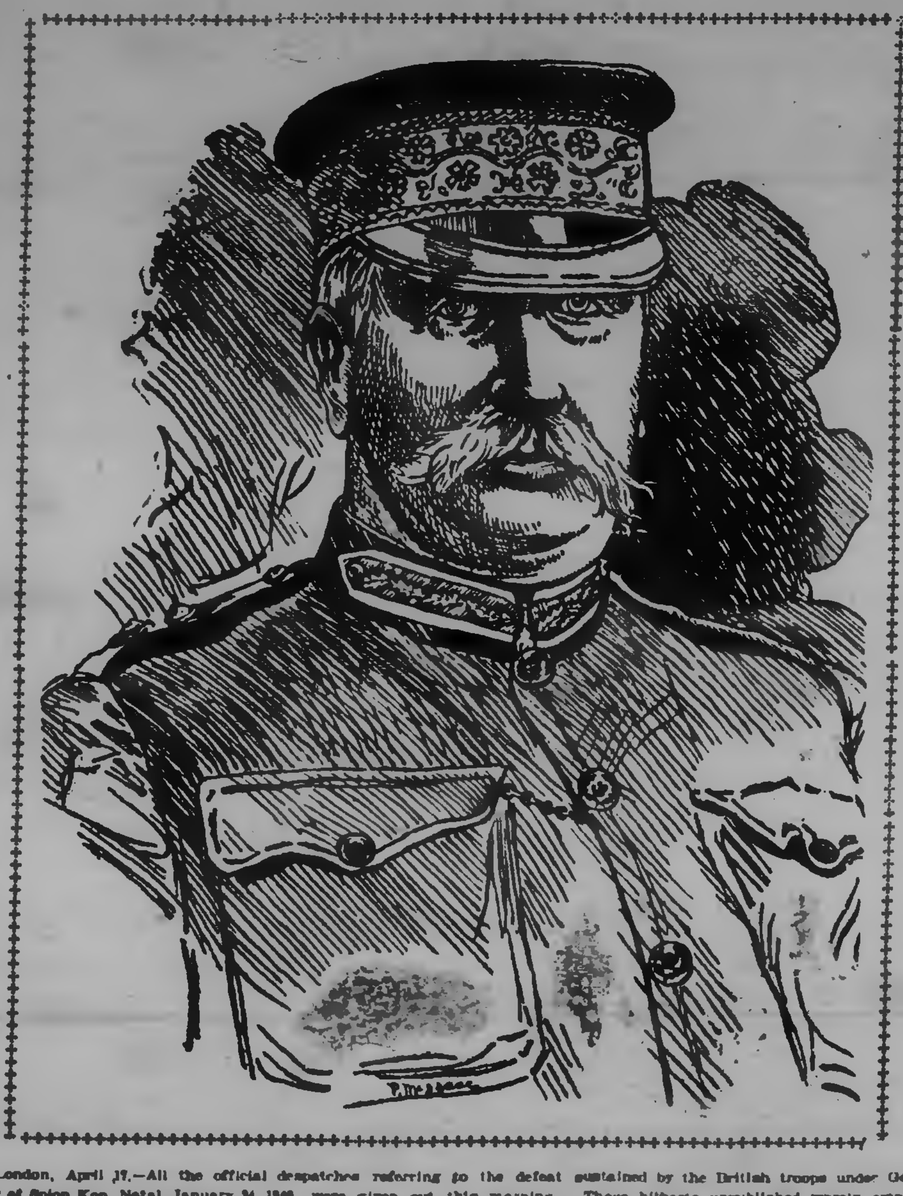
Special Telegram to The Times.

Washington, April 18 — In a report on "commercial relations," just given out at Washington, it is said that "it is not realized as widely as it should be that Canada is the best customer we have, excepting only Great Britain and Germany. Consul General Bittinger, at Montreal, in a report on the subject says:—The United States does more business with Canada than with the whole of South America; as much as with Central America, Mexico and the West Indies together; and nearly as much as with Africa, Asia and Oceanica."

Canada's total importation for consumption in the last fiscal year amounted to $181,[illegible],000. Imports from the United States reached the figure of $110,485,000, an increase of some $[illegible],000 over the preceding year. Figures are given to show that the preferential tariff has failed to affect seriously trade movements.

GENERAL BULLER CONVICTS HIMSELF FOR THE SPION KOP DISASTER



London, April 17.—All the official despatches referring to the defeat sustained by the British troops under Gen. Buller at Spion Kop, Natal, January 24, 1900, were given out this morning. Those hitherto unpublished merely emphasize how hopelessly muddled were the preparations for that engagement. The controversy between Gen. Buller and Gen. Sir Charles Warren is proved to have been even more bitter than previously hinted at, while a new extract from one of Lord Roberts' despatches brings additional censure on Gen. Buller. Lord Roberts declares that Gen. Buller's endeavor to put the responsibility for the defeat on Gen. Warren was not justifiable. Roberts holds that it was Buller's duty to intervene when he saw things were going wrong. This remark was caused by a despatch from Buller, in which he says:

"I saw no attempt on the part of Warren to either grapple with the situation or command his forces himself. We lost our chance by Warren's slowness. He seems to me to be a man who can do well what he can do himself, but who cannot command. I can never employ him again on an independent command. I ought to have assumed command myself when I saw things were not going well. I blame myself now for not doing so."

Buller explains that he failed to supersede Warren because it might have discredited the latter with the troops which was an especially serious matter, as, if Buller had been shot, Warren would have acceded to the supreme command.

The question of the responsibility for the actual retreat from Spion Kop is shrouded in a maze of despatches, proving that a mistake was made in sending out a heliograph message, and that there was a general desire to shirk the onus.

BOER EXILES REGARDING PEACE TERMS.

Boers Against Sacrifices Which Equal Suicide Says Times Correspondent at St. Petersburg.

London, April 18.—The Paris correspondent of The Times quotes the views expressed by Boer exiles in Holland and Belgium. He says the Boers in Europe believe that extreme demands on either side have been abandoned. The Boers know that sacrifices must be made, but cannot consent to sacrifices amounting to a kind of suicide. The Boers must be able to live freely and proudly, not as the slaves of anybody and not bearing humiliations.

TO CONCEAL TRUTH FROM CZAR.

London, April 18.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times quotes a foreign statesman's views in regard to the revolutionary movement. "The internal situation of Russia is much worse than anyone supposes," he says. "It is so bad that it has practically crippled Russia's power for international mischief. At present the most important of the Russian officials' duty is to conceal the truth from the Czar."

London, April 18.—Although there is no indication that Colonel Arthur Lynch (who formerly fought on the Boer side in the South African war, and who was elected to represent Galway city in Parliament in November last) has any intention of placing himself within the reach of the British courts, the Government is bringing witnesses from South Africa to testify in support of the charges of treason brought against Col. Lynch.

Lewis Handley, an American by birth, but a naturalized British subject, and a farmer of the vicinity of Glencoe, Natal, landed in England this morning. He says Col. Lynch was the leader of a Boer force, principally composed of Irishmen, which raided his farm in 1900, confiscated his stock and other movables, and destroyed his crops. Lynch informed Handley that he was a British subject.

Items of Interest

Ottawa, April 18.—The transport Cymric, which is now in Boston, will be in Halifax ready to embark the first regiment of the Mounted Rifles the first week in May. The vessel is 585 feet long, 64 feet beam and 38 feet depth of hold. She was built by Harland & Wolff of Belfast in 1898, and has a gross tonnage of 12,600.

KILLED HIMSELF AND DAUGHTER.

New York, April 18.— The bodies of Charles Flackenstein, a prosperous business man of Brooklyn, and his daughter, nine years old, were found in their home to-day. Death was caused by illuminating gas. It is believed that Flackenstein turned on the gas to kill himself and his daughter. He had grieved much over the death of his wife some months ago, and he told his sister recently that he was tired waiting for death. He said frequently that he could not bear to see his daughter motherless.

Groton, Mass., April 18.—"The hatless brigade" of Groton schoolboys, which came into prominence through the illness of Theodore Roosevelt, jr., has been disbanded because of restrictions placed upon it by the school authorities.

After the school sessions were resumed five weeks ago the following rule was adopted: "In the sixth form there are no restrictions about going without hats; in the fifth form the parents' consent is required; in the other four forms a physician's certificate of permission is requested."

There is a mild case of typhoid now in the infirmary, the patient being Henry Deland Chandler, of Boston, in the sixth form. Recurring to the pneumonia cases of January and February, it is now said that Theodore Roosevelt, jr., was the least ill of the three. It was the Potter boy, of New York, who was so very ill, and who only a few days ago recovered sufficiently to permit his leaving school for home and recuperation.

WOODSTOCK BOY SHOT TWICE.

Woodstock, April 18.—Wm. Bush, son of Louis Bush, foreman at the Canada Furniture Company's factory, has returned to Woodstock after having been away for 18 months. Mr. Bush enlisted with a cavalry company at Chicago a year ago last summer, and left for the Philippines. While with this company he encountered much hard work, but succeeded in keeping free of passing bullets. The company served its time and came home last June, but Mr. Bush wished to stay, and so enlisted with another company. It was only a short time, however, that he served with this company, for in August he was disabled. While passing through a bamboo forest, the road through which is quite narrow and very thickly hedged with bamboo trees on either side, behind which the guerillas were hidden, he was shot in two places. One bullet went clean through the calf of his leg and striking an iron plate, dropped in the stirrup, after which he stopped and picked it up. Another bullet entered the wrist of his right arm and passed through the thumb and out at the knuckle. Three mules and a teamster were killed at the same time, but the six Americans who were together then succeeded in killing four and captured seven. The Americans were on escort duty taking goods from one place to another.

Since that time he has been in three or four hospitals in the Philippines, and spent a short time at San Francisco. He left the Philippines in February, and after reaching San Francisco got his release. He cannot use his right hand at all, but his leg does not bother him.

Mr. Bush did not like the climate. He says it is almost impossible for a white man to live there. It rains four months, day and night, each year. He goes back to the States in a month.

Franco Aprillon Francisco D'Assisse, the former King of Spain, died here last night. He was proclaimed King of Spain October 10, 1846, on his marriage to his cousin, Queen Isabella II. of Spain. Queen Isabella and her husband were expelled from Spain as a result of the revolution of September 20, 1868. She formally abdicated the throne in Paris June 25, 1870, in favor of her son, the late King Alfonso XII., father of the present King of Spain, Alfonso XIII.

BOOTH AND CECIL RHODES

London, April 18.—In a recent number of The War Cry "General" Booth gives some interesting recollections of his meetings with Mr. Rhodes, who, he recalls, more than once contributed to the Salvation Army's funds in connection with the social work in South Africa.

"In the course of my wanderings," declares the "General," "I have been privileged to meet with many of the class of individuals who are said to be the moving spirits of the world, but very few outside the pale of Christian and philanthropic circles have impressed and interested me more than did Cecil Rhodes."

Describing his first interview with Mr. Rhodes in Capetown, "General" Booth remarks: "We plunged into a discussion of my proposal for the founding of 'An Over-the-Sea Colony.' I think I see him now, scanning the large map of South Africa on the walls of his office. 'Our objects, you see, differ,' he said. 'You are set on filling the world with the knowledge of the Gospel. My ruling purpose is the extension of the British Empire.'

"Then, laying his finger on a great piece of the map showing the country, part of which was then known as Mashonaland, but which is now called after his name, he went on to say, 'If this part of South Africa would suit you, I can give you whatever extent of land you may require.'

"We parted with mutual respect."

Four years later there was another meeting at the Cape, and Mr. Rhodes renewed his offer, and when he was next in England he paid a visit to the army's Hadleigh Farm Colony, in company with Lord Loch and the "General."

"Mr. Rhodes," says "General" Booth, "was interested in everything. Nothing struck me more than his inquiring spirit"

AMERICAN UITLANDERS IN THE NORTHWEST.

An American Paper Says Canada Must Join American Union

TWO MILLION AMERICAN SETLERS

Are Expected to Find Homes in Canada During the Next Ten Years.

Special to The Times.

Milwaukee, April 18 — The Tribune of this city says:

At a recent meeting of a Canadian club in an American city one of the speakers boasted of the rapidity with which the Canadian Northwest was acquiring immigrants from this side of the line, and predicted that within ten years there would be found settled within the Dominion at least two million people whose birthplace of former citizenship was in the United States.

Judging by what we have seen in the current news of emigration movements during the past few months neither the statement nor the prediction of the Canadian orator seems at all exaggerated. The Assiniboia country is certainly enticing a good deal of the best American blood across the border—but the interesting question arises, what are our Canadian friends going to do with these new citizens after they get them?

We have only to hark back a few years to the history of the settlement of South Africa, to be reminded of what infinite trouble Oom Paul had with the British and other "uitlanders" who came to exploit the mines. The Boers didn't invite them, but they came, attracted by the gold, and it was not long before they wanted to run the country, on account of their superior intelligence and enterprise.

No one anticipates any such bloody outcome of the settlement of the Canadian Northwest by the Yankees as has resulted from the clash of Boer and British interests in South Africa; but there is nevertheless a possibility that it will lead to important political changes. If the Yankees number two millions within ten years they will constitute, in round numbers, a quarter of the Canadian population, with a voting strength approximating half a million, concentrated in the fertile region ranging from the United States border to the 55th parallel. Two generations ago this territory was the subject of fierce controversy between the American and British Governments. The American war-cry anent the border issue, as history informs us, was, "Fifty-four forty or fight." We didn't fight and we didn't succeed in getting the American boundary pushed northward to within 20 of the 55th parallel. But who knows but that what we failed to get then, either by diplomacy or bluff will some day come to us by the peaceful vote of a majority of the inhabitants? It may be that the Dominion authorities, in offering premiums in the way of tariff rebates and easy terms for fertile lands, are encouraging a class of "uitlanders" who will revenge Oom Paul—in a peaceful way—for the loss of his South African Dominion?

It appears that Canadians are coming into the United States about as fast as Americans are going to Canada. This interchange of population is salutary. It means, some day, a political union of the English-speaking races on this continent.

A TIME OF DANGER!

Thousands in Peril From Blood Diseases and Nerve Troubles Developed During the Winter Months

Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT SPRING BLOOD PURIFIER, NERVE BRACER AND HEALTH BUILDER

Paine's Celery Compound is the wonder of the age. Its marvellous virtues are discussed amongst interested medical men, and its cures are talked of at every fireside.

As a spring health-giver, Paine's Celery Compound stands far ahead of all other known remedies. It has no worthy competitor in the vast field of medicine.

To a large extent, the present popularity of Paine's Celery Compound is due to the fact that it has accomplished some of its most astonishing cures in the spring season—a time when people feel dull, listless, despondent and ambitionless.

To-day, there are thousands of business men, mechanics, farmers and dear wives and mothers too who, though able to walk around, are nevertheless sadly "out of health."

At this season, Paine's Celery Compound is the great health restorer and strength giver for the "out of health" people—for those who are perilously nearing some organic disease. Paine's Celery Compound used at once will quickly remove every trace of poison from the blood, brace up the weak nerves, build up the tissues, and tone the digestive organism.

If you, dear reader, feel that your health is not as robust and vigorous as it should be, let us honestly suggest the use of Paine's Celery Compound that has so wonderfully blessed your neighbors and friends. Be assured, "it makes sick people well."

NOVEL WAGES CASE.

London, April 17.—A novel point under the labor laws was raised before the Yarmouth magistrates. Mr. Nathaniel Swann a fish merchant, sued one of his employes, who left without notice, to recover a week's wages as compensation. It was admitted that he had immediately engaged another man at less wages, and it was successfully argued that under such circumstances there was no loss, and no damages could be given. Mr. Swann informed the Bench he brought the case as a test one, and the Mayor said the magistrates were advised that as no loss had been proved a week's wages could not be granted for leaving without notice. They ordered defendant to pay nominal damages of 1s. and costs

THE BELGIAN TROUBLE 2000,000 MEN OUT

A Revolution Said to be Imminent In the Little Kingdom

CAUSE OF THE GREAT UNREST

Political Freedom for the People Demanded—Universal Suffrage Demanded.

Special to The Times.

Brussels, April 18 — It is a political, and not an industrial, agitation which has culminated in riots at Brussels and in other Belgian towns, and which has caused the Council-General of the Labor party in that kingdom to issue a manifesto ordering a general strike.

It is well known that, up to 1893, the franchise was more restricted in Belgium than in any other country professing to enjoy free institutions. The number of qualified electors did not much exceed 130,000. Repeated attempts to widen the suffrage by constitutional means had failed, but, in the year named, an outbreak which threatened revolution, and which, through a universal strike, paralyzed the national industries, coerced the Parliament into recognizing the principle of universal suffrage, complicated, however, with provisions for plural voting which were intended to assure preponderance to the property-owning classes. According to these provisions, which have been operative for the last eight year, every citizen over 25 can vote, but voters over 35, if married or widowers, with legitimate issue, and paying five francs a year in house tax, have a supplementary vote, as has also every one of the younger class possessed of a certain amount of property. The recognition of property as entitling the owner to a second vote was, of course, a concession to the Conservatives, but a concession was also made to the old fashioned Liberals of the Frere Orban type, who had always maintained that a given number of highly educated men should have more weight at the ballot box than the same number of educated persons. In deference to this demand, it was enacted that graduates from establishments representing the higher education, or men offering equivalent proof of intellectual equipment, should have two supplementary votes.

Experience has shown that the aggregate effect of the provisions for plural voting defeats the ostensible purpose of the law of 1893, which purported, as we have said, to establish universal suffrage. At the last Parliamentary election, the number of citizens over 35 qualified to cast at least one vote exceeded 1,453,000, which, of course, was a vast improvement over the 130,000 citizens who monopolized the franchise under the old system. The supplementary ballots cast, however, by those entitled to more than one vote numbered upward of 787,000, and sufficed to turn the scale against the Liberals, Radicals and Socialists in a great many constituencies. Hence the present agitation, which aims to give each adult citizen one vote.

The Belgians will be behind the times if they do not follow the example of the German Reichstag and the French Chamber of Deputies in adopting the principle of universal suffrage pure and simple as the basis for the election of the popular branch of their National Legislature.

RUSSIA AND CHINA MAKE AGREEMENT

Manchurian Treaty Signed by the Great Northern Power

RUSSIA AND FRANCE DEFEATED

The Two Powers Have Been Badly Beaten by British Diplomacy—The Hatred of Britain Therefore Increasing

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 18 — The long-pending treaty in relation to Manchuria has at last been signed by the representatives of Russia and China. The principal features of the treaty are the following: In the first place, Russia agrees to withdraw from Manchuria within six months after the signing of the treaty all her troops with the exception of the few needed to protect the railway which connects the Trans-Siberian front-line with the new port of [illegible] in the Liao Tung Peninsula. As regards the port of Newchwang in particular, Russia covenants to evacuate it as soon as the foreign troops now occupying Tientsin make over that place to the Chinese. We may note in passing that the delay in the surrender of Tientsin is due to the Germans, who insist that the Chinese have thus far failed to fulfil certain obligations touching the free navigation of the Pei Ho. In the third place, Russia promises to deliver to the Chinese the railway running from Newchwang to Shanhaikwan as soon as the British shall have placed the Chinese authorities in control of the railway from Shanhaikwan to Tientsin and Pekin. In the fourth place, while Russia retains the right to maintain order on the branch of the Siberian railway which traverses Manchuria, all of the exclusive industrial, mining and banking privileges in that region, which for a long time, she demanded, are now withheld from her. In a word, if the treaty had been shaped by representatives of the United States, Great Britain and Japan, it could scarcely have been improved from their point of view.

The fact just mentioned indicates the sources of the pressure to which answer was returned by the American Government to the urgent inquiries on the subject addressed to it by the Russian Ambassador at Washington is not yet definitely known. The tenor of it, however, may be inferred from the fact that Russia's representative in Pekin was last week instructed to sign the Manchurian convention in the form practically dictated to China by Great Britain and Japan.

It would seem that in this matter Russia and France have suffered a serious diplomatic defeat. That a bitter hatred of Great Britain now exists in both France and Russia there is no reason to doubt.

Valuable Advice to Mothers

If your child comes in from play coughing or showing evidences of an approaching attack of grippe, sore throat, or sickness of any kind, first thing get out your bottle of Nerviline. Rub the chest and neck with Nerviline, and give internal doses of ten drops of Nerviline in sweetened water every two hours. This will prevent any serious trouble. No liniment or pain reliever equals Polson's Nerviline, which is a necessity in every household. Large bottles cost only 25c.

* * * *

Lucretia Borgia is brought up to date in the unholy city of Butte. Mrs. Minnie Grady has been detected in a series of crimes, not for revenge, but for gain, which give her unique notoriety even in this day of strange and varied criminal conceptions. She is not only accused of having poisoned her husband and children, for the insurance on their lives, but she had a pleasant habit of inviting her wealthy female friends to drive with her, arrayed in their rare jewels and fine raiment, and then trying to drug and rob them. One of her victims recovered after being robbed of her diamonds and left for dead by the roadside, and the arrest of the fiend followed. Lombroso should take up his studies in Butte.

The Lament of the Adult.

In one of Dickens's novels—those novels which we are tearfully assured nowadays are not in the least funny—an ungrateful brickmaker rejects the little volume which has been brought him, because "it's a book fit for a babby, and I'm not a babby. If you was to leave me a doll, I shouldn't nuss it."

Something of this unchastened spirit stirs within our middle-aged hearts when we read a modern story, or see a modern play. It is probably the nicest kind of a story, and the nicest kind of a play, and if we were only fourteen instead of forty, or fifteen instead of fifty, we should thoroughly enjoy them both. Nothing is better calculated to make us regret our lost youth than fiction and the drama as they exist today. With what glorious emotions we should have dilated in childhood over Mr. Crockett's desperate brigands, or Miss Johnston's dauntless heroes. How we should have steeped ourselves—figuratively speaking—in gore, and revelled in romance. Sicilian outlaws, noble Indians, cruel half-breeds, courtly villains and heroines of wild, unearthly beauty—time was when these things made our pulses jump. But now seventeen murders excite us less than one, and duels are no longer the thrilling episodes they were in the happy past. It is hard to grow old, and it is made harder by the fact that nobody, save one's family doctor, has anything to offer to age. We should still like, even at forty or fifty, to be amused, but nobody caters to our amusement. When a veteran actor like Mr. Drew—who ought to sympathise with adults—entertains us with a drama that calls to mind the school plays of happy infancy, and the last act of which must certainly have been written by Miss Edgeworth, we feel that we are indeed friendless in the evening of our lives.

It is cold comfort to be told that the drama is intended for the debutante, and the novel for her younger brothers and sisters. It is even less agreeable to hear it hinted that if we do not like these pure and wholesome performances, it is because we want something evil. Does nothing, then, interest the adult save sin? Are bankers and brewers, anxious mothers and hard-working spinsters indifferent to all but vice? Must we either frolic like lambs—being lambs no longer—or devote ourselves seriously to the meretricious? Life has issues, not wholly unimportant, yet disconnected with love-making of any kind. Men—middle-aged men—desire many things besides their neighbors' wives. Women—middle-aged women—are sometimes strangely indifferent to their neighbors' husbands. We may be pure of heart, yet unable to take pleasure in "The Old Homestead", or "Ben Hur." We may be virtuous and intelligent adults. Will no one write novels and plays for us?—Agnes Repplier in "Life."

Imperial Weather.

Somebody is about to publish a vindication of the character of English weather. It appears that it has been most unfairly misrepresented. What we stupidly call its fickleness is really nothing in the world but a perfectly laudable effort to reproduce in our midst the imperial nature of our climate, remarks "Outlook." When it presents us with primroses in November, that is to remind us of the pleasant picnic weather they are having on the veldt; the same laudable intention accounts for June snowstorms. Nor do we have to wait for complete reversals of the seasons. A week of imperial weather—sometimes, like a cheap trip, it is all crammed into one day—runs somewhat as follows: Monday, fog (home produce); Tuesday, cricketing weather (Australia); Wednesday, skating (Canada); Thursday, waterspouts (various ocean territories); Friday, steaming (West Coast); Saturday, general imperial representation; Sunday—but the British Sunday [illegible]

Tragedies of the Arctic.

An extraordinary coincidence has been developed by a recent Arctic tragedy brought about by the expedition of the Duke of the Abruzzi.

When this navigator went on his journey to the North Pole he took with him among others Lieutenant Querini, a Venetian gentleman of an old and noble family. His work over, the Duke returned, but the lieutenant was not with him, for he had lost his life through an accident in the Arctic regions.

Now, at the very time when this accident occurred a professor in the technical school in Trieste, while rummaging in the archives of that city, discovered a manuscript bearing the date 1601, and containing an account of a journey made by one Pietro Querini, in 1431, to the Arctic regions. Querini is not a common name, and a little investigation showed that Pietro Querini was a direct ancestor of the other Pietro Querini who lost his life in the Arctic seas a few months ago.

"Querini," says the old manuscript, "sailed from Candia for Flanders on board a vessel loaded with merchandise and precious stones. When he arrived in Flanders he sold his cargo and started for the Arctic regions. A storm forced him to abandon his ship and to take refuge with his crew in two barks. The wind then carried them to the coast of Norway, but on January 5, 1432, Querini was again shipwrecked near the Lofoden Islands in seventy degrees north latitude, and almost all his companions were drowned."

For some time it was supposed that he, too, had been drowned, but in January, 1433, he appeared in Venice with ten companions, the only survivors of his original crew of seventy-eight men. It seems that he succeeded in gaining the shore after the others had been drowned, and then slowly made his way home through Denmark and Germany.

"Although these two Pietro Querinis," says a French writer, "are separated from each other by five centuries, we find the same destiny at work in the case of each." And he continues, with a dash of playfulness: "Is it not possible that the adventurer of the fifteenth century, desiring to enjoy once more the exciting days of his youth, actually became incarnated as a hero of the twentieth century?"

New York's Fussy Society.

"Allowing for a certain difference in the degree of barbarism," says Sydney Brooks in "Harper's Magazine," "Rome in its decline could alone furnish a parallel to New York's Four Hundred. The American aristocracy has no equal in Europe for ability to turn the simplest sort of diversion into a function, and every function into a ceremony. It is not of them I write, though their passion for incongruous artificialities and the glare in which they live have infected all strata. An exasperated Englishman once described the social atmosphere of Manhattan Island as 'rather fussy,' but that was only in comparison with the English way of doing things. The charm of London hospitality is that there is never the slightest strain put upon either host or guest. The American hostess, like the French hostess, feels that she must be continually 'entertaining' her guest; she considers it a reflection on her hospitality if the guest is left a moment alone; she looks upon it as her duty to be continually providing fresh amusements, and is constantly troubled by doubts as to whether the visitor is really 'enjoying' himself. That is one of the reasons why Americans, after the pampering they get at home, are apt to feel themselves neglected in London, and left out in the cold."

A Prophecy Fulfilled.

On no less authority than that of Mr. Justin McCarthy it is stated that, with the exception of the King of Sweden, a descendant of Bernadotte, whom Napoleon raised from the ranks and later made king, there is not a single important ruler in Europe who is not descended from Mary, Queen of Scots. In "Macbeth," which was evidently written with the idea of courting the favor of James I., the first Stuart ruler of England, Shakespeare puts into the mouth of the witches this prophecy to Banquo, from whom the Stuarts are by legend descended: "Your children shall be kings." Even the most obsequious of courtiers could not have anticipated how literally true this compliment to the Stuarts through King James was to prove. It is certainly a curious historical fact that the dynasty of the Stuarts, "in many ways the worst dynasty," as Mr. McCarthy says, "that ever ruled over England, "should have left so many descendants among the reigning houses of Europe.

Meantime there is for the student of medical anthropology the spectacle of a series of inbreeding intermarriages that demonstrates the dangers and effects of marital consanguinity. Perhaps the lesson of the necessity for exercising more care as regards the relationship and other qualities of marital partners may thus be taught by example, if it cannot be enforced by the legal measures that are now so commonly suggested. In a word, the history of the present reigning families of Europe is an open book in which he who runs may read the evils of marriage where new blood is not constantly introduced to modify the degenerative tendencies of the original stock. The lesson may be learned better from a "horrible example" than from the cold logic of statistics on the subject.

Faith and Works.

A piece of bright class-room repartee comes from a Western college. The professor had been annoyed by the tardy entrance of a student into the lecture-room, and pointedly stopped talking until the man took his seat.

After class the student went to the desk and apologised.

"My watch was fifteen minutes out of the way, sir. It's bothered me a good deal lately, but after this I shall put no more faith in it."

"It's not faith you want in it," replied the professor; "it's works."

Prince Henry frequently surprised his American companions on his recent tour by his knowledge of the idioms and slang of our language. The climax was reached on Monday on the train returning from Philadelphia, where his Royal Highness had inspected the magnificent Russian battle ship Retvizan. The Prince suddenly leaned over to Admiral "Bob" Evans, and, with a merry twinkle in his eye, said:—

"Admiral, this certainly is a most wonderful country—where even the physical ailments of the people win a European's admiration."

Evans, with a puzzled look, replied, "I beg your pardon, but I don't quite catch your meaning."

"Why," the Prince replied, with a broad smile, "we Europeans would be only too glad to have American Cramps!"—New York Times.

Abigail Again.

I see by the papers, says a writer in "Pick-Me-Up," that some worthy people in high places are getting a little tired of the servant girl question, and now there is a proposal to bring boys up to the job. What will become of the balance of the girls willing but not henceforward able to take to service, is not stated. Perhaps the English language is too abrupt and practical to permit of any reliable statement of the kind. But, of course, it's the old trouble. When mistress and maid fall out the fault is always the maid's. We never hear of any society for proving mistresses in the wrong. And poor old Abigail is down again!

I think before people lay the blame too heavily on Abigail they should search their own hearts and see if there is no fault in themselves. Just because the family thinks it would like to have breakfast at eight o'clock in the morning, Abigail's night's rest is practically broken from seven a.m. onwards. First there is the alarm clock, which rattles like the Day of Judgment; and just as she has turned over and gone to sleep again, the electric bell over her head starts its infernal clatter, interrupting her in a most lovely dream just where she and the milkman's young man had arranged to get married as soon as he could get trusted for a suite of kitchen furniture and a regulation four-poster. And as a final blow she has to sit up in bed and hear the master downstairs offering to run up and drag her out of bed, while the missis is declining the offer with some energy. No thanks.

How much nicer it would be to treat Abigail like one of the family. Now and again it would show a very good feeling if the head of the family went off to the city without his breakfast rather than disturb Abigail in her second go of beauty sleep. When employers meet together and talk of Abigail's sins, it never seems to occur to them that they might win her over by a timely display of generosity. Nobody seems to think anything of it if missis comes down to breakfast in a dressing-gown. She chooses to do it, and that is enough. But if Abigail waits at the breakfast-table in a red flannel petticoat, fastened over her shoulders with a safety-pin, the harsh remarks that are heaped upon a poor orphan girl are positively brutal.

What Abigail objects to so much is the perpetual fault-finding. Suppose she does drop a plate on the ground and break it? A plate must be broken sooner or later in the ordinary course of nature, and, as Horatius said when he called for volunteers to defend the narrow pass, we may as well pick it off as wait for it to drop on us.

In many households it is quite a usual thing to keep a common, irresponsible cat of indifferent moral character, and to let it have the free run of the place. If the cat does anything wrong, the missis at once blames—Abigail. Is it any wonder that the servant girl has turned at last after centuries of injustice? If the cat should get the key of the beer cask and go down and draw off a modest quencher, it's as likely as not that Abigail is charged with having taken the beer for her favorite policeman, when it is well known that he is a teetotaller and only eats cloves to improve his complexion. As every naturalist is well aware, it is quite a common thing for a cat to run round to the pawnbroker's with a couple of the best tablecloths till the end of the month; but as sure as anything Abigail will be charged with the offence, just because the ticket happened to fall out of her petticoat pocket. Most unreasonable.

The way to solve the problem is not for the mistresses to entrench themselves on one side and the maids on the other, and speak in harsh and inconsiderate language of the opposition. As Lord Rosebery says, the way to make peace is for two travelers to arrive at an inn and have a drink or something of that sort, and drop hints of mutual concessions in between the sips. The mistresses should meet the maids casually and get some idea of the basic principles of domestic service as governed by the natural aspirations of both sides. As I make it out, the point of view of the mistresses will be that they want a girl who will always get up at six in the morning, who will always look neat and tidy, and who will be talked at in a loud, rasping voice from the attic to the cellar without once answering back in the dreamy, picturesque language of Bermondsey. A girl who can do the work of three men, and who has a small appetite, will be preferred.

From the maids' point of view, I understand it is considered essential that a bicycle should be kept on the premises exclusively for kitchen use, and that the offensive habit of locking up the piano and hiding the key will be discontinued. It will also be necessary that the objectionable practice of counting the bottles of sherry in the cellar, and the mince pies in the larder, should at once cease, as this sort of thing is calculated to imply distrust and want of confidence. The question as to the privilege of wearing the missis's sealskin jacket or her new hat is not definitely settled; but it is understood that a concession of this sort would go far to remove the bad blood that has been stirred up in this unfortunate controversy.

Sweetness Long Drawn Out.

A business man of whom the "Youth's Companion" tells declares that the average stenographer will not learn to spell correctly until the millennium comes. In support of his opinion he relates his experience with a young woman whose spelling, as he describes it, had an "engaging originality," but who was so amiable and even-tempered that he seldom found heart to rebuke her.

One day she appeared before him with a neatly written letter for a Southern correspondent. He hastily looked it over.

"See here," he said, "you've spelled sugar s-u-g-g-a-r."

The young woman looked at it a moment critically, and then her face brightened as she replied:

"So I have. How careless of me! I don't see how I came to leave out the 'h.'"

Supply Limited.

"This is tough luck," said Ham, mournfully, as he leaned out over the side of the ark. "What's wrong now?" queried Shem. "Why, all this water to fish in," replied Ham, "and only two fishin' worms on board."—Ohio "State Journal."

He Was Better Off Without It.

Hewitt—Gruet is a very polite fellow. I asked him if he would have a cigar and he said he would. I found I didn't have one, but he thanked me just the same. Jewett—He ought to have thanked you more.—"Judge."

"What are you going to paint on this dazzling white canvas, may I ask?"

"That is a finished painting, miss. It is entitled, 'The Snow Storm.'"

"Why, so it is! How stupid of me! Isn't it beautiful!"—Chicago Tribune.

Baby's Birth.

How many a woman dates a life of chronic invalidism from baby's birth. She tries "different doctors and different medicines" with little benefit. Then, fortunately her attention is called to the remarkable cures resulting from the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and she gives the medicine a trial. Her experience is that of ninety-eight women out of every hundred who use "Favorite Prescription" for womanly ills—she is cured.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is peculiarly a mother's medicine. Its use before maternity makes the baby's advent practically painless. It gives the mother strength to nurse her child. It cures diseases peculiar to women and cures them permanently.

There is no alcohol, opium, cocaine or any other narcotic in "Favorite Prescription." It is purely a vegetable preparation and cannot disagree with the weakest constitution.

Mrs. Emerson Allen, of Dorset, Ontario Co., Ont., writes: "I can truly say that I think Dr. Pierce's medicines the best I have ever used. I was in very poor health for a long time, dating from the birth of my little girl. I tried different doctors and different medicines. I derived very much more benefit from your medicines than from any other I have ever used. I took four bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and three bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I always keep the 'Pellets' in the house."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, paper bound, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

"I believe it to be the most effective remedy for the Stomach and Nerves in the market," is what Annie Patterson, of Sackville, N.B., says of South American Nervine, for, she says, La Grippe and the complications which followed it left her next to dead with Indigestion, Dyspepsia and General Nervous Shattering. It cured her.—100

A Tribute to Father Pat.

Writing from Rossland, B. C., in reference to a recent paragraph in "Saturday Night" on the career of the late "Father Pat," the Rev. Charles W. Hedley says that the main point of his remarkable ministry was not eccentricity, but a quite unique self-sacrifice in the service of any who needed him. "Unconventional he certainly was to a degree which might indeed, as you suggest, shock some strait-laced people in Toronto, but in an age of worldliness and self-seeking he sought neither the world nor self, but gave freely and utterly his time, comfort, strength, means, even at times the clothes off his back, to those in need. The best proof of the man is to be found in the warm regard with which his memory is treasured over the wide area in which he labored as a pioneer missionary. He did adapt himself as few could have done to the tone of the men among whom chiefly his work lay; but while seemingly indifferent to conventional details, he stood for the main elements of religion—faith in God the Father, the redemption, and the practical brotherhood of man—and he lived out his creed. The vices which Christ most sweepingly condemned were as far as possible removed from his character, while on the other hand the pre-eminently Christian virtues were his to a remarkable degree. It is due to no mere eccentricity on his part that a memorial church is to be erected in Rossland, and that immediately on receipt of the news of his death a spontaneous movement was made to erect a public memorial, a movement which has been widely supported by hundreds of contributors of all classes and creeds."

Conscientious.

Farmer Prymm (in city theater)—Better take off yer hat, Sary; all the other wimin folks has theirs off. His wife—Let them, the brazen things! Nobody'll ever have a chance to say that I'd do anything in a show-place that I wouldn't do in church.—Brooklyn "Life."

Proof Positive.

A convict at a French penal settlement, who was undergoing a life sentence, desired to marry a female convict, such marriages being of common occurrence. The governor of the colony offered no objection, but the priest proceeded to cross-examine the prisoner.

"Did you not marry in France?" he asked.

"Yes."

"And your wife is dead?"

"She is."

"Have you any document to show that she is dead?"

"No."

"Then I must decline to marry you. You must produce some proof that your wife is dead."

There was a pause, and the bride prospective looked at the would-be groom.

Finally he said: "I can prove that my former wife is dead."

"How will you do so?"

"I was sent here for killing her."

The bride accepted him notwithstanding.—"Scotsman."

Man as an Incarnation.

PEOPLE of a materialistic frame of mind, to whom man is but a machine, says an editorial writer in the "Hospital," are apt to put on one side all that cannot be weighed and measured as not only inexplicable or unthinkable, but as quite beyond the range of reasonable discussion. Such people are advised to attend a meeting of the Society for Psychical Research for "a change of scene." What they will see is thus described:

"There they will find people, quite as convinced as they are of their own sanity, and quite as content as they can possibly be with the correctness of their own interpretation of things, asserting the most astounding propositions, without turning a hair. To those who are so self-centered as to think that there is something cranky about all who do not see as they do, it is a wholesome awakening to find good, solid, comfortable, and respectable people believing in telepathy as a thing indisputable, and holding that man, as we see him engaged in his various more or less ignoble pursuits, in the city and elsewhere, is but the incarnation of one little bit of himself as he exists in an intangible and ethereal form. At the last meeting of the Psychical Research Society, Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., said that he did not hold that the whole of any one of us was incarnated in their terrestrial bodies; certainly not in childhood; more, but perhaps not so very much more, in adult life. What was manifest was only a definite portion of a much larger whole. What the rest was doing during the years spent here he did not know. Perhaps it was asleep; but probably, he said, it was not entirely asleep with men of genius, nor perhaps was it all completely inactive with people called mediums. Now to the modern materialist all this is absolute 'rot.' Yet Dr. Lodge is not exactly a man to pooh-pooh. Indeed, may not the immaterialists retort that this is a Christian country and that our very religion teaches us not to weigh and measure too exactly? Again, Roentgen, Tesla, and Marconi have of late been giving many shocks to old ideas. At any rate, this is clear, that we must not too rigidly put outside the bounds of sanity belief in the unthinkable. It is a queer world, and which half of it is sane appears still undecided."

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 18 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 1 1-2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 1 1-8 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After jogging along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented shoals for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing, off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 82. There were 198 new cases in September, 309 in October, 473 in November, 904 in December and 1,285 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. At present the plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

Musical M.D.'s of the Future.

A PATIENT having been cured of smallpox by the witching strains of a violin, a contemporary thinks it not at all unlikely that it may ere long be discovered that music has a therapeutic value heretofore undreamed of. Music may in time become a most important branch of medical science, and the doctor of the future may, after diagnosing his case, take a violin or a cornet from his bag, as the case may demand, and render the wedding march from "Lohengrin," or Schubert's "Serenade," according to the progress the malady has made. Different tunes rendered on different instruments, in various tempos, may become necessary at critical moments, and this will naturally develop a new science—that of writing musical prescriptions. Musical boxes and orchestrions may yet be used in hospital-wards, and the shops in which sheet music and musical instruments are now dispensed are likely to be the drug stores of the future. Patent music is a possible successor of patent medicine, and we may yet take a five-minute dose of "Lanigan's Ball" adagio, or a seven-minute-and-a-half dose of Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words" andante, for our neuritis or necrosis. Medical music and medical science will be one, and the scalpel will be supplanted by the mandolin, and the clinical thermometer by the piccolo.

Little Mothers in Japan.

Although the Empire of Japan is said to be a "paradise of children," where they are allowed to do very much as they please, and where they seldom, if ever, cry, their life is not all play. The little boys and girls have their work to do, but in many skilful ways they turn work into play. Take, for instance, the little girls who have baby sisters or brothers to care for. They tuck the youngsters into their queer garments and go on with their games of ball. If the baby grows tired and begins to fret the "little mother" jounces it up and down over her shoulder with a peculiar humping motion of her back, without stopping the game. All the time she sings some pretty song.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
The World Lost for Love's Sake

one valid reason for being in such a hurry; surely two or three days will not matter; I have drawn on the New York bank; you shall have the money by Tuesday at latest."

"That will not do Aleck," she whispered, her voice quivering with fright, "I must have it today."

"If you could advance one valid reason for such haste I would not have one word to say. I could get it, of course, but a man of my standing does not like to borrow money when it is not an absolute necessity."

"Then you refuse me, Aleck?" she said.

"You shall have it Tuesday, my darling," he answered —"even our journey must necessarily be delayed on account of the money not reaching here yet."

Then she thought of her diamonds —surely she could raise money on them —but Aleck would miss them —then a startling idea came to her —she could substitute the diamonds for brilliant paste for a day or two, and raise the money in that way.

It was a matter easily accomplished—the diamond- broker's eyes sparkled as the beautiful gems were spread out before him.

"Certainly, he could accommodate madame," he said, "such a request was often made of him —ladies in high life were often in need of money, and turned their diamonds to good advantage for a few days."

He noticed the terrible agitation on the beautiful young face, and smiled, muttering to himself: "No doubt this is some lady's companion —who has made free with her mistress' jewels, and before it is discovered that she has substituted paste for the real stones, she will be far away. Ah, well, that is none of my business, the stones are worth ten times the thousand dollars I gave her — of course she will never take them up again, I would not give them up to her."

The interview which she must necessarily have with her might as well be gotten over at once — she would never know another hour's safety until she held the charred letter in her hands which the maid held as a sword over her head.

"Have you been on the street, my darling?" he asked, noting the wraps and hat which she had not had time to lay away at once.

"Yes," she answered, trying to speak without a tremor in her voice.

"I would have gladly accompanied you had I known you were going out," he said. "I hope, darling, you are not angry with me for what I have said."

Before she could answer, there was a light tap at the door. It was by the merest chance that Daisy, who was standing near the door, opened it.

A small lad was standing there.

"A note for Mrs. Hamilton— if you be she," whispered the boy. "I was requested to put it into her own hands without any one seeing me—the gentleman who gave it to me waits for an answer."

CHAPTER XVII.
On the Track.

A deathly faintness stole over Daisy; by an almost superhuman effort she kept from fainting outright.

"Come back in an hour and you shall have the answer," she whispered, in a low voice, but, low as it was, Aleck had caught part of the sentence from within, and, chancing to glance into the mirror which reflected the door opposite and the corridor beyond, he had distinctly seen Daisy take the letter from the boy's hand, and thrust it into her bosom.

The action puzzled him.

"Why should she do that?" he asked himself.

Of course she would tell him about it when she came back into the room; but, much to his intense surprise, she did not mention it, and he noticed that her face was white as death.

What could it mean?

He was too proud to ask, believing that Daisy should tell him.

It was the first secret that had ever come between them, and he felt it keenly.

He noticed, with pain, that Daisy soon made an excuse to break away from him, and of course he knew that it was for an opportunity to read the letter.

He arose, taking up his hat and gloves at once.

"I am going down to the piazza to smoke a cigar; remember we are to hear Patti to-night; but first we are going out driving; be ready when I return, my dear."

It struck him how cold the lips were that met his in a parting kiss.

"Daisy is growing to be more of a puzzle to me as each day advances," he thought; "now who could that note have been from, and why did she not show it to me?"

Suddenly a solution of the mystery came to him.

No doubt it was a bill from some creditor which she did not wish him to see.

Daisy was young and thoughtless. She might have run in debt for something which pleased her fancy.

He remembered how earnestly she had pleaded for that thousand dollars, saying that she must have it at once; his Daisy must never know one care; it was bad enough for his own head to be worried over money matters.

Left to herself, Daisy hurriedly opened the note, recognizing at once the cramped, peculiar chirography of her maid.

"Mrs. Hamilton."— it ran— "Being called suddenly away, I have been obliged to place the matter in the hands of my brother, telling him all. You need not fear that he will divulge it, madame; he will be as silent as the grave. He will be at the corner of O and H avenues at three o'clock, prompt, this afternoon; do not fail to come; to him you will pay the thousand dollars, and he will give you in return the charred bit of paper. Yours in great haste, Janet."

Another knew her terrible secret. Great heaven! where would it end?

"It will drive me mad!" she groaned— "yes, mad! Ah, how deeply I have sinned to keep Aleck's love!"

A New View of Braddock.

There have doubtless always been those who realized that history had dealt too harshly with the unfortunate Braddock, but it is difficult to change a settled conviction with regard to one who has become either a popular or an unpopular figure of the past. It is interesting, therefore, to find in the latest volume in which the Braddock campaign figures, Mr. A. G. Bradley's "The Fight With France for North America," that the author departs slightly from the beaten track, and presents the British commander in a somewhat more favorable light than we have been taught to regard him. "No name," he says, "has been more irresponsibly played upon, and few reputations, perhaps, have been more hardly used, than Braddock's, by most writers of history and nearly all writers of fiction. His personality, from its very contrast to the wild woods in which he died, has caught the fancy of innumerable pens, and justice has been sadly sacrificed to picturesque effect. One is almost inclined to think that the mere fact of his name beginning with a letter which encourages a multiplication of strenuous epithets has been against him. By all American writers he is depicted as the typical redcoat of the Hanoverian period —burly, brutal, blundering, blasphemous, but happily always and without a dissentient note—brave, brave indeed, as a lion. This familiar picture of our poor General, as a corpulent, red-faced, blaspheming bulldog, riding roughshod over colonial susceptibilities, tones down amazingly when one comes to hard facts." Mr. Bradley goes on to show that what is really known about Braddock is in his favor. Vanquished in a duel, he had been too proud to ask his life.

When in command at Gibraltar he was "adored by his men," and this, though he was notorious as a strict disciplinarian, a quality which Wolfe at that very time was declaring to be the most badly needed one in the British army. The simple truth about Braddock is that he was the first British General to conduct a considerable campaign in a remote wilderness. He had no precedents furnished by the experience of others to guide him, and he found little help in the colonies, where he had been taught to look for much. He has been accused of disparaging the colonial irregulars and of neglecting to utilize friendly Indians. As to the first taunt, Mr. Bradley submits that, in view of the appearance and discipline of the provincial troops that were paraded before Braddock, he would not as a soldier trained on European fields have been human had he refrained entirely from open criticism. As to the second taunt, the facts brought forward in this book demonstrate that it has no foundation. Robert Orme of the Thirty-fifth Regiment, who was one of the General's aide-de-camps and who himself was highly thought of by the provincials, gives no hint in his diary that Braddock was the violent, unreasonable, foul-mouthed person who has since figured in magazine articles. Orme was as much disheartened as his chief by the appearance and seeming temper of the colonial troops and dwells on the trying conditions which Braddock had to meet, and the energy and honesty with which he endeavored to do his duty. It is certain that Braddock quickly appreciated Washington, and to save the Virginia Colonel from the indignity of ranking under a British ensign placed him on his personal staff. Braddock appreciated Benjamin Franklin also, and in a despatch to his Government described him as the "first capable and sensible man I have met in the country." Mr. Bradley contends that in no proper sense of the word can Braddock be said to have been surprised at Fort Duquesne. Throughout the march thither, on the contrary, admirable discipline was maintained, and every precaution that prudence required was observed. When the attack upon him was ultimately made it succeeded simply because Braddock's soldiers were not backwoodsmen.

It is with some indignation, says The New York Sun in an admirable review of the work, that the author of this book points out that "even the dying moments of the gallant bulldog have been made the theme of much fanciful dialogue, and garnished with fictitious utterances of grief at the disaster and remorse for his supposed obstinacy and rashness. That he twice tried to arrest the stampede and then took measures for the comfort of the wounded is all that we know for certain of his last hours." It is not, of course, here pretended that Braddock was a great General. The plain truth is that he was sent to carry out an undertaking arduous and unprecedented in British experience, and did his best in the face of immense difficulties, human and physical. Both he and his soldiers had, perhaps, grown a little too confident after crossing the second ford of the Monongahela. Till then, however, he had been entirely successful in avoiding ambuscades, and even the scene of the final engagement was no ambush in the ordinary sense of the term. Had his scouts been pushed farther forward, he would have been notified, no doubt, a little earlier of the impending attack; but under no circumstances would his regulars have been qualified to face even a lesser number of Indians in their native woods. Of provincial combatants on the field of battle, there were not 200 on the British side, and many of these had had no backwoods experience whatever.

The London Daily Chronicle pays the following pleasant compliment to the new Minister of Justice for Canada:— "The Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, who has become Canadian Minister of Justice, in succession to Mr. David Mills, is young enough to have a future ahead of him both as a lawyer and a statesman. A modest man, and with nothing of the 'loose tongue' which Disraeli attributed in an angry moment to lawyers, he has not, perhaps, made apparent to distant observers the large part he has played in the successful Laurier Administration. Mr. Fitzpatrick, as Solicitor-General, has made his mark, and in the more difficult paths of diplomacy he showed his mastery when the Manitoba school question disturbed the relations between a State Government and the Federal Ministry, with ramifications in the Privy Council and at the Vatican. Mr. Fitzpatrick dealt with the vexed question at Ottawa, in London and in Rome. He was a welcome visitor to our own capital so lately as in last December."

"DOWN the Line With John Henry" is the title of an amusing little booklet of sketches in up-to-date slang by the pseudonymous writer, Hugh McHugh, who is disputing with George Ade the right to the particular niche left vacant by the death of the entertaining "Billy Baxter." John Henry is a sporty man-about-town, the very antithesis of Richard Harding Davis's refined Van Bibber. From his account of his experiences at the races with his best girl, we quote a few characteristic extracts:

When we got to the track they were bunching the bones for the first race, so I told Clara Jane I thought I'd crawl down to the ring and plaster two or three thousand around among the needy.

Two or three thousand, and me with nothing but a five-spot in my jeans, and the return ticket money in that!

"Sure!" I said; "I've got a pipe!"

"Well, I hope you won't smoke it near me. I hate pipes!" she said.

"All right; I'll take my pipe down to the betting ring and smoke it there!" I said, and we parted good friends.

Every Breezy Boy I met had a different hunch, and they called me into the wharf and unloaded.

I figured it out that if I had bet five dollars on each good thing they gave me I would have lost four hundred thousand dollars.

Then I ducked under, sopped up a stein of root beer, and climbed up again to the hurricane deck.

"Did you bet?" enquired Clara Jane.

"Only seven hundred and thirty dollars," I said: "a mere bag o' shells."

I leave a call for 7.30 every morning, and I suppose that's the reason I was so swift with the figures.

"My! what a lot of money!" said the Fair One; "do point out the horse you bet on! I shall be awfully interested in this race!"

(John Henry picked out a horse at random, declaring that the only way it could lose "was for some sore-head to get out and turn the track around.")

Sure enough, the favorite galloped into port and dropped anchor six hours ahead of the other clams.

I win over two thousand two hundred dollars—conversation money—and Bonnie Brighteyes was in a frenzy of delight. . . .

I had a nervous chill for fear she'd declare herself in on the rake-off.

But she didn't, so I excused myself and backed down the ladder to cash in.

When I got back to the stand I had a preoccupied air. The five-spot in my jeans was crawling around and begging for a change of scene.

When Clara Jane asked me how much I had bet on the race just about to start, I could only think of nine hundred dollars.

When she wanted to know which horse I pointed my finger at every toad on the track, and said: "That one, over there!"

At the end of the third race I was $19,218 to the good.

Clara Jane had it down in black and white on the back of an envelope, in figures that couldn't lie.

(John Henry remarked that when Clara begged him to be content with his winnings and not bet any more, he promised, "but she didn't notice that I had my fingers crossed.")

I simply had to have a roll to flash on the way home, so I took my lonely V and went out into the Promised Land after the nuggets Maddy had put me wise to. . . .

(Pretty Boy was his choice, despite the fact that the bookmakers told him he had made a mistake.)

When the horses got away with Pretty Boy in front I started in to stand on my head, but changed my mind and swallowed half the programme.

Pretty Boy at the quarter! Me for Rector's till they put the shutters up!

Pretty Boy at the half! Me down to Tiffany's in the morning dragging tiaras away in a dray!

Pretty Boy at the three-quarter pole! Me doing the free-library gag all over the place!

But just as they came in the stretch Pretty Boy forgot something and went back after it.

The roach quit me cold at the very door of the safety deposit vaults.

(Of course Clara Jane never guessed his plight, for he "rushed down among the ramblers and made a swift touch for the price of a couple of rides home," and on the way back promised Clara Jane that he would be awfully careful of his $19,218—conversation money.)

School Humor.

AN English paper gives some further examples of children's unconscious humor in answering examination questions:

Alexander the Great was born in absence of his parents.

The chief clause in Magna Charta was that no free man should be put to death or imprisoned without his own consent.

Where were the kings of England crowned? On their heads.

What were the three most important Feudal dues? Friendship, courtship, marriage.

What do you know of Dryden and Buckingham? Dryden and Buckingham were at first friends, but soon became contemporaries.

What is Milton's chief work? Milton wrote a sensible poem called the "Canterbury Tails."

A Classification.

Henry Thomas Buckle's thoughts and conversation were always on a high level. Once he remarked: "Men and women range themselves into three classes, or orders, of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons; the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things; the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

The Cockade.

THE adoption of the cockade by President Roosevelt for his coachman and footmen has resuscitated the old question: Whose servants are entitled to wear a cockade? As a matter of fact, there is no right nor title to the cockade, but usage has, in England, where the cockade is more common than in any other country, confined it to the servants of the royal household, of the diplomatic corps, of officers of the Army and Navy—including the militia and volunteers—and to servants of justices and deputy lieutenants of counties. According to this unwritten law of custom, neither peers nor other persons of title, except they be royal, can confer the cockade on their servants unless they themselves hold one of the commissions already named. And here comes a strange anomaly: if they occupy a Government position, they can wear a cockade, although their servants cannot.

"Cockade," or, rather, the French equivalent of it, made its first appearance in the phrase "bonnet a la coquarde" of Rabelais. About sixty years after Rabelais's death, Randle Cotgrave, author of the first Anglo-French dictionary, defined "coquarde," now "cocarde," as "a Spanish cappe or fashion of bonnet, used by the most substantial men of yore—also any bonnet or cappe worn proudly or peartly on the side." But the most plausible origin given of the cockade of to-day is that it was derived from the tuft of cock's plumes worn by the Croatian soldiers, who in the seventeenth century served under France, and introduced the cravat to the world of fashion. At any rate, in 1683, men ambitious to become soldiers of France received cockades of paper; hence the expression, "prendre la cocarde," meaning "to enlist." Cockades appear to have fallen into innocuous desuetude, so far as France was concerned, until the Revolution, when the "cocarde tricolor" must have become obligatory, for, just before the fall of Robespierre, arrests were made for not wearing it.

The black cockade, now worn in England, was originally the distinctive badge of the House of Hanover, as the white cockade was that of the House of Stuart. It is said white was adopted by the adherents of the Stuarts because it was the emblem of the kings of France, who supported the Stuarts against the Hanoverians. The cockade worn by servants of the British royal household is a large half-disk which projects above the hat. Servants of naval officers wear a disk not projecting above the hat; those of army officers and other persons considering themselves entitled to carry cockades are fan-shaped, with a button, and they reach above the hat. The cockades of the servants of diplomats are in the colors of the country their masters represent, and many noble houses on the continent of Europe make their servants wear cockades matching their livery in color. When, many years ago, the war as to whose servants were entitled to a cockade was raging in England, the facts discovered were that no orders regulating their use were known to exist, but it was recorded that servants of officers of the London City Light Horse, a volunteer regiment, did not wear them. The conclusion arrived at was that the cockade was originally purely a military distinction; that the reason it was worn by servants of field officers was that, in former days, these servants had served in the army, that it was later adopted by servants who had never been in the army, and afterward by servants of naval officers.

There being no set rule in any country from which we have been in the habit of adopting social customs, it remains for us to follow the law that usage and good form has laid down. They have prescribed that the servants of ambassadors and foreign ministers of the United States abroad shall wear cockades, like the servants of foreign diplomats accredited to this country, the cockades of the coachman and footman giving the carriages a certain right of way. Ambassadors and ministers are entitled to the cockade after they have retired from the diplomatic service. But consuls are not members of the diplomatic service; they are merely commercial agents. Neither our consuls abroad nor consular representatives to this country have the right to the cockade, as consuls. Its adoption by an American citizen who represented a foreign country as consular agent in this city was authorized neither by usage nor good taste. That his family should continue to use it after his death is ridiculous vulgarity. Servants of officers of the United States army and navy, both regular and volunteer, are also entitled to wear the cockade.—Town Topics.

Eggs for The British Museum.

A notice of the collections recently bequeathed by the late Mr. Philip Crowley to the natural history branch of the British Museum appeared a few days ago in the "Times." A very important portion of the bequest is the collection of eggs, from which 15,300 specimens have been added to the series previously possessed by the museum. Among the gems in the Crowley cabinet are an egg of the great auk and one of the extinct pied Labrador duck. Both these specimens were acquired by Mr. Crowley from Canon Tristram. The great auk's egg is one of the last "batch" despatched in 1844 from Iceland to Denmark. The two specimens in the museum previous to this addition were both cracked and in otherwise poor condition. An interesting item in the collection is the number of clutches of eggs of various species of birds with a cuckoo's egg among them. The Crowley collection has added about 12 per cent. to the species of birds represented by their eggs in the museum, the increase being especially marked in Australian forms, in which the national collection was previously weak.

"Yes, sir. I sold six plain gold rings."

"Good, my boy," said the jeweler, highly pleased. "We'll make a first-class salesman of you one of these days. You got the regular price, of course?"

"Oh, yes, sir. The price was marked on the inside, 18c., and the gentleman took all that was left, sir."—N.Y. "Life."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Onions and Epidemics.

A READER of "Marmaduke's" letters in London "Truth" has sent him the following:

"Whilst turning over some old books in my library last week I stumbled upon the following paragraph in the 'Rural World' of 1863. As there is an epidemic of smallpox in London it has occurred to me to send this to you, for some of your medical readers may be either able to prove or disprove the statements it contains:

"'Onions and Epidemics.—In the spring of 1849 I was in charge of one hundred men on shipboard, with the cholera among the men. We had onions, which a number of the men ate freely. Those who did so were soon attacked, and nearly all died. As soon as I made this discovery their use was forbidden. After mature deliberation I came to the conclusion that onions should never be eaten during the prevalence of epidemics, for the reason that they absorb the virus, and communicate the disease, and that the proper use for them is sliced and placed in the sick-room, and replaced with fresh ones every few hours. . . . After maintaining the foregoing opinion for eighteen years, I have found the following well attested: Onions placed in the room where there is smallpox will blister and decompose with great rapidity; not only so, but will prevent the spread of the disease. I think that as a disinfectant they have no equal if properly used. If needed, the foregoing (which I have greatly abbreviated) can be attested on oath.'"

It is a curious echo of a bygone preventive, and it is given here without much hope that the suggestion can be valuable.

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—All Saints' confirmation class met last night.

—The town's new road scraper will be put to work on the streets at once.

—Cheese factories are now being opened for the season.

—Close season for maskinonge and bass commenced on Tuesday, April 15th.

—The Board of Works will make their annual tour of inspection on Monday.

—Mr. James Dolan is again about to embark in the dry goods business in Peterborough. The Times wishes him every success.

—The steamer Sunbeam, will leave Lakefield for good next week. Her home henceforth will be at Lindsay.

—The Water-Lily left yesterday for Hastings with the government dredge. The dredge will be put to work on the Hastings River.

—Go and see the lovely photos at the entrance to Whiten's studio. Nothing to equal them in town. No common work made at Whiten's studio, 164, Hunter St.

—"Sidetracked" was presented at the opera house last night to a fair audience. The comedy-drama was well put on and full of sensational effects.

—The Times received a letter enquiring from Hamilton, asking if there was no a demand for bricklayers in Peterborough. There is not, as bricklayers are plentiful here at present.

—Our old friend, Ald. Clinkscale, is doing his share in the defense of the Empire: He has a son serving in the British army, and a second son left last night with the 4th contingent.

—It will be noticed, with pleasure, that Master Reg. Deacon, the gifted boy soprano, will commencing Sunday next, become a regular member and soloist in St. John's choir.

—The Times is in receipt of a letter of enquiry regarding the Peterborough Old Boys' movement, in which Mayor Denne took such an interest some months ago. Has the matter been dropped?

—We understand that tenders are soon to be asked by the Cereal Company for the erection of a new dam across the Otonabee River. The new structure will be located immediately above the present Dickson Company dam, and will be modern and substantial.

—The Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provincial Secretary; Mr. Thos. Blezard, Ex-M.P.P.; and Mr. Wm. Anderson, the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough; will address the electors of Havelock, and the township of Belmont and vicinity, on Friday evening, April 25th, at the town hall, Havelock.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. J. W. Flavelle, Toronto, was in town yesterday.

—Mr. E. S. Hopkins, who summers at Stony Lake, passed through town yesterday on his way north.

—Mrs. C. B. McAllister will not receive this afternoon, but will do so next Friday.

—The many friends of Mr. Macfarlane Wilson will be pleased to know that he has taken a turn for the better, and he hopes to be around in a few days.

—Mrs. A. D. Carver left yesterday for Haliburton, having received word of the death of her father, Mr. Wm. McKnight, at that place.

—Miss Howden, of town, is receiving the congratulations of her many friends on account of having graduated as a trained nurse at the Kingston General Hospital Training School.

—Tweed News.—Mr. P. H. Clarke, of Peterborough, has taken the position of baggageman at the C.P.R. station in place of Mr. Ernest Rose, who left this week to take his new position in Winnipeg.

Death of Mr. Brophy

Yesterday afternoon a telegram was received by Mr. Harry Phelan, conveying the sad intelligence of the death of Mr. T. B. Brophy, his brother-in-law, which occurred at Ottawa. The deceased is well known in Peterborough, where he resided for several years, being connected with the construction of the locks at Burleigh. Mr. and Mrs. Phelan left for Ottawa last night.

Ald. Edgecumbe Injured

While examining the new road roller on Wednesday, in company with Ald Clinkscale, a lever was accidentally sprung, when Ald. Edgecumbe received a stunning blow on the head, inflicting an ugly scalp wound. He was at once conveyed home, where his injuries were properly attended to. We are pleased to say that he is now doing nicely, and will be all right in a few days.

A Full House

The energetic staff of Messrs. E. Brown & Co., the well-known grocers, are busily engaged in clearing away the winter cobwebs and preparing for the dog days. Rolly Hill, the driver, draws away the refuse, Boulton Cunningham draws the plans for the hot weather fittings, Andy Graham and John Hardie draw their salary and Mr. Brown draws his breath. Altogether they seem to have drawn a "full house"—of the choicest groceries in town.

A Cold Water Banquet

The annual banquet of the members of the Y.M.C.A. took place last night and was, we understand, very successful. Being a cold water affair, The Times does not care to pour cold water on the affair because the press was not invited.

The Critical Time of Life is between the years of fifty-seven and sixty-two. (Nature's power slows down, vitality becomes less, and the progress of decay sets in. A means of extending old age and renewing decreasing vigor is to take Ferrozone after meals. Ferrozone keeps up the appetite, and in the formation of red vitalizing blood imparts clearness to the tiring brain, force, energy and spirits just when they are needed most. To take Ferrozone regularly means adding from ten to twenty years to life. Large boxes 50c., or 6 boxes for $2.50, at Ormond & Walsh's

A LAST FAREWELL

Several Members of the Contingent Entertained Last Night

Last night Privates Hamilton and Anglesye were entertained by a number of their young friends to a farewell supper at McCallum's restaurant.

Another party met at the Crown Hotel to similarly honor Privates Thos. Burnham and H. M. Morden.

Short speeches and songs were the order of the day, and in both cases expression was given by those present of a fervent wish for a safe return home of all the members of the contingent.

EAST PETERBORO CAMPAIGN

A Meeting in Mr. Anderson's Interests to be Held This Evening

Mr. Wm. Anderson, the Liberal Candidate in East Peterborough, will hold his second meeting of the present campaign to-night in the Stewart Settlement, Otonabee. The meeting will be addressed by Mr. Anderson, the candidate, and Messrs. G. M. Roger and R. F. McWilliams.

Dr. Ford, the Conservative candidate, has not held any meetings yet, but is arranging to go up at an early date. The campaign in the East provinces is to be a warm one.

SWEET BREATH

A test was made to find if just the leaving off of coffee alone would produce an equal condition of health as when coffee is left off and Postum Food Coffee used in its place.

A man from Clinton, Wis., made the experiment. He says, "About a year ago I left off drinking coffee and tea and began to use Postum. For several years previous my system had been in wretched condition. I always had a thickly furred, bilious tongue, and foul breath often accompanied with severe headaches. I was troubled all the time with chronic constipation so that I was morose in disposition and almost discouraged.

At the end of the first week after making the change from coffee to Postum I witnessed a marvellous change in myself. My once coated tongue cleared off, my small appetite increased, breath became sweet and the headaches ceased entirely. One thing I wish to state emphatically, you have in Postum a virgin remedy for constipation, for I certainly had about the worst case ever known among mortals and I am completely cured of it. I feel in every way like a new person.

During the last summer I concluded that I would experiment to see if the Postum kept me in good shape or whether I had gotten well from just leaving off coffee. So I quit Postum for quite a time and drank cocoa and water. I found out, before two weeks were past, that something was wrong and I began to get costive as of old. It was evident the liver was not working properly, so I became convinced it was not the avoidance of coffee alone that cured me, but the great value came from the regular use of Postum."

Visit of the Peterborough Deputation to the City of London.

The London Press of yesterday says—Peterborough this year took over the waterworks system which a private company had operated in that bustling town since 1882. The city paid $230,000 for the system, but think they have a good thing. There are now 1,100 consumers, and by a judicious extension of the mains it is hoped to double the number. Rates have been high, but will be reduced. The system is operated comparatively cheaply. There is an unlimited supply of water, and not a pound of coal is required to pump it. A dam 600 feet wide stretches across the Otonabee River and affords magnificent power. The town supply also comes from the river, but the water is said to be of great purity, owing to the fact that for nine miles it rushes down the Otonabee Rapids.

The Peterborough Water Commission arrived in this city Tuesday night to look over London's famous system of water supply. The party came direct from Peterborough, and comprised Mayor T. H. G. Denne, Commissioners W. H. Hill, Town Solicitor E. H. D. Hall, Supt. W. Henderson and Town Clerk S. R. Armstrong. At 8 o'clock yesterday morning they made the trip to Springbank, and were very greatly pleased with what they saw. The river park delighted them. Engineer Henderson thought the new hydraulic pumps were much needed. An inspection of the office management was a pleasant surprise. Clerk Armstrong thought the methods there could not be improved upon, Secretary Ellwood having explained these very fully.

The deputation left yesterday afternoon for Windsor, and will also go to Brantford.

They Father Consumption

Bad coughs, colds and catarrh are responsible for more consumption than is traceable even to heredity. Catarrhozone cures more quickly than ordinary remedies because it is the only antiseptic yet discovered that is volatile enough to reach the root of the trouble in remote parts of the lungs and bronchial tubes, and impregnate every particle of the air breathed with its healing, germ-killing vapor. Colds can't last ten minutes, or coughs more than thirty minutes when Catarrhozone is inhaled. It clears nose, throat and air passages at once, stops dropping, headache, and erradicates catarrh from any part of the system. Two months' treatment, $1.00, trial size 25c. Druggists, or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

THE LAW UPHELD

And the Trading Stamp Business has had to Cease Business

The Court of Appeal has given judgment on the stated case by the Attorney-General as to whether the Legislature had power to pass the act of 1901 giving municipalities the power to prohibit trading stamp concerns operating within their own boundaries. The court answers in the affirmative.

Peterborough town council passed a by-law prohibiting trading stamps in town. The trading stamp concerns were closed on January 1 last. Announcements were made by the companies that they had closed down temporarily until the Court of Appeal had given its decision as to the power of the Legislature to pass the Act.

MR. DOLAN'S ENTERPRISE

Will Open Out an Up-to Date Dry Goods Store in Peterborough

Peterborough is to have another up-to-date dry goods store in a few days. Our enterprising fellow townsman, Mr. James Dolan, has decided to open out a first class dry goods store in commodious premises in the Dolan block, nearly opposite the Times building.

Mr. Dolan's long experience at the business, together with ample capital, will enable him not only to put in, and keep a stock of the latest novelties in dry goods, but will also enable him to sell at bargain prices. In fact Mr. Dolan's motto will be "small profits and quick returns."

There is a rare opening in Peterborough just now for a man of Mr. Dolan's push and enterprise, and The Times predicts for

NOTHING LIKE

Malt Breakfast Food

FOR NOURISHING AND MAKING THE LITTLE ONES HAPPY

The proper feeding and nourishing of the child just after weaning should engage the most serious attention of the mother. The great majority of prepared foods produce irritation of the stomach and bowels because of their improper and unscientific manufacture. This irritation of the digestive organs develops into serious complications that often prove fatal.

Malt Breakfast Food is the ideal health food for our little ones. It is entirely free from starchy substances, easily digested and assimilated, is richer in flesh and bone producing elements than all other foods, and has a deliciousness that at once captivates the taste of every child. If you desire to see your child grow up strong; try the effects of Malt Breakfast Food for a few weeks, and note well the grand results. Your grocer can supply you.

HELPED WIFE TO SEE BIDDLES

Warden Soffel Ordered That She be Admitted to Cells

Special to The Times.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 18 — The evidence taken by the Allegheny county Prison Board on the escape of the Biddles was made public to-day. It shows that Warden Soffel, at the request of his wife, introduced her to the Biddle brothers last November, that she later began visiting the Biddles daily, and that she remained in front of their cells from 6.45 until ten o'clock many evenings. When the jailers hesitated about admitting her Warden Soffel gave peremptory orders that she be admitted. One day she remained there four hours during the day watch, which was the day the bars in the cells were sawed.

Servants in the house say they knew she signalled Edward Biddle. Her father, Conrad Deitrich, admitted carrying messages for her to and from the cells. The guards said it was common talk about the jail that Mrs. Soffel was in love with Edward Biddle, and that even the County Commissioners knew she visited the brothers. Guard James McGeary says this part of the testimony was suppressed for political reasons.

THE PETERBORO BOYS LEAVE FOR S. AFRICA

Are Escorted to the Train by Hundreds of Our Patriotic Citizens

Once again Peterborough has nobly responded to the call to arms, and has again sent the flower of its young men to fight the battles of the Empire. The enthusiasm displayed during the past few days, since recruiting began, culminated last night when the brave lads took their departure for Halifax on the midnight C.P.R. train. Thousands of our citizens escorted them to the train. The procession was headed by the band of the 57th Regiment and the fife and drum band, while the crowd cheered and sang patriotic songs, alternately. The following is the names of the contingent from here:—

R. R. Clinkscale, 45th Regt.
Robt. Biggs, 14th D.F.B.
P. J. Hughes, 14th D.F.B.
Vance Wilson, 14th D.F.B.
John Buller, 57th Regt.
Alf. Kemp, 57th Regt.
William Fair, 57th Regt.
Sgt. V. E. LeBar, 57th Regt.
J. A. Crossland, 57th Regt.
H. M. Morden, 57th Regt.
Geo. A. MacDonald, Oxford Rifles.
Milfred Abrams, 4th Hussars.
A. E. Miller, late Canadian Scouts.
Harry Wilson.
Albert Gibson.
Charles Frost.
Jas. Judd, 14th D.F.B.
J. C. Strickland, Lakefield.
Daniel Shanahan, 46th Regt.
Russell Pearse, Norwood.
John White, Havelock.
Thos. H. Bradburn, 57th Regt.
Thos. Anglesye, Peterborough.

The train arrived in due course, and the final leave-taking was soon over. As the train pulled away from the station there was more ringing cheers and tearful adieus exchanged, after which the crowd departed for their homes.

—The Times received the other day an article entitled "Spring." The prelude ran as follows,—Spring is now dancing on the mountain top of glory and whistling through his fists to the robbins and blue birds to carol the dead flowers into life, while Father Time strews the resurrection morn of undying hope with the Easter lilies of perpetual peace. And the next day it snowed.

ROBERTS AND HIS GRANDMOTHER

London, April 17.—Earl Roberts recently unveiled a memorial to his father, Sir Abraham Roberts, which is to be affixed to the house at Royal York-crescent, Clifton, to which the gallant soldier retired when his fighting days were over.

The Commander-in-Chief delivered a reminiscent speech, remarking that it was nearly 100 years since his grandmother first came to Clifton from Scotland.

Such a journey was in those days a tremendous undertaking, and he remembered his mother telling him that the first attempt at the journey was made in a sailing vessel, which was wrecked shortly after the start.

In the following year they made another attempt, overland, and succeeded in reaching Clifton after many days of continuous travelling in a postchaise.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes. I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

TRANSVAAL MINES TO PAY THE WAR DEBT.

This Is Said to be a Foregone Conclusion Amongst British Statesmen

Special to The Times.

London, April 19 — The promise of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach that the wealth of the Transvaal will be made to pay something toward the cost of the war which has set it free from the plundering taxation of the Kruger oligarchy, is in line with common sense and the common expectation. Like all other things South African, the mines of the Rand have suffered from the operations of the war, chiefly by being kept idle, however; but now they will go ahead under the protection of the British flag with greatly multiplied profit and increased security. The happy Government of Pretoria will no longer bleed them freely at will, and their development will not be cramped by an ever-present fear of confiscation.

No other section of the Empire will profit by the results of the war to anything like the extent of the Rand mines. So far as the value of victory may be expressed in money, it will practically all fall into the laps of the men who own them; hence it is nothing but justice that a large share of the cost of the war should be met by these men and their rich properties. The British taxpayer will apparently not shirk from the burden of his share; for, to him, the war has been fought for the integrity of the Empire. But, as a by-result, the mines on the Rand have been made immensely more profitable; and certainly a fair share of this profit should be taken to lighten the weight of new taxation and debt on the shoulders of the Briton at home whose only interest in the struggle has been a patriotic one.

Then the Rand mines will have money to spare. Kruger taxation has ceased. What they once paid to a government which oppressed them, the miners can now pay, in part and for a time, to a government which at great cost has rescued them from oppression. It would likely make even patient John Bull dissatisfied to see a few miners getting enormously rich out of the operation of properties for the enhancement of whose value he was still paying heavily in direct taxation and added interest on his debt.

TAKING OFF THATCH TO FEED CATTLE.

Starving Russian Peasants, Reduced to Terrible Straits

LAST OF SEED GRAIN CONSUMED

Scurvy and Typhoid Fever Devastating the Peasantry Throughout the Whole of the Altai District

Special to The Times.

St. Petersburg, April 19.—The reports received here from the famine-stricken districts of Russia more than justify the anticipations of acute suffering in those localities. Scurvy and typhoid fever are devastating the peasantry throughout the whole of the Altai region, formerly the chief granary of Siberia. The starving people there have consumed even the last remnants of their seed grain, and no spring crops have been sown. In some places the scarcity of fodder is so great that half the houses have been unthatched to save the lives of the cattle and horses. One hundred thousand pounds of foodstuffs, recently despatched by the Government, have not yet reached Siberia, and the Lieutenant-General in command of the district is endeavoring to locate the supplies and hurry them forward. The Czar contributed 200,000 roubles to the relief fund, and has remitted the taxes of the sufferers.

The gravity of the situation is evidenced by the latest disease statistics. At Menzolinsk, Government of Oufa, there have been upwards of 4,000 cases of typhus, hunger and scurvy; at Belibeisky 602 cases have been reported, and at Akmolinsk over 1,000 cases have occurred. Similar reports come from Voronej, Kazan and Saratoff.

The Red Cross Society is furnishing all the aid at its command, in the way of free kitchens and medicines.

A Sure Cure for Constipation

Some remedies cure this distressing complaint, in a day, some in a month, but Nerviline never fails to cure in a few minutes. Just ten drops of Nerviline in sweetened water—that's enough, and away goes the dysentery, cured to stay cured. Nerviline also cures cramps, colic, pain in the stomach, and sick headache. It has five times the strength and curative properties of ordinary remedies, and should be in every household. Better buy a 25c. bottle and try it. Nerviline is all right.

A YOUNG CANADIAN ON ARMOURED TRAIN

Thrilling Experiences in the South African War by a Peterboro Boy

NOT IN THE PRESS DISPATCHES

In Search of Adventure Percy Tynan Goes to South Africa, and Finally Joins the British Army.

Special to The Times.

An interesting letter, descriptive of armored trains, was received by a citizen from South Africa, and was handed The Times for publication. Percy Tynan was formerly a resident of Peterborough, and removed with his parents and family some years ago to Dakota. His letter is as follows:

"Our captain of the armored train is a brick, and he doesn't seem to care whether we do any work or not. He is a young fellow, and not such a crank as most of the imperial officers. There are two of us now—another Yank besides myself, a young fellow from Chicago by the name of Richardson—and he is Chicago from his head to his heels. He is the best fellow I have struck since leaving home, totally unlike most of those one meets out here from the States, who are usually professional hoboes. We are, at the time I write this, over on the east coast, and only 90 miles from East London.

"First in the train is a truck or car, containing a searchlight and Maxim gun; second, captain's truck; third, gun carriage truck, containing two 12-pounders; fourth, troops; fifty, engine; sixth, water truck; seventh, cookhouse truck; eighth, dynamo truck; ninth, construction truck; tenth, telegraph truck; eleventh, searchlight and Maxim gun.

"There are 68 men with the train, scattered through the different trucks. The entire train is sheeted with five-eighths of an inch armor with loopholes and so on. The train guards the frontier, and is used for general purposes of that nature. Most men with armored trains have a hard time of it. They have to do both night and day patrol duty. With the train we have a cycle machine for patrol and scout duty. It is a four-wheeled machine used on the track, and constructed on the same principle as a bicycle. Great speed can be made with it. I do most of the work with it.

"We were called out one night by a report that the Boers had rushed a farm about 12 miles out and about a mile from the railway line. Away we went, with our ammunition beside us, ready to stick a muzzle of a Krag-Jorgensen through a loop-hole at the first sight of a Boer. As we drew near the house the train slowed down and a reconnoitering squad was sent out. In a few minutes they were greeted with a hail of bullets, many of which flattened on our train. Our scouting party stayed where they were and my skillful manoeuvring gradually drew back toward the train, and with them the Boers.

Like a flash the searchlight was turned on the Boers and the house. Bang! went one of the 12-pounders, and such a scampering you never saw. The shell from the 12-pounder knocked out four men and two horses; the rest of them got away. As the ranch belonged to a rank rebel who was supposed to be aiding the Boers on the quiet, the major in command, who happened to be on the train, gave orders to destroy the house. The searchlight made it a beautiful target, and the gunners with the twelve-pounder soon knocked it to kindling wood. Then we steamed back to town, rolled up in our blankets and slept.

"A few days after the bombardment of the farm house we were called out one night by the report that the Boer leader in the vicinity was making north for the frontier. He had been having a hard time in the colony and decided to try to get out. Away we went once more, and after passing about 15 blockhouses with no news, we at last came to the hunting ground.

"In a cloudy, moonlight night we could see the whiskers of the advance guard, coming over the veldt, a mile away. We were lying with our armored train in a cut, out of sight. When the Boers were a little less than a mile of the line each man dropped and began to make a sneak. Orders were sent by phone to the blockhouses in the vicinity to hold fire until we opened.

"Finally four Boers started on a run for the fences. They knew that the line was protected by barb wire networks, but I guess they did not know the strength of the fences. They began slashing and cutting with their wire clippers, and after five minutes work, signalled the command in the rear to come on and make a dash for it. They came—and so did we. Our cut was half a mile from the attempted place of crossing.

"To go back a little, you may think it strange that they did not put out outposts. It would have been useless because the blockhouses were so near together, and the sentries have orders to fire on anyone approaching the line.

"Twenty men were sent out from our train and the nearest blockhouses to hold the pass. Imagine twenty men attempting to hold a pass against 275 desperate Boers, caught like rats in a trap—as that is the number we afterward learned made the rush. Our men started on to hold the pass at the same moment the Boers started to make it.

What a scene followed! Our searchlight was turned on, the two Maxims firing between them 800 rounds a minute, and one 12-pounder dropping shrapnel shells with 200 bullets in each, started in to do business. To see that bunch of Boers come was something grand.

"The first rattle of the Maxims took them completely by surprise, and naturally checked them for a moment—and then on they came until they reached the wires. Instead of heading for the opening they made for the solid fence, and failing to jump that or break through, landed in all shapes, a confused mass of struggling, desperate fighting men.

"About 25 of them, as soon as they struck the fence, wheeled and started to encircle the train. Alas, more than half rolled over dead. The first quarter of a mile and the rest scampered over the veldt. Only ten succeeded in getting across both lines, and of these but three were mounted. The remainder went back over the veldt in all directions.

"Our casualties were three wounded, one of which was a gunner on one of the 12-pounders, while the Boers left forty dead on the field, eighty wounded and lost 165 horses, the latter of which were either killed outright, or had to be shot afterward.

"When nothing is doing we occasionally have concerts. Nearly every Tommy has a song he can sing in public, which together with the musicians among them, always makes something doing. There are two mandolins, a banjo, an autoharp and two accordions in the outfit. All but two of the men who have them are fine musicians.

"As I finish my letter the Tommies are all out on the grass on the shady side of the train playing cards, chess and checkers. The veldt is covered with a most beautiful growth of grass. The thornbush about here is green now and covered with flowers. There is a specie of red cacti that is also very pretty. The temperature where we now are is about 90 by day; the evenings are cool and delightful."

Come, Let us Reason Together

You will readily acknowledge the fact that defects and derangements of digestion are amongst the most common of human ailments. These digestive derangements not only complicate almost every form of disease, but they constitute by themselves serious torments to a vast number of otherwise healthy people.

If you are unfortunately numbered amongst those who are users of common oatmeal and other starchy and indigestible grain foods producing stomach irritations, eructations, waterbrash, heartburn, heated blood and skin eruptions, why continue to use such grain foods when the use of Malt Breakfast Food perfectly maintains digestive vigor and robust health?

Malt Breakfast Food has proved a revelation to the dyspeptic; it has banished his troubles and given him a natural and healthy appetite. Malt Breakfast Food is predigested, readily assimilated, delicious, appetizing and strengthening. Its use in the home for one week will gladden your heart, and you will never have a desire to give it up. See your grocer.

England's Depressed Shoe Trade — Patriot's Day Celebration in Boston

Special to The Times.

London, April 19 — Quite a public controversy has arisen from the declarations made by George A. Royce, president of the Federation of Boot and Shoe Manufacturers, to the effect that American competition has little to do with the present depression of the English shoe trade. The Daily Mail takes issue with the statements of Mr. Royce, and in speaking of the situation says: How far American competition is responsible for the present situation each must judge for himself. These facts are undisputed. Our exports of shoes are smaller now than during the corresponding time last year. American exports to colonies which were once supplied from England, have greatly increased. Our home demand for British-made shoes has declined. The sale of American shoes in this country is steadily and largely increasing. The official figures leave no room for dispute on these points. Is it not time, then, for British shoe manufacturers to abandon the ostrich-like policy which they have up to now favored and face the facts?

PATRIOTS' DAY

Boston, Mass., April 19—"Patriots' Day" will be observed generally throughout Massachusetts to-day, the celebrations recalling the old traditions and historic incidents of the revolution. From the belfry of the Old North Church two lanterns are hung to recall Paul Revere's ride, and at daybreak the patriotic organizations of Lexington and vicinity marched over the route taken by the British, April 19, 1775. In Boston nearly all the old houses and public buildings of historic interest were decorated and were kept open all day for the inspection of visitors.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 19 — Messrs. Redmond and Devlin, Irish members of Parliament, are in Pittsburg to take part in the demonstration to be held at the avenue theatre to-morrow evening in the cause of Irish liberty. The meeting is to be the first of a series to be held in the chief cities of Pennsylvania.

CONFEDERATE VETERANS

Dallas, Texas, April 19 — All is in readiness for the great reunion of Confederate veterans which will be held in this city next week. At a meeting of the executive committee yesterday the various chairmen reported that their work was almost finished and that on Monday the gates of the city would be thrown open to the old soldiers. All indications point to one of the largest and most successful reunions in the history of the organization. All the state divisions from Maryland to Texas promise to be well represented, and there will be undoubtedly a large number of visitors who will attend simply as spectators. The arrangements have been made on a scale to insure good accommodations for all comers.

TO PROTECT ALPINE CLIMBERS.

Geneva, Switzerland, April 17.—The unprecedented mortality among Alpinists last year has roused the Swiss Alpine Club to introduce new measures in order to protect amateur Alpinists—in spite of themselves. It is estimated that fifty per cent. of last year's accidents was among persons who had come to Switzerland for the first time, and had practically no experience in mountaineering.

New "cabins" are to be built in the most dangerous places, and signboards warning the tourist against hidden crevasses, etc., are to be erected.

A new code of signals, by which the guides may communicate with the valleys in case of necessity, will also come into force this year.

A scheme for the general assurance of all Alpinists is also in progress. Of course it is impossible to prevent a tourist from undertaking a risky climb unattended, but in such cases hotel-keepers will warn the tourist of his danger beforehand. Guides have also been instructed to refuse to continue a climb if they find that the tourist is unable to withstand the fatigue, or in case the change of weather would render the climb dangerous. The steps cut into the rock in dangerous places and the handrails are to be renovated, and, in short, the Alpine Club is doing its utmost this season to prevent accidents in the Alps.

ROBERTS' STRICTURES ARE FULLY JUSTIFIED

Spion Kop Dispatches give a Good Idea of What Kind of a Leader Buller Was.

London, April 19.—The London Times, in an editorial article on the Spion Kop despatches, says that the single redeeming feature of the battle was the splendid conduct of the troops, but that from every other point of view the story of Spion Kop and the behavior of the principal actors must remain painful reading to Englishmen. The Times declares that the despatches contain crushing condemnation of Buller's behavior as commander out of his own mouth. They show that if the Ministers had acted weakly in first publishing an incomplete version of the despatches, it was done out of a sincere desire to spare Buller's reputation. The papers now published in reply to Buller's offensive challenge, says— The Times, fully justify the most severe strictures passed upon his leadership by Roberts, and leave a strong suspicion among the public as to what that leadership must have been.

THE BOER COMMANDOES TO ELECT DELEGATES TO THE CONFERENCE

Lord Kitchener Grants Facilities for Meetings of Representatives of Boer Commandoes in the Field to Consider Peace Terms

Special to The Times.

London, April 19.—The Government leader, A. J. Balfour, in the House of Commons to-day, made the following important statement:—

"After two conferences between Lord Milner and Lord Kitchener and the Boer delegates at Pretoria, Lord Kitchener, while refusing to grant an armistice, on military grounds, has agreed to give facilities for the election and meeting of representatives of the various Boer commandos to consider the position. The Boer leaders have, therefore, left Pretoria to carry out this plan."

Mr. Balfour added that it was not expected that communication between the British authorities and the Boer leaders could be resumed in less than three weeks' time.

EAST PETERBORO CAMPAIGN

Mr. Wm. Anderson Holds a Successful Meeting in Otonabee

Mr. Wm. Anderson, the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough, held a very successful meeting last night in the Stewart settlement, Otonabee. The school house was well filled with electors, all of whom seemed to take great interest in the proceedings.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Anderson, and by Messrs. R. F. McWilliams and Ald. G. M. Roger.

At the conclusion of the proceedings, cheers were given for the King and for the Liberal Candidate.

A PRINCE ALBERT LADY SAYS:

"I Have Freat Faith in Diamond Dyes."

To the wise woman who buys good material, Diamond Dyes are a necessity to the economy of the household, and by using these dyes many perplexing problems are solved. It is here that good judgment and management can save much, while the thoughtless and extravagant keep themselves hopelessly poor.

Mrs. G. S. Pook, Prince Albert, N. W.T., says: "I am very pleased with the success I have had with Diamond Dyes. I have used the black for wool on many occasions, and always got a lovely fast black that kept its bright and full color as long as the goods held together. I dyed a heliotrope cashmere dress for my little girl; it took a rich cardinal, very even in color, and that stands washing. I have great faith in Diamond Dyes."

If you delight in home Mat and Rug making, send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., and be supplied free of cost with the new designs of the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns which are ready for booking.

SURRENDER OF FILIPINOS

Manila, April 19.—Gen. Chaffee has arrived at Calbayog, Samar, where he expects to witness the surrender of 400 riflemen and a large number of bolomen under the orders of Col. Guevarra. These men form isolated commands and will surrender at the nearest garrison.

Gen. Bell reports the surrender of three columns under Gen. Bunal. These columns have given the Americans much trouble and their surrender is regarded as important. In addition to Gen Bunal two Colonels, eight staff officers, eighteen Lieutenants, seventy-five riflemen, 200 bolomen and 400 members of a revolutionary society have taken the oath of allegiance.

Unofficial telegrams state that two columns, comprising 1,500 men, are leaving Nanaland and Cotabatto and invading the Lake Lanao district. The trails are closed and the Moros are fortifying themselves.

Gen. Smith will sail for the United States on the transport Buford.

Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT MEDICINE HAS CURED MORE RHEUMATIC SUFFERS THAN ALL OTHER COMBINED REMEDIES.

Sufferers from the varied forms of rheumatism—articular, muscular, inflammatory, lumbago and gout, should bear in mind that there is a morbid principle in the blood when rheumatism is present. This morbid principle is uric acid, which circulates with the blood and acts upon the joints and muscles, causing the pains and agonies of rheumatism. Paine's Celery Compound is the only scientific remedy for the permanent banishment of every form of rheumatism. If your joints are painful; if the knees, wrists, elbows or ankles are swollen, a few bottles of Paine's Celery Compound will soon remove all your troubles and pains. If you have inflammatory or sciatic rheumatism accompanied with fever, acute darting pains in the sciatic nerve from the hip down the leg, Paine's Celery Compound taken at once will soon drive out the disease, and make you strong and active.

Mr. G. J. McDonald, Cornwall, Ont, writes about his happy cure as follows:

"After giving your Paine's Celery Compound a thorough testing, I am pleased to say a few words in its favor. For three years I suffered terribly from rheumatism. It seemed to me that I was forced to endure all the agonies and pains that a mortal could possibly experience from the dreadful disease.

"While suffering I tried many of the advertised remedies, also doctors prescriptions, but never found a cure until I procured a supply of Paine's Celery Compound. It worked like a charm—it seemed to strike at the very root of my trouble. I am now cured; all pains are banished, and in every respect I am a new man.

"I shall always consider it a pleasure and duty to strongly recommend Paine's Celery Compound to all who are afflicted with rheumatism."

PRISON OPENED FOR "FRENCHY."

New York's Jack-the-Riper Set Free by the Governor

WAS HE A POLICE VICTIM?

Influential Men, Believing Him to Have Been, Worked Long for His Release

Special to The Times.

New York, April 19.—After ten years' imprisonment for the alleged murder of "Old Shakespeare," a dissolute, aged woman of the town East Side, Ameer Ben Ali, better known as "Frenchy," who was sentenced for life, was pardoned yesterday by Governor Odell, on the ground that there are grave doubts as to the man's guilt.

"Frenchy," who during the past ten years has been shifted about from one prison to another, and who spent several years in the Matteawan Asylum for Insane Criminals, is now in Dannemora Prison. The efforts in his behalf have been going on for several years. Among those interested has been Jules Cambon, the French ambassador; Frederic R. Coudert and J. B. Martin. Applications were made to Governors Black and Roosevelt for his pardon, without avail. Opinion as to the man's guilt or innocence had always been divided, and new evidence discovered last year strongly turned the tide of sympathy in the prisoner's favor.

THE HONNOR BROUGHT HOME

One day in April, 1891, the city was horrified to find that just such a murder as those in Whitechapel had occurred here. A bellboy forcing open the door of a room in the East River Hotel, in Catharine street, had found the body of "Old Shakespeare" lying on the bed, cut and hacked just as the victims of the London murders had been mutilated. The key of the room, No. 31, was missing.

Inspector Byrnes and practically the whole detective force of the city started to work on the case, and within 24 hours had arrested one of the most miserable specimens of humanity ever seen in the most miserable part of the city — Ameer Ben Ali, an Algerian, known to some as George Frank, and more generally among the lower East Side dives as "Frenchy."

ST. LUKE'S VESTRY MEETING

Church in a Prosperous Condition — Considerable Business Transacted

Minutes of previous meetings being read, it was moved by Mr. Lawson, seconded by Mr. Adams that these be confirmed. Auditors report was then submitted showing Assets $23,720.40 and Liabilities $21,450.40, also Insurance amounting to $15,100 with $122.50 premium, besides $300.00 on stable in rear of Rectory, $2,300 Insurance on Rectory with $1.75 premium; amount collected on Easter Day $205.65, total collections for year ending Easter 1902 were $1710.32, expenditure $1705.81 showing a balance of $5.52. It was moved that report be accepted which was carried unanimously.

The Rector then addressed the meeting stating, in course of his remarks that, since he had entered upon his ministry on September 22 he had preached 62 sermons given 41 addresses and paid 321 visits. Discussion then followed as to advisability of obtaining the services of Mr. G. W. Mulligan to train members of the choir at the rate of 50 dollars per annum which matter was subsequently referred to a committee.

Reports were then presented by the Woman's Auxiliary, Young Women's Chapter of Guild, Mother's Meeting and the Sunday School.

A motion was moved by Mr. Rogers seconded by Mr. Scott, that a sidewalk be built at once, was referred to a committee of 6 to carry out the work.

After the usual vote of thanks, the meeting was closed by prayer, after which ladies served refreshments.

JOHN BULL'S PESSIMISM.

It is curious, but instructive, to find a New York paper gently chiding John Bull for pessimism in the matter of American and German trade rivalry. But it is a tempting subject, with John Bull still leading the world's trade, and his factories as busy as they can be. The chaffing paper is the New York Journal of Commerce, and it makes the shrewd remark at the outset that it is chiefly the literary people of England who have become dejected at the sight of serious commercial rivalry.

"The fact of American and German competition is undeniable;" it says; "but England is still pre-eminently the manufacturing country of the world, as well as its great sea power. There is nothing in the growth of this country or of Germany to indicate that England is to be driven from the sea or from the world's markets, but henceforth she has not the world to herself; she must divide it with two powerful competitors."

This is in exact accord with the facts. Britain is no longer the only shop on the world's great street, but it is still by far the biggest one. Nor is it surprising that the British manufacturer does not immediately rush after American or German methods when his works are busy overtime and his sales are steadily increasing. It is hard for him to believe that his primacy is threatened when he is growing more prosperous with every year; but the literary man, who sees nothing but tables of statistics, is tremendously alarmed.

Of course, the time will come when each British industry must make sure it has as good machinery as its rival overseas is using, but it may not come in many cases until they actually feel the pinch of competition. Then it will be found that British enterprise and adaptiveness are as alert as ever. It is only natural, the Journal of Commerce thinks, that the newer factories should have the newer machinery; but already John Bull is getting in much of the latest of it, and sometimes hiring foreign workmen to manage it to the best advantage.

The people who are calculating upon the decadence of Britain are in for a crushing disappointment.

* * * *

The splendid response of Canada's young men to the request for 2,000 more troops shows that the fighting spirit of Canadians once aroused does not easily die down like that of other nations of more mercurial temperament. There were not wanting those who thought that as the war fever had apparently died down some difficulty might be experienced in getting the men for this contingent, but the reports from the recruiting stations show that the patriotic spirit is as strong as ever.

Afraid to Repeat the Dose.

A local clergyman was engaged in conversation with a number of friends the other day, says the Duluth "News Tribune," when each started telling stories of weddings he had performed. One of the party had this to offer:

Some time ago a great big fellow, roughly dressed, and a wee mite of a young woman came to him. They had no witnesses, and, in fact, did not care to have any. Nevertheless a bridesmaid and groomsman were selected from the household, and the ceremony began. They had promised to love and obey and all the rest of the service, when the preacher announced: "Kiss the bride."

The groom, on bended knee, hesitated a little, tried to say something and couldn't.

"Kiss the bride," said the pastor.

"Why, parson, I did, afore I come here at all," replied the groom, whose face had taken the color of a June rose.

Little Georgie was taken by his aunt to see the newcomer, aged one day. He was duly and profoundly impressed with the specimen, and asked where the little brother came from. "God sent it," answered the aunt, reverently. The answer made a deep impression on Little Georgie, for that afternoon he was seen out in the backyard gazing up into the deep blue sky and spreading his diminutive apron expectantly as he said: "Dear God, please throw me one down, too."—Troy "Press."

George W. Gray, secretary of the "Forward Movement" in Chicago, proposes to redeem the slum districts of that city by Christian vaudeville houses, pool and billiard-rooms, and bowling-alleys.

Jeanne de Villeneuve has been appointed secretary of the French consulate in New York. This, it is believed, is the first appointment of a woman in the consular service. Mlle. Villeneuve is only twenty-five years old, and belongs to an old family of Provence.

McKeesport, Pennsylvania, has a bookless library. The fine stone building was erected with the $50,000 Andrew Carnegie donated, but the entire donation was used to build the library, as the directors expected Mr. Carnegie would give more. He has declined to do this, and the board has no money to buy books.

The mountains end a greater number of lives every year than is generally supposed. An official report states that in 1901, in Switzerland alone, accidents to mountain-climbers amounted to 119, and that death occurred in all of these. This figure is double that of 1900, and represents the highest total that has hitherto been recorded.

At Uelzen, in Lunsberg, the authorities have passed a by-law which is more popular with the fair than the sterner sex. Husbands must be home by eleven o'clock. A fine equal to ten shillings is the penalty for infringing this regulation, half of which goes to the person—presumably the wife—who brings and proves the accusation.

One of the eccentricities of the late Duke of Portland was to subscribe for all the ordinary newspapers and magazines of the day and have them wholebound in beautiful crushed morocco coats of many colors. Each of these volumes he put in a perfectly fitting oak box lined with white velvet and fitted with a patent Bramah lock and duplicate keys. The cost of each volume worked out at about £40.

As the result of studies on New Jersey mosquitoes last summer, Professor John B. Smith of Rutgers College says that not only will the insects travel long distances from their breeding-place, but on favorable evenings large swarms rise and are carried during the night by winds. The direction in which they go is often seaward. Swarms have been met fifteen miles from the shore, and they are common five miles from shore. Migration of mosquitoes with the aid of the winds Professor Smith regards as of much importance, and as rendering the control of the mosquito nuisance much more difficult than has been supposed.

Miss Florence K. Jewell, a wealthy young Jewess, who attained notoriety in August, 1899, by marrying Lobengula's son, while he was on exhibition at the Kaffir Kraal at Earl's Court, London, has applied for a divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty and misconduct. She testified that he had given her black eyes, and stabbed her with an assegai, when the judge, Sir Francis Jeune, broke in with: "That was what you expected in marrying a savage, was it not?" The judge reserved judgment, as he doubted whether it could be shown that Lobengula's domicile was in England. He said, too, that he only behaved like a savage, and that the petitioner had insisted on marrying him, and now saw the result of it.

The old proverb about honor among thieves has had a staggering blow in St. Louis. The thieves were certain members of the city council and a number of street railway men, and it was because neither side had any confidence in the honor of the other that a remarkable case of bribery was most amusingly disclosed. The railway men desired certain franchises, and put up one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars as a corruption fund. They were afraid, however, to pay it to the councilmen until the council had voted as they wished. The corrupt councilmen, on their part, would not vote until they had the money. By a compromise, therefore, the fund was placed in a safety-deposit box which had two keys, one of which was held by each party. Neither could open the box without the cooperation of the other. The councilmen voted as they had agreed, and it was through the quarrel over their attempt to get the funds that the whole matter became public.

No Breach of Discipline.

THE colonel was entertaining some of his friends with stories of army life, and the talk turned to the inflexibility of orders. That reminded the colonel of Tim Murphy's case.

Murphy had enlisted in the cavalry service, although he had never been on a horse in his life. He was taken out for drill with other raw recruits under command of a sergeant, and, as luck would have it, secured one of the worst buckers in the whole troop.

"Now, my men," said the sergeant in addressing them, "no one is allowed to dismount without orders from a superior officer. Remember that."

Tim was no sooner in the saddle than he was hurled head over heels through the air, and came down so hard that the breath was almost knocked out of him.

"Murphy," shouted the sergeant, when he discovered the man spread out on the ground, "you dismounted!"

"I did."

"Did you have orders?"

"I did."

"From headquarters, I suppose?" with a sneer.

"No, from hindquarters."

"Take him to the guard-house!" ordered the sergeant.—Detroit "Free Press."

Winter Uplands.

The frost that stings like fire upon my cheek,
The loneliness of this forsaken ground,
The long white drift upon whose powdered peak
I sit in the great silence as one bound;
The rippled sheet of snow where the wind blew
Across the open fields for miles ahead;
The far-off city towered and roofed in blue,
A tender line upon the western red;
The stars that singly, then in flocks appear,
Like jets of silver from a violet dome,
So wonderful, so many, and so near,
And then the golden moon to light me home;
The crunching snowshoes and the stinging air,
And silence, frost, and beauty everywhere.
—Lampman.

Epitaph.

Here lies Luke Longpenne, the distinguished historical novelist, who died at the age of eleven years in the full height of his fame, three weeks after the publication of his first book.—"Life."

Correct to the Last.

"Anyhow," chuckled the somewhat fastidious horse-thief as the regulators adjusted the noose about his neck, "it isn't a ready-made tie."—Chicago "Tribune."

Caught in a Stampede.

TWO years ago, when the cowboys of north-eastern Arizona came together to find out who was the "best man" in various ways, James Evans won the steer-tying championship by roping, throwing and tying a vicious steer in twenty-four seconds. But in a recent round-up the champion did a more remarkable thing, by which, says the Kansas City "Star," he saved his own and another man's life.

While he and some companions were camping for the night on a high tableland, which ended a few miles away in an abrupt drop of two hundred feet, a storm swept through the mountains. Made nervous by the lightning, the herd of fifteen hundred cattle stampeded in the direction of the precipice. Evans and his men mounted hurriedly and, circling to the front of the maddened cattle, tried with whoops and revolver-shots to turn them back.

In the dense blackness of the night Evans's horse missed his footing and went down in a heap, one leg in a gopher-hole. The horse of a cowboy named Davis, running close behind, stumbled over Evans's horse, and Davis, too, came to earth and lay still, unconscious.

Fifty yards away came the herd, and a short flash of lightning showed Evans the situation. The swiftly moving sea of cattle reached one hundred yards each way. Unable to arouse Davis, and never thinking of leaving his disabled comrade, Evans took the only chance of saving both. He emptied his own revolver and his companion's into the center of the herd, cutting a breach in the front of the mass. Then, throwing the inanimate form of Davis over his shoulder, he awaited his opportunity.

As one of the leaders brushed by, Evans, with one movement, put the body of Davis across the shoulders of the steer, and mounted, also. Vainly the animal leaped, bucked and sidejumped. With his legs wrapped tightly around the body of his mount, Evans drove his spurs deep in, and held himself and Davis in place.

The steer, wild with rage, agony and fright, rapidly left the herd in the rear, and, veering to the right in a furious gallop, carried his riders out of danger. Then Evans rolled off the back of his strange rescuer, and a half-hour later, when his cowboys turned the herd at the rim of the canyon, and rode back to look for the foreman and Davis, they found them, both unconscious. The weary steer, with his sides covered with blood, lay exhausted a short distance away.

The outfit ordered a medal for Evans, and the steer has been pensioned for life on the best alfalfa in the valley.

A Revolutionary Age.

Soulless corporations, heartless coquettes and conscienceless rascals of various sorts we have had with us now these many years, and it looks very much now as if a kind of providence was about to even things up a little by providing us with such useful contrivances as wireless telegraphy, heatless light, smokeless powder, boneless shad and seedless oranges. If some genius will rise up now and give us a breed of biteless dogs and stingless mosquitoes, together with some loseless umbrellas and spendless cash, we shall all be happy and content.—"Leslie's Weekly."

When to Get Married.

The astrologers, it is said, have named the following as propitious dates for marriages for 1902: January 2, 4, 11, 19 and 21; February 1, 2, 10, 19 and 21; March 2, 5, 12, 20 and 22; April 2, 4, 12, 20 and 22; May 2, 4, 12, 20 and 23; June 1, 2, 11, 19 and 21; July 1, 2, 12, 19, 21 and 31; August 2, 11, 18, 20 and 30; September 1, 9, 16, 18 and 28; October 1, 2, 15, 17, 27 and 28; November 5, 11, 13, 20 and 25; December 1, 8, 10, 19, 28 and 29.

The Monk's Knowledge of Women.

AN interesting story comes from the French Alps of Dauphiny relating the futile efforts of the Princess of Crøy, who desired to enter the monastery of the Grande Chartreuse, a habitation from which women visitors are rigidly excluded.

The story runs that the Princess dressed herself in boy's clothes and accompanied her husband to the institution. The gates were opened to them, and the Prince sent his card to the father superior, with a line to the effect that he was accompanied by a friend.

Just as they were about to make the round of the building the word was received that the father would like to see the Prince and "his friend." Going upstairs they were received by the smiling monk, who cordially invited them to join him in an appetizing luncheon. The Princess endeavored to make the best of the situation, but she was not put any the more at her ease by the fact that the monk kept gazing sharply at her.

At last he exclaimed suddenly: "Catch it, young man!" at the same time throwing at her a large pear. The Princess was startled, and, thrown completely off her guard, made a motion to grab up her skirt, the absence of which she overlooked in her confusion.

Then the father stopped smiling and said with great gravity:

"I beg your pardon, madam, but ladies are not allowed in the monastery. I must ask you to wait outside until the Prince has finished his inspection."

The Democracy of Children.

ONE amusing trait in children is their unconscious democracy. They are nearly always democratic when permitted any latitude. The desire for playmates levels sense of caste, if any exists. On a street through which I often pass there is a coterie of children who blend with the most thorough harmony, although they are of quite different social strata. One of the boys is a "smart" young gentleman in knickerbockers, always well groomed; another is a little Italian; a third, the thin, restless, wide awake son of a housekeeper. One of the little girls is a negress, with her woolly hair standing out from her head in thin curved-up tails. She is quite a belle in this "mixed" company.—Harper's "Bazar."

On a Dog.

"They're thinking now of reversing the usual process, and first trying plays in New York before taking them out on the road." "What's the idea?" "Well, if a play succeeds in New York, the rest of the country will know it's rotten."—"Life."

BAD BLOOD

Reveals itself in many ways. Sometimes the impurities in the blood mark and mar the skin with blotches, pimples, boils or other eruptions. Sometimes the result of bad blood is rheumatism or a debilitated condition which is popularly described as "feeling played out, hardly able to drag myself around."

The impurities and poisons which corrupt the blood, clog the liver and cloud the skin are removed by the use of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It does more than eliminate the poisons; it increases the activity of the blood-making glands so that there is an increased supply of pure, body-building blood. It brightens the eyes, cleanses the skin, and gives new, physical energy.

Accept no substitute for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

"I thank God for the good your medicines have done me," writes Mr. James M. Skidmore, of Mitchell, Lawrence Co., Ind., Box 301. "I was not well for two years. My throat was always sore, head ached, and back ached nearly all the time. My weight was 125 pounds. I was taken sick with typhoid fever, and when the fever left me I had such a pain in my left side I could not breathe without pain. I thought I must die. My wife went to the drug store and procured a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and a vial of his 'Pleasant Pellets.' I discontinued the use of my doctor's medicine and began with the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets.' I at once began to feel better; the pain soon left my side and I could breathe with ease. In a week or so I felt so good I could not stay in the room. I began to walk about the streets; I felt better each morning. After a month's use of the medicine I was well. That was over a year ago. Now I weigh 165 pounds and feel better than ever in my life."

Mrs. or Miss?

JUST as a sort of New Year's card, the Woman's Suffrage Society of Paris have issued a manifesto contending that, as woman in her maiden name accomplishes all the duties of a citizen, she does prejudice to her interests by sinking her identity and losing her individuality in adopting the name of her husband when she marries. Consequently, it seems on the tapis that in future, when Miss Smith marries Mr. Brown, she will still retain her maiden patronymic of Smith. Being married, she must of necessity be Mrs.; therefore, if she retains her maiden name of Smith, we shall have the weird anomaly of Mr. Brown and Mrs. Smith as man and wife. Now, supposing Mrs. Smith, otherwise Mrs. Brown, should, by any unforeseen event, meet with a Mr. Smith in the absence of her husband, and it should go forth to the world—in a hotel visitors' book, for instance—that they were actually Mr. and Mrs. Smith, where the dickens, in the event of trouble, would Mr. Brown come in? Mr. Brown might swear by all that was holy that Mrs. Smith was Mrs. Brown, but if Mr. Smith swore that she was Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Smith did not stoop to deny it, what jury outside a lunatic asylum could convict Mrs. Smith of playing fast and loose with Mr. Brown? It is a complex problem, to say the least of it; but if the Woman's Suffrage Society of gay Paree are not content to let well alone, I suppose they must put up with the consequences.

A Girl's Daring Feat.

IT seems hardly possible that a girl of sixteen should save nearly fifty people from a terrible death. Yet that is what Grace Bussell did, who may well be called the Grace Darling of Australia. It happened one day in December that a vessel was wrecked off the coast of Australia, a few miles from the Bussell home. The lifeboat on board the steamer was lowered, but it capsized and the eight people in it were drowned. So the rest of the crew clung to the sinking steamer. The surf ran so wildly that no one could dare swim through it, and there was not a house or person in sight. The girl, who was a splendid horsewoman, was riding along with a native servant. She caught sight of the vessel in distress; turning her horse's head toward the coast, she started him on a quick gallop. When she reached the sea she urged her horse into the angry surf. She rode boldly on till she reached the vessel. With great difficulty she took some of the children in her arms and put them before her on the saddle; then, with bigger children and women clinging to her dress, she started for the shore, gave those she had rescued to the care of her servant, and returned again to the wreck. So she went backward and forward for four hours, till all were safe on land, the servant having ridden to bring out the last man.—"Leslie's Weekly."

"Hi sy, you know," said the Cockney, addressing the Bowery boy, "we cawn't be henemies; we 'ave to be brothers. We speak the same lyangwydge, you know."

A certain pompous and officious judge in a western town had just fined a young lawyer $10 for contempt of court. After it had been paid a grave old attorney walked up to the bench and laid down a $10 gold piece.

"What is that for?" asked the Judge.

"For contempt, your Honor," was the reply.

"But I didn't fine you for contempt," answered the Judge. "There must be some mistake."

"Oh, no, there isn't," replied the old man. "I have cherished a secret contempt for this court for a long time, and I'm willing to pay for it."—Chicago News.

"I believe it to be the most effective remedy for the Stomach and Nerves in the market," is what Annie Patterson, of Sackville, N B., says of South American Nervine, for, she says, La Grippe and the complications which followed it left her next to dead with Indigestion, Dyspepsia and General Nervous Shattering. It cured her.—200

Anecdotal.

When the English barrister, Richard Eve, desired to "take silk"—or, in other words, to become a Queen's Counsel—he sent the usual note to the senior members on the circuit to see whether anyone objected, according to custom. Mr. Adam Walker, one of the senior members, replied as follows:—"My dear Eve,—You may take silk or a fig leaf. I don't care.—Adam."

Shortly after Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, R.A., was knighted, he and Lady Alma-Tadema gave an At Home at St. John's Wood. Everybody present was congratulating them, and one lady was very profuse. "Oh, dear Sir Lawrence," she said, "I am awfully glad to hear of the honor you have received. I suppose now that you are knighted you will give up painting and live like a gentleman."

In an Ohio town last fall, the African Methodist-Episcopal Church of that district held a conference, and for a week the town was filled with colored pulpit orators. A few days after the conference closed its sessions, one of the leading colored women of the town drove out to Pea Ridge to purchase chickens of an old mammy who had supplied the family for years. Aunt Hanna, coming to the gate, said: "I'm sorry, Miss Allie. I ain't got a chicken left. Dey all done enter de ministry.

A story is going the rounds about a prominent Nova Scotia lawyer who is noted for his carelessness in dress, which fact annoys the members of the Bar exceedingly. Entering the courtroom one day minus a cravat, the judge reproved him, saying the law required him to wear one. "Oh, yes, your honor. I know it," he answered; "but it does not say where he shall wear it," and as he spoke he pulled it out of his trousers pocket. The matter then dropped.

General William T. Sherman was fond of relating the following story: "When I was with the army in Georgia, a slave-owner about Christmas time missed a fine fat turkey. He suspected a good-looking mulatto, and ordered the man brought before him. 'You have stolen my turkey and eaten it,' said the irate planter. 'I'se not gwine to say I didn't, when you says I did, massa.' 'I ought to have you flogged. What have you to say why I should not punish you?' 'Well, massa, you hain't lost anything particular. You see, you has a little less turkey and a good deal more nigger.' And the master was compelled to acknowledge the philosophy of the slave, and let him go unwhipped."

As a young man Paul Kruger was regarded as an authority on psalm singing, and the farmers used to come to him to learn the keynote for starting the psalms at the next Sunday's service." Kruger, even in those days, was no believer in the policy of giving anything away—not even a note of music—so he had a uniform charge of a double handful of dried peaches for his instruction. Even the fact that the work was in the service of religion did not deter him from resorting to strategy, for he made a point of giving each applicant a different note. The result when the pious Doppers attempted to raise their voices in sacred harmony next Sunday may be imagined. The result was that each man concluded he had lost the key, and had to return for a further lesson. "I nearly bankrupted them of their dried peaches," said the president.

Ford Madox Brown, the artist, once had to be smuggled into his own exhibition. The occasion was a private view in Bond street of the Manchester fresco, "John Kay." The artist being unwell at the time was accompanied in his carriage to the gallery by his doctor and old friend, William Gill. The time passed pleasantly enough en route in conversation, when suddenly Madox Brown's talk came to an abrupt full stop; he started as though struck by some very disquieting thought, and wildly plunged round in his various pockets, blank dismay depicted on his countenance the while. "Good heavens, Gill!" he exclaimed, "I have forgotten my card of admission! What am I to do?" "Your card of admission!" replied his amazed friend, "surely you can get in without that?" "No, no," answered Madox Brown in despair, "they will never let me in—they don't know me!" Fortunately, however, Mr. Gill was provided with the necessary passport, and he thus played the distinctly original role of getting an artist admission into his own show.

Musical M.D.'s of the Future.

A PATIENT having been cured of smallpox by the witching strains of a violin, a contemporary thinks it not at all unlikely that it may ere long be discovered that music has a therapeutic value heretofore undreamed of. Music may in time become a most important branch of medical science, and the doctor of the future may, after diagnosing his case, take a violin or a cornet from his bag, as the case may demand, and render the wedding march from "Lohengrin," or Schubert's "Serenade," according to the progress the malady has made. Different tunes rendered on different instruments, in various tempos, may become necessary at critical moments, and this will naturally develop a new science—that of writing musical prescriptions. Musical boxes and orchestrions may yet be used in hospital-wards, and the shops in which sheet music and musical instruments are now dispensed are likely to be the drug stores of the future. Patent music is a possible successor of patent medicine, and we may yet take a five-minute dose of "Lanigan's Ball" adagio, or a seven-minute-and-a-half dose of Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words" andante, for our neuritis or neurosis. Medical music and medical science will be one, and the scalpel will be supplanted by the mandolin, and the clinical thermometer by the piccolo.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

She tore the letter into a thousand fragments, and ground them into the lilies of the velvet carpet beneath her heel.

But they must not be found there; they would bear witness against her.

She would place them in the grate, and make sure this letter was safely burned.

She had not noticed that a passing breeze caught up one of the fragments and bore it far beyond her reach; the rest she burned carefully this time.

In half an hour Aleck returned to her.

"What! not ready yet, my darling?" he said, caressing the lovely curly, golden hair. "Why, what is coming over my little Daisy? She used to be the soul of punctuality."

"I am not going, Aleck," she said. "You must go without me. I have a headache. I am going to lie down and rest."

"Then all pleasure in the drive is lost for me, dear," he said. "I will sit here with you."

"No, no, Aleck!" she cried. "You must not—indeed you must not! I want to be left alone—alone!"

She insisted so strongly that he should go that finally Aleck submitted.

"You must not hurry back, Aleck," she whispered—"indeed you must not!"

Aleck had been gone quite half an hour before he remembered that he had not given her the money he had in his breast pocket for her, and gave orders to return home at once.

She should not grieve one unnecessary moment, his beautiful, tender little Daisy, he thought, hurrying up the broad stairway two steps at a time.

He knocked gently, but there was no response; Daisy had evidently lain down to rest.

He intended laying the packet beside her, and quitting the boudoir without awakening her.

His amazement was great to find that she was not there.

What, gone! after telling him so emphatically she would not leave her room, she was too tired. Aleck was puzzled.

Had the letter she had received anything to do with her strange behavior?

Whom could it have been from?

He was just about turning away when a crumpled bit of paper on the floor caught his eye, and mechanically he stooped and picked it up, and as he smoothed it out he saw that there was writing on it.

As his eyes ran over the written scrap every vestige of color left his face.

Once, twice, thrice he read it through, leaning heavily against the marble mantel, every word seemed to dance in letters of fire before his mental vision. The bit of paper contained but these words.

"Will be at the corner of O and H avenues at three, prompt, this afternoon; do not fail to come."

The chirography was decidedly masculine. Who was it that dared write thus to Daisy?

Had she gone to keep the appointment? A thousand slumbering demons of jealousy awoke in his heart at the thought.

"I must—I will know the meaning of this!" he cried, smiting his forehead, on which the veins stood out like whip-cords, with his clinched hand. A moment more and he was in his carriage.

"Drive as quickly as you can to the corner of O and H avenues. You shall have double fare if you reach there in five minutes."

The man touched his whip to the horses, and the vehicle flew over the road to their destination, which was but a few blocks off.

"There is quite a crush of carriages ahead. I can get no nearer for a few moments yet, sir," said the driver, touching his hat respectfully, as he appeared for a moment at the door.

Aleck sprung from the coupe and hurriedly approached the corner on foot, and was just in time to see a flashily-dressed young fellow, who had been pacing restlessly up and down the pavement, hastily enter a coupe in response to the beckoning of a hand that was thrust through the window.

Aleck could almost have sworn, excited though he was, that the white hand was Daisy's; but all in a moment the coach door closed upon the man, and amidst the crush of vehicles he lost sight of the carriage.

For one moment Aleck stood like a man stricken dumb upon the pavement. Great God! what could it mean?

He would as soon think the angels up in heaven could be false, as little Daisy.

Had he not chosen her from the whole world of women for her simple purity?

Had he not loved her because she was as free from guile as a little child?

What could it mean?

He staggered back to his carriage, the fiery jealousy of the Hamiltons beating like burning lava through his veins.

"Do you see that coach ahead?" he cried hoarsely to his driver. "The one just ahead with the black horses attached to it?"

"Yes, sir," replied the man, rather startled at the white face and flashing eyes raised to his own.

"Overtake it—drive alongside of it."

The carriage, which indeed contained poor, hapless Daisy, and the man she had been forced, as it were, into an interview with, had moved quickly on toward the park.

It was no easy matter to drive alongside of it owing to the crush of vehicles.

"There is little use trying it, sir," declared the driver, at last, "unless you are willing that I should signal the driver of that other cab. Then it will stop and we can drive up."

"Loose no time in stopping it!" commanded Aleck, sharply.

What if it were Daisy within? He told himself, if it were, there would be bloodshed; there was nothing which could excuse it.

The cab ahead was signaled, and stopped, the carriage containing Aleck driving rapidly up. Another instant and they would be side by side.

The Wiles of Woman.

GEORGE AKERSIDE "did" the book reviews for the Tolchester "Courier," and wrote the more flippant editorials. He had a smart style, a general, if somewhat superficial, knowledge on a large number of subjects, and was looked upon by many of his brother journalists as a coming man. George himself thought that he was the coming man. His reviews were conceded by all but the authors interested to be quite amusing, and the "Courier" had justly obtained a name for merciless use of the literary pillory. When George Akerside got hold of a really bad book he exulted as a strong man about to run a race, and such was the feeling which possessed him as he turned over the leaves of "Her Heart a Target," by Mona Mulready. The fact that the author was a woman did not weigh with him one iota. The book was trash unadulterated, with an occasional soupcon of mild impropriety, and abounded in opportunities for the exercise of his peculiar gift. Slipshod grammar, ill-constructed sentences, and glaring improbability of plot, he handled with the light and graceful touch of an expert, and when he conned his review over, before consigning it to the hands of the printer, he felt with a glow of satisfaction that he had surpassed himself. He read it to the managing editor, who laughed heartily, and said it was rather a shame to handle a woman's first attempt without gloves.

"Gloves be hanged!" replied George. "There are too many fancying they can write nowadays. Anything that will discourage that sort of people, irrespective of sex, is a positive boon to humanity."

"You wrote a novel yourself, once, George, didn't you?" asked the managing editor, rather unkindly, and the reviewer went away without replying, for his work had proved a painfully slow sale, and he disliked to be reminded of it.

When George Akerside had concluded his Saturday's work by a personal supervision of the make-up of "Timely Book Chat," in which his review of Mona Mulready's novel occupied a leading place, he decided to treat himself to a few hours of recreation, and betook himself to Springfield Park, a summer resort, lying within a few miles of Tolchester. He was not a person of strong gregarious instincts, but was by no means averse to agreeable feminine society at times, and when he encountered an old friend, a Mrs. Walthorpe, accompanied by one extremely pretty girl, and one particularly plain one, he readily accepted an invitation to join the party. Mrs. Walthorpe introduced him to her companions as the literary critic of the "Courier," and George noticed that both girls regarded him with appreciative interest, in which a flattering infusion of alarm at contact with so eminent a literary personage was apparent.

In order to dispel any consciousness of inferiority on the part of the young ladies, George laid himself out to be agreeable, and succeeded so well that before long he found himself tete-a-tete with Miss Katharine Garniture, the pretty one, and conversing on terms of delightful familiarity.

Although she did not say so in so many words, Miss Garniture deftly conveyed the impression that she felt herself highly honored by his attentions, and, being a clever girl, as well as a pretty one, made such good use of her opportunities that George began seriously to doubt whether his frequently-expressed views on the advantages of a bachelor existence were not based upon radically unsound premises. He eagerly accepted Mrs. Walthorpe's suggestion that he should remain for tea at her cottage, and when, at the conclusion of the meal, that lady suggested that Miss Garniture should show him a darling little bit of scenery up the river, he felt that she was a friend worth having.

"It must be a terrible thing to be a literary critic," said Miss Garniture.

They had inspected the scenery, which George, looking hard at Miss Garniture's blushing countenance the while, had pronounced one of the most perfect pieces of God's handiwork he had ever seen, and now they were drifting comfortably down the slow current, the girl idly dabbling her hand in the water and George leaning on his oars watching her.

"Why do you think it is so terrible?" asked George, indulgently. Really this girl was charming.

"You are so horribly severe," she replied. "I always turn to 'Book Chat' the first thing when I get the Sunday paper. I cannot help laughing over the reviews, but I cannot help feeling sorry for the poor authors, and—and I am afraid."

"Why should you fear?" said the young man, laughing. "You are not an authoress, are you?"

Miss Garniture blushed in evident embarrassment. She withdrew her hand from the water, and fell to examining a massive diamond and sapphire ring.

"You ought to feel for me," she said at last, in a low voice. "You are an author yourself. I—I read the 'Throes of a World,' and I liked it so much. I seemed to feel a strong man's life throbbing through it."

"And what did you think of the character of Alan Despard?" asked George, glad to find someone who had read and appreciated his magnum opus.

"I thought he was just too lovely for anything," replied the girl, enthusiastically.

"Oh!" said George, blankly. Alan Despard was the villain of the book, and the author had done his best to paint him in the blackest of color.

"But, tell me," he continued, swallowing his discomfiture, "why are you so interested in the book reviews? Have you tried your hand at authorship?"

Once more the girl blushed divinely, and shot a fleeting, tremulous glance at the young man out of an entrancing pair of violet eyes.

"Have you?" she said, softly, with her gaze once more on the water. "Have you read a book called 'Her Heart a Target,' by Mona Mulready? Good gracious! Why are you beginning to row so fearfully hard?"

"I have just remembered an appointment," cried George, in great agitation. "A most important appointment. I must get to town at once!" He stopped rowing for a moment to look at his watch, and thrust it back into his pocket with a something that sounded very much like an oath.

"If you are in such a desperate hurry," said Miss Garniture, sweetly, "you can save time by landing at that little point and taking a short cut through the wood to the street car line. I don't mind rowing home by myself in the least. I am often out here alone. We can finish our conversation some other time, you know," she added.

"If you wouldn't mind," said George, dubiously, as he headed the boat for the shore. "It is really important, you know."

"I am quite vain enough to believe that it must be," Miss Garniture replied, with a smile that completely finished her companion.

"And I may call and see you again?" George asked, as he sprang ashore.

"I shall be delighted. It is so seldom that a girl has the opportunity of talking to a clever man."

"Monday afternoon?" hazarded George, intensely flattered.

"Monday, by all means," Miss Garniture replied, "but hurry. I should never forgive myself if you missed an appointment on my account."

She watched him out of sight, waving her handkerchief as he turned to look back at a bend in the path, and then she pushed the boat off, and rowed leisurely homeward, smiling softly to herself.

"Well," queried Mrs. Walthorpe, as Katharine entered the little sitting-room.

"It is well," replied the girl. Then she burst out laughing, and went up to her own room.

The foreman of the composing-room was superintending the locking-up of the last form of the supplement when George Akerside made a headlong entrance.

"Is the 'Book Chat' page broken up?" he asked, between gasps.

"No, it ain't," replied the foreman, "but the plate's on the press, and we start running in fifteen minutes."

"Thank God!" cried George. "You'll have to cast a new plate. I've got to make some alterations in one of the reviews. Now, it's no use kicking, old man. We can't let it go the way it stands and hold our jobs."

He snatched a handful of proofs from a hook, and, disregarding the uncomplimentary remarks of the outraged foreman, rushed down to his office.

It is no easy matter to convert curses into blessings at a few minutes' notice, and so George found to his cost, as he ran his eye over the devastating sentences of his review. The beginning was not promising. "While 'Her Heart a Target' can scarcely be called a welcome addition to modern literature, Miss Mulready has undoubtedly deserved the thanks of a large number of literary aspirants. She has demonstrated that there exist publishers who are apparently willing to accept a work on the unsupported recommendation of the author."

With a few scratches of the pen he changed this to read: "'Her Heart a Target' can, without flattery, be called a welcome addition to modern literature, and Miss Mulready has undoubtedly earned the thanks of a large number of intelligent readers." There were certain passages which defied all attempts at remodeling, and had to be eliminated altogether, particularly a collection of paragraphs, carefully culled from the work, and prefaced by an introduction to the effect that "The following extracts, selected at random, may be fairly quoted as examples of the author's style."

By these excisions the review was abbreviated to about one-half its original length, but what was left was crammed so full of effusive commendation that George could not help wondering, in the midst of his relief, what the managing editor would say when he read it. He handed the proofs to the foreman, soothed his irritation with a couple of choice cigars, and a little judiciously administered flattery, and went home to enjoy, in anticipation, his approaching interview with the charming Miss Garniture.

To the managing editor on Monday morning George candidly confessed the reason for his sudden change of front, and that gentleman, who, beneath a matter-of-fact exterior, hid the workings of a romantic soul, cheerfully bade him "Go in and win."

"It's high time you were getting married, George," he said, "and you might drop in to-night and let me know, on the quiet, how things are going."

When George reached the Walthorpe cottage, he found Miss Garniture alone in the sitting-room, with the "Courier" supplement in her hand. She greeted him with charming cordiality.

"How good you are," she said. "I have just been reading over your review for the tenth time. You do put things so nicely. Do you know, I have a strong suspicion that you rushed off in such a hurry on Saturday night on purpose to write that article. Now, confess."

"We were intending to keep it for next Sunday," George replied, disingenuously, "but I felt sure that you would be anxious to see what we had to say about the book. I am glad you are pleased."

"It is just lovely," replied the girl. "If I ever write a book, I hope you will review it."

"'If you ever write a book!'" echoed George, laughing. "Why, you have written a book, haven't you?"

"I?" replied the girl. "Good gracious, no! What makes you think that? I couldn't write a book to save my life."

"Do you mean to say," cried the young man, gasping in bewilderment, "that you are not Mona Mulready?"

"But you said on Saturday night—"

"I never said that I was the author, surely, Mr. Akerside, but I did want you to know that I was interested in the book. It was written by a—by a very dear friend of mine."

"Then I may still be happy in the thought that I have rendered you a slight service?" said George, somewhat relieved.

"A great service, Mr. Akerside," replied the girl. "You have no idea how anxious he and I both are that his book should be a success."

"He!" cried George. "Do you mean to say that Mona Mulready is a man!"

"Isn't it an absurd nom-de-plume?" replied Miss Garniture, "but Edward insisted that women's books were more popular just now. I don't know that I ought to have told you, but I am sure you will not talk about it."

George laughed bitterly. "I am the last person likely to talk about it," he said. "May I ask when Edward—I don't know his other name—is likely

Man as an Incarnation.

PEOPLE of a materialistic frame of mind, to whom man is but a machine, says an editorial writer in the "Hospital," are apt to put on one side all that cannot be weighed and measured as not only inexplicable or unthinkable, but as quite beyond the range of reasonable discussion. Such people are advised to attend a meeting of the Society for Psychical Research for "a change of scene." What they will see is thus described:

"There they will find people, quite as convinced as they are of their own sanity, and quite as content as they can possibly be with the correctness of their own interpretation of things, asserting the most astounding propositions, without turning a hair. To those who are so self-centered as to think that there is something cranky about all who do not see as they do, it is a wholesome awakening to find good, solid, comfortable, and respectable people believing in telepathy as a thing indisputable, and holding that man, as we see him engaged in his various more or less ignoble pursuits, in the city and elsewhere, is but the incarnation of one little bit of himself as he exists in an intangible and ethereal form. At the last meeting of the Psychical Research Society, Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., said that he did not hold that the whole of any one of us was incarnated in their terrestrial bodies; certainly not in childhood; more, but perhaps not so very much more, in adult life. What was manifest was only a definite portion of a much larger whole. What the rest was doing during the years spent here he did not know. Perhaps it was asleep; but probably, he said, it was not entirely asleep with men of genius, nor perhaps was it all completely inactive with people called mediums. Now to the modern materialist all this is absolute 'rot.' Yet Dr. Lodge is not exactly a man to pooh-pooh. Indeed, may not the immaterialists retort that this is a Christian country and that our very religion teaches us not to weigh and measure too exactly? Again, Roentgen, Tesla, and Marconi have of late been giving many shocks to old ideas. At any rate, this is clear that we must not too rigidly put outside the bounds of sanity belief in the unthinkable. It is a queer world, and which half of it is sane appears still undecided."

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 13 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 2 1-2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 3 1-3 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After jogging along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented shoals for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing, off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 82. There were 198 new cases in September, 369 in October, 478 in November, 904 in December and 1,295 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. At present the plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

A Cheerful Prophecy.

THE animal that cannot be trained to keep its wits about it on the approach of a motor car must disappear. Its stupidity, filth, sloth, fear of everything and useless size prove to the most conservative that it must go. The horse that will not stand a motor car may be the delight of its owner, but it is a public nuisance and a public danger, and ought to be shot like a mad dog. Horsemen have no right to bring unmanageable brutes into the public highways, to the public danger, and it is time this elementary justice should be recognized. The motor is going to become the means of locomotion for all light transit, and by the ordinary roads as they exist to-day. It is the pedestrian and the horse that have got to give way. The horse in traffic, if he chooses to bolt, is uncontrollable. The motor, from the lightest bicycle to the heaviest car, is perfectly controllable, occupies half the space, and travels now through the congested streets at double and treble the speed of any horse-drawn vehicle. The only thing the two have in common is that at times they both refuse to go.

The unobservant talk of the accidents that would happen. The accidents will be a great deal fewer in number. A conclusive proof of this, to any one with any sense, is the fact that in the thousand miles tour no one, I believe, was hurt, though the roads were lined with spectators. In the race from Paris to Berlin, three days, and the tour around Italy, ten days, but two children were killed, the result entirely of their own carelessness or that of their parents. Suppose, for a moment, that in France a hundred and ten teams, or, rather, droves, of horses—there were a hundred and ten motors—ranging from fifty in a bunch down to two—this was the horse-power of the machines—had been let loose and driven at top speed for three days on the public roads. Will anyone tell me that thousands of people would not have been killed, that hundreds of drivers would not have lost their lives as well? But that would have been described as sport. . . . The only danger to be feared from the motor car is to its own driver, the only drawback is its own imperfection. Read the reports of automobile accidents: proportionately, there are far fewer than from any other form of locomotion, and in nine cases out of ten the accident occurs to the driver or the occupant of the car; in the tenth case it is owing to the stupidity or the carelessness of the person who gets in front. The average pedestrian has simply got to learn to keep out of the way, and that is the end of it.—Joseph Pennell in "Contemporary Review."

The hospitality of Scotland is quite as well established as the hospitality of Ireland, but the canniness of the Scot, which has passed into a proverb, is likely to assert itself at any stage. As the Scotsman tells this story, it cannot be suspected of proving false to his own countrymen:

An Irish friend insisted that a Scotsman should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the car fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last glass.

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents, scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Beckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"YOU MEAT EATERS"

The Baltimore Man Says Things

You meat eaters who are ailing in any sort of way might take a valuable hint from the following:

A gentleman in Baltimore writes, "For a long time I steadily ran down because of an intense pain in my side, and also in the pit of my stomach. I was miserable and everything I ate caused distress. I fell away from 185 pounds to 150, Lost all my ambition for work, was drowsy all of the time, felt tired in the morning as I did upon going to bed at night.

I was a steady meat eater three times a day for several years. Somebody told me that if I would change my diet and take Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food at two meals in the day I would improve. I made the experiment and in less than two weeks began to improve very rapidly. My appetite came back, and I slept better than I had for months.

I used Grape-Nuts both at breakfast and lunch, and ate a little meat for dinner, but not much. I discovered that a few teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts would furnish more nourishment than quantities of meat.

My improvement has continued until now I weigh 195 pounds, which is a gain of about 45 pounds in five months, and I feel in magnificent condition. Please do not publish my name if you use this letter, but I will gladly tell any person of the benefits received if self addressed stamped envelope is sent." SUFFERED THREE YEARS. CATARRH OF STOMACH.

MISS EVELYN MORSE

Miss Evelyn Morse writes from 651 Adams Street, Minneapolis, Minn., as follows:

"I suffered for nearly three years with catarrh of the stomach which no medicine seemed to relieve, until a friend advised me to try Peruna. Although skeptical, I tried it, and found it helped me within the first week. I kept taking it for three months, and am pleased to say that it cured me entirely, and I have had no symptoms of its return. I am only too glad to recommend it."—EVELYN MORSE.

Adis Brittain, of Sekitan, O., writes: "After using your wonderful Peruna three months, I have had great relief. I had continual heaviness in my stomach, was bilious, and had fainting spells, but they all have left me since using Peruna. I can now get around and do my housework, and think Peruna the greatest medicine I ever used."—Adis Brittain.

Mrs. Lizzie Blevins, 102 Bolivar street, Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I candidly feel Peruna was the means of saving my life, for I suffered for months from catarrh of the stomach. Two bottles of Peruna cured me."—Mrs. Lizzie Blevins.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENT PRAISES THE CANADIANS

London, April 21 — The telegraphic accounts are at hand of the fight with Delarey's forces on March 31, in which the Canadian Mounted Rifles suffered so severely and distinguished themselves so gallantly. The London papers are full of compliments of the Canadians. The Daily Express heads its account, "Gallant Stand Made by the Canadians;" the Daily Chronicle speaks of "Splendid Canadian Valor;" the pro-Boer Morning Leader refers to the "Heroic stand by a party of Canadian Rifles." The Daily Telegraph in its editorial comment on the engagement says, "Above all, the Canadian Rifles, still proving themselves worthy of the renown of Paardeberg, stood their ground with heroic gallantry, one party, under Lieut. Bruce Carruthers, fighting until every single man was either dead or wounded." The Times said editorially, "The further account of the fight with Delarey, which reaches us to-day, shows how severely the action was contested, and fully confirms earlier reports as to the splendid conduct of the Canadian Mounted Rifles under Colonel Evans. The regiment, as their commander, with the modesty of a true soldier, observes in his report to the Dominion Minister of Militia, "have undergone a severe test, and have acquitted themselves most creditably." The mother country is proud to hear the well-earned congratulations on their conduct which Lord Roberts has added to those of Mr. Chamberlain. They had comrades worthy of them in the field. Though they bore the brunt of the attack, the 28th Mounted Infantry and the Royal Horse Artillery showed a fine coolness and discipline in very trying conditions."

DAILY MAIL'S STORY.

It is strange that in none of the telegrams is any reference made to the fate of Bruce Carruthers. The Daily Mail published the following.

The Canadians who took such a prominent part in the last engagement with General Delarey are just out of Canada. Twenty per cent are old hands who rejoined after a short holiday.

The contingent is described as a magnificent body of men and is under Col. Cookson. (The latter is evidently the brigade commandant.)

THE TIMES' ACCOUNT.

Kekewich's Headquarters, (30 miles south of Lichtenburg, April 21—Acting on intelligence supplied by Col. Woole-Sampson, Colonel Kekewich moved with Colonel Grenfell's and Col. Von Donop's columns on the night of the 31st to supply the main body of the Boers under Delarey, who were known to be near the junction of the Great and Small Harts Rivers. It was arranged that General Walter Kitchener should co-operate, moving west from his camp on the Small Harts River to the south end of Barberspan. The same afternoon, however, part of General Kitchener's force, sent out on a reconnaissance under Colonels Cookson and Keir, became heavily engaged with the enemy, and the force was consequently unable to co-operate with Kekewich. Distant gun firing was heard at this camp before the force moved in the evening, and a report received as the columns were starting that Cookson was engaged with the enemy made it unlikely that the Boers would remain where they had been located. But our movement was carried out, and after a night march of over thirty miles Kekewich reached Barberspan to find that the main body of the Boers had left.

According to information given by natives, it was Kemp who attacked Cookson, and after being driven off sent to Delarey for reinforcements. Delarey immediately collected all his available men and started with the avowed intention of attacking Cookson and Keir at night. If the threat was not carried out it was probably due to the fact, that delarey found them too strong.

According to later information Delarey has gone south.

A large quantity of stock and waggons had been collected at Barberspan. But Delarey gave the order to disperse on receiving news of Kemp's engagement, and nearly all had disappeared before the arrival of Kekewich's column's. Nine prisoners, however, were captured, besides 20 waggons and some hundreds of cattle.

The force bivouacked at the junction of the Small and Great Harts rivers, and, after a drenching night, returned to this camp, having covered 70 miles during the time they had been absent.

REUTER TELLS OF THE FIGHT

Reuter's special service furnished this story of the battle:

News has been received of an action between Delarey's forces, under the immediate command of Kemp and Potgieter and a British force, consisting of two columns commanded respectively by Colonel Keir and Colonel Cookson, the former comprising the newly-raised Artillery Mounted Rifles, and the latter the last Canadian contingent, Damant's Horse and two squadrons of Yeomanry. The scene of action was a farm called Doornbalt, a few miles south of the place where Delarey fought his successful engagement with Lord Methuen. The result is a distinct blow to the prestige of Delarey, who twice within a fortnight has suffered serious loss.

Further details state that Colonel Cookson's and Colonel Keir's columns, while reconnoitering towards Hart River, came upon the spoor of guns, and got into touch with the enemy. A long running fight ensued in a thick, scrubby country. On the columns coming into the open ground, large reinforcements for the Boers appeared and attacked both flanks with great determination. Our force hastily entrenched and took up the defence. The enemy pushed close up, but our men, behaving with great steadiness, poured in a heavy fire, and the Boers flinched and retreated, in spite of the efforts of their leaders to renew the attack.

Delarey and Kemp were both present, and personally urged their followers on, but the enemy had suffered too seriously for more fighting. They, therefore, abandoned the attack and hastily retired.

All arms behaved with magnificent steadiness, the 28th Mounted Infantry doing excellent work, while the new Canadian Rifles maintained the reputation of their countrymen, one party under Lieutenant Carruthers sticking to their position until every man was killed or wounded. The Royal Horse Artillery Rifles showed imperturbable steadiness, allowing the enemy to approach to very close quarters, and then driving them back with a well-directed rifle fire.

FURTHER DETAILS

Klerksdorp, April 21.—Gen. Walter Kitchener on March 30 sent out Colonel Cookson on a reconnaissance in the direction of Doornbalt. Numbers of Boers were seen, and, the object of the reconnaissance being attained, Colonel Cookson returned to camp. On the 31st Colonels Cookson's and Keir's columns went out again in the same direction, and it was arranged that the main column should follow. Early in the day the reconnoitring columns got on the track of the Boers, and also of their guns. After they had driven scattered parties of Boers in front of them, large bodies of the enemy appeared on both flanks.

Anticipating an attack, Colonel Cookson waited for the convoy to come up, and then made preparations for defence, the position which he selected being open ground on the right bank of the Brakspruit, some twelve or fifteen miles south of Delarey's recent fight with Lord Methuen, farm houses on the right and left flanks being utilized.

Damant's Horse occupied the right front and the 28th Mounted Infantry the right flank, while on the left front were the 17th Mounted Infantry and the 2?th Mounted Infantry, with Kitchener's Fighting Scouts on the left flank. Canadians, under Col. Evans, held the extreme front, and Royal Horse Artillery Mounted Rifles the extreme rear.

The Boers opened the attack with three guns and a Pom-Pom, at one o'clock, from the left front, at a range of 6,000 yards, while a general attack was made from all sides. The Boer rifle fire and gun practice were excellent, but the shells did not burst well. Their effect, however, was to stampede the mules carrying provisions. The mules bolted from the main column in the direction of the 28th Mounted Infantry, who moved out to intercept them, Damant's Horse acting as a support.

The latter, however, were bearing the brunt of a severe attack, and had to fall back, now exposing the 28th Mounted Infantry to a still heavier fire. The force, which had all the sick in its charge, accomplished the move in perfect order.

The Boers advanced close to the Royal Horse Artillery, who were in support under cover of a farmhouse calmly waiting for the Boers until they were at close range, when they poured in a steady rifle fire, driving the enemy back. The Canadians in front were attacked by strong numbers, but gallantly repelled every attempt made by the Boers to get through. One party fought until all were killed and wounded. The last man, though mortally wounded, emptied his two bandoliers, and then broke his rifle to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy.

Our guns succeeded in silencing one Boer gun, while our forces, now in close order, repelled the determined efforts which the Boers continued to make under the personal exhortations of their leaders. Towards night the Boer fire slackened and finally ceased, and the enemy retired. The Boer losses are not known, but they must have been heavy. Our doctors saw 13 dead in one place, and the Boers' ambulance was seen making numerous trips. It is supposed that the Boers had concentrated to trek north, but it is not certain. They were certainly a strong force, numbering fully 2,500.

Our losses were also heavy. The stretcher-bearers, cooly carrying in the wounded under a heavy fire, behaved with great gallantry. The Canadians were very conspicuous, while the 28th Mounted Infantry and Royal Horse Artillery showed splendid discipline and steadiness.

THE CASUALTIES.

A comparison of the casualty lists as published in the English papers on the authority of the War Office, shows that the despatch sent to the Governor-General was correct in every detail, so that the mail does not bring any additional particulars on that point.

Gen. Pearson Calls on Boer Sympathizers to Aid in Investigation

New Orleans, April 21.—Gen. Pearson, the South African burgher, returned from Washington to-day in response to a telegraphed request from Col. Crowder, who is conducting the government investigation into the alleged British army post at Chalmette, immediately upon getting here Gen. Pearson inserted advertisements calling upon all Boer sympathizers who might possess information touching the conduct of the British camp to meet him in the offices of his lawyers.

Gen. Pearson said he had been excellently received at Washington, and that sentiment there had recently grown very strong for the Boers. Referring to the peace talk in the papers, would be any successful issue of the negotiations, Gen. Pearson will see Col. Crowder during the day.

Col. Crowder said to-day that the reports that were sent over the country last night that he had decided against the British camp here were entirely imaginary so far as he was concerned, and that he had made absolutely no statements of his conclusions by inference or otherwise. Col. Crowder is keeping three typewriters busy in his office to-day.

Birthday of Famous Woman—Lord Kelvin to be Honored

London, April 20 — Baroness Burdett-Coutts, the millionaire philanthropist, was showered with congratulations to-day on having reached her eighty-eighth birthday. There were a number of callers at her residence, all of whom were received and welcomed, although the health of the baroness has not been of the best during the past year. King Edward's congratulations, in the form of an autograph letter, were delivered by special messenger. The baroness is looking forward eagerly to the approaching coronation which she hopes to attend as she attended the crowning of Queen Victoria.

It is now more than a score of years since the baroness created surprise by taking for a helpmate the present Mr. Burdett-Coutts, who was William Lehmar Ashmead Bartlett, some time her private secretary. She was then 67 and he 29, but in the intervening years he has aged relatively far more than she. He has $200,000 a year settled on him.

BOXING

London, April 21—Jabez White and Bill Chester, the well-known featherweights, are slated to come together before the National Sporting Club to-night and keen interest is manifested in the result. The articles call for a ten round bout for a purse of $500 and a side bet of a similar amount.

MISS STONE LECTURING

Boston, Mass., April 21 — Miss Ellen M. Stone, the Missionary who was kidnapped and held for ransom by brigands, makes her debut as a lecturer here to-night. Miss Stone has been engaged to deliver 100 lectures in the leading cities of the country. The entire proceeds of the lectures, it is said, will be devoted to returning her ransom money, $69,000, and to her missionary work.

TO HONOR LORD KELVIN

New York, April 21 — The American Institute of Electrical Engineers and other scientific societies of New York will unite this evening in giving a reception in honor of Lord Kelvin, Past President of the Royal Society and one of the foremost of England's men of science, who came to this country to attend the installation of President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University.

The affair will be in the nature of a farewell demonstration as it is hardly probable that Lord Kelvin will ever visit America again. He is now more than 76 years old and quite feeble. Lord Kelvin, when 24, was elected Professor of Physics in the University of Glasgow, a chair which he occupies still. He was knighted in 1866 at the laying of the first cable, with which he was identified, and was created Lord Kelvin in 1892. His chief inventions have been the mirror galvanometer, the siphon recorder and the improved mariner's compass. He has elaborated also the work of Joule, his lifelong friend.

DUFFY VS. COUHIG

Chicago, Ill., April 21—Martin Duffy of Chicago and Tom Couhig of Dunkirk meet in a six round bout to-night before a local club. The men are regarded as evenly matched and as they have been anxious to meet in the ring for some time a lively set-to is expected.

FEAST OF THE PASSOVER

New York, April 21 — To-day ushers in one of the most strictly observed of all Jewish holidays, known as Pesach, and commonly called the Passover, or Jewish Easter. This holiday is observed throughout the world by orthodox and reformed alike by the change in the daily diet. Everything leavened is removed, and only unleavened food is consumed. The holiday is observed during one entire week, and during that time "matzos" take the place of bread, and all pastry is made from matzos and potato flour. The matzos is a large, round cracker, which is made of flour and water and baked hard and crisp.

Family reunions are among the pleasant features of the holiday, and members who may be absent from home during the entire year, appear at the family fireside during the celebration. The poor also are given special attention, and every family which is unable to secure the necessary food is furnished with enough for their wants by some one of the many charitable organizations.

WILD WEST SHOW

New York, April 21 — At Madison Square Garden this week Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show begins a season which will be its last in America, for several years at least. At the conclusion of its engagement in this city the show will go across the continent, taking in Arizona and other Western states which gave birth to the life it pictures, and for the first time in its eighteen years of existence will visit the Pacific coast states. With the close of the season the show will be taken abroad for a stay of possibly two years. Barnum & Bailey's circus will then close its long engagement in Europe and return to America.

ROMANCE IN AN EGG SHELL

Hoboken, N.J., April 21 — Jacob Miller, of Woodcliffe, near here, leaves on a motorcycle to-day for Annapolis, Ill., where he will see for the first time a pretty seventeen year old girl, Miss Edna Busby, whom he will make his wife. The young people have conducted a courtship by letter for the past six months. A hen's egg figures very prominently in the little romance. The girl's father is the owner of an egg packing establishment, and one day the daughter wrote her name and address on the shell of an egg before it was put in the case for shipment. The box containing the egg went to a Woodcliffe grocer. Miller was helping in the store and in opening the box noticed the inscription on the egg. He wrote a letter to the young woman, and to his surprise received a reply. The correspondence developed into a courtship which will culminate in a wedding when young Miller reaches the end of his cycle journey.

MAY EXACT BIG FORFEIT.

New York, April 21—The extension of time granted the John A. Roebling Sons' Company for the spinning of the carrying cables in the new East river bridge expired to-day, and if Commissioner Lindenthal, of the Department of Bridges, adheres to his expressed determination he will force the company to pay the city the $1,000 per day penalty provided for overtime. It is estimated that the work cannot be completed under six months, and on this basis it is computed that the penalties would amount to $112,000.

PRIMROSE DAY

London, April 19 — Primrose Day, the anniversary of the death of Lord Beaconsfield, who died April 19, 1881, was observed throughout the country to-day with customary zeal. About two-thirds of the people to be seen in the streets of London wore primroses in their buttonholes. The flowers were thick everywhere and the Beaconsfield statue was even more elaborately bedecked than usual. Beautiful wreaths, shields, crowns and other tokens from clubs and Unionist organizations were scattered in profusion around its base, attracting thousands of spectators. Numerous wreaths were placed also about the grave of the statesman in Hughendon churchyard. This evening several notable banquets were held in various parts of the country in observance of the anniversary.

Kingston, April 19.—The following letter was received by Robert Lawler of this city from Pte. A. Robinson, 20 Troop 'E' Division, South Africa Constabulary, South Africa:—

"Wonderfontein, Feb. 27,1902. — We are now camped at a place called Wonderfontein, guarding the line of communication between Vet River station and Hoopstadt. The British force has not been in Hoopstadt very long. The night they went in they captured two Boers who were on lookout on the church spire. Yesterday they came in under the white flag and surrendered. They said they were sick of the war, and they claim that the Boer commanders are starting to talk to the men of surrender.

"It looks just at present that the war will be over before long. I think it will be over by July 1st. You as you want now, but about six months ago you did not have to look for it. You could get it any old time. During Christmas week we captured 100 Boers and a week later 35. The British method of blockhouses is a great success. They don't have to send men when they want convoys escorted. That work falls on the blockhouses, the convoys passing close to them. The British have also taken in all Boers and Kaffir refugees off the farms they come to. They also take all stock, and destroy everything they can't take.

"The British captured last month a man by the name of Page. He is accused of several murders and also of blowing up an hospital train. He was taken prisoner twice and escaped both times. I think he will be shot. Major-General Baden-Powell went through here yesterday.

"I will tell you of an incident that happened the other night. I was awakened out of my peaceful slumbers about midnight by the sentry, who said there were

Mounted Men Approaching

"I got up. Seeing the objects who were supposed to be mounted men I said to him, "Fire one shot over their heads and see what they will do." He did so, and they started out in extended order. I then gave the order volley firing ready. After we had fired six volleys I crept outside the wire entanglement and saw some one running up the road. We went down and found it was a mule shot outright, and three were wounded, which had to be shot in the morning. They were six in all, and out of the six four were killed. Gen. Baden-Powell asked me about the shooting, and he said we were good shots. He only wished they were Boers.

"Remember me to all the Kingston boys. I have saved $300 this year, and hope to do better next. The reason I have not saved more is on account of foodstuff being so high.

London, April 19.—The Times contradicts the rumors of the purchase of steamship lines for the North Atlantic trade, and "wild statements" of wholesale transfer of fleets from the British flag to that of the United States. The Times says it is in a position to state definitely that an arrangement is being completed under which British shipping will be able to make a good bargain, and strengthen our present prospective position in the Atlantic trade. "It will be gratifying to the British public," says The Times, "to be assured that the arrangement involves no change in the flag and little or no change in management. In England the interests of the consolidation will be looked after by men intimately connected with shipping all their lives, and who will have the advantage of working in conjunction with the ablest shipping men in America and Germany' so that it is a real combination of shipping interests from which advantages will accrue to shareholders, travellers and shippers.

A BILLION MINUTES ELAPSED.

London, April 19.—Camille Flammarion announced at a meeting of the French Astronomical Society that one billion minutes had elapsed at ten minutes past six on the evening of the eighteenth since the beginning of the Christian era, January 1st, in the year one, being the starting point of the calculation.

UNEASINESS AMONG CHINESE

London, April 20.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Times says he is informed by an exalted Chinese official that recent despatches from Pekin indicate uneasiness in responsible quarters, on account of the anti-foreign feeling of troops in the north.

Montreal April 19.— The New York Central express which arrived at Windsor street depot yesterday brought 150 immigrants for the Northwest. This brings the number of new arrivals who have gone through Montreal this week for the prairie lands of the Dominion up to 2,000.

After this week the bulk of the immigrants for the Canadian West will come to Montreal by steamer. Up to the present time the immigration this season has been of the most gratifying character. The Canadian Pacific, Intercolonial, and Grand Trunk trains from St. John, N.B., Halifax, and Portland, Me., have brought up twice as many prospective settlers from the British Isles and the Continent of Europe as reached here last year at this date.

The immigration to Canada by way of New York has been exceptionally heavy, the arrival of from three to five car loads on the New York morning train being no unusual thing.

It has been noted, too, that the men are of a better class than usual, owing to the increasing efficiency in selection which has resulted from the personally conducted parties.

The immigration officials here state that the immigration from the Central States of the Union into Canada has been greater than has ever been known.

It is expected that the steamers due in Montreal next week will bring between to settle in the Dominion. There will be 700 Scandinavians, who are going up to the Clergue undertakings at Sault Ste. Marie. Altogether the season is expected to prove the best ever known in the history of the Dominion.

FATAL LAUGHTER.

New York, April 19.— Dr. Nathaniel M. Freeman, a wealthy retired physician of this city, died suddenly in the Archenomml Club, from heart disease. He had been playing chess when somebody told a funny story. Dr. Freeman was so convulsed with laughter that he was unable to resume the game. Suddenly he launched forward and died.

New York, April 19.—Structural steel manufacturers have advanced prices for immediate delivery $3 to $5 a ton over quotations recently current, says the Journal of Commerce, and the supply of steel billets throughout the country is so small that manufacturers are compelled to go abroad to purchase supplies for their mills. There is no famine as yet, although prevailing conditions, it is reported, make an approximation to the same. The scarcity of materials is particularly felt by small manufacturers, although the United States Steel Corporation also feels the lack of a necessary supply of billets.

The situation has a particular bearing on the question of steel rail supply. It is stated that the wants of the railroads will necessitate a much larger importation of rails this year than for some years past.

All the mills are practically booked for the entire year, and it will be found that more business will be carried from this year's books into 1903 than was carried from last year into 1902. The rail pool shows no intention at present of advancing prices.

HOLLAND'S QUEEN IN A CRITICAL CONDITION

Passed a Comparatively Easy Night and Is Still Conscious--Gloom Among the People

The Hague, April 21, 4.30a.m. The condition of Queen Wilhelmina remains practically unchanged. She does not lose consciousness, and has taken a little nourishment.

The heir-presumptive to the throne is a German Prince of the Orange blood, but the succession is understood. The Dutch constitution provides that, in default of a legal heir, the sovereign and States-General shall designate a successor. This has not been done, and the States-General will exercise the right of selection in case of the Queen's death.

A German Prince under the influence of Berlin will be distasteful to the Dutch people as a successor to the throne. The anti-British feeling caused by the Boer war has done something to mitigate Dutch prejudice, but has not overcome it. Queen Emma is popular with all classes, and may be made Regent.

Vessel Burned to the Waters Edge

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 21, 4.30 a.m. Reports from Olmstead, Ills. says that the Cincinnati and Memphis packet, City of Pittsburg, a large side wheeler, burned to the waters edge, near Turners Landing, to-day. When the City of Pittsburg left Cincinnati last Wednesday night for Memphis she had 21 passengers and a crew more than sixty. The local officers of the packet company say that some of these passengers have since reached their destination and others had been taken aboard during the past three days at points down the river, some of the passengers were from Pittsburg and other up the river points, even the names of the passengers who started from Cincinnati are not obtained, as the only register kept was in the pursers office on the steamer.

THE UNITED STATES TO ANNEX ENGLAND

At Least This is What Andrew Carnegie Would Like to See

AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS TALK.

And Believe That such a Union of English Speaking People is Possible

Special to the Times.

Louisville, Ky., April 21 — Mr. Andrew Carnegie thinks well of Cecil Rhodes' ambition for a union of all English-speaking peoples, but he does not agree with the South African Empire-builder, that these peoples should go to England. On the contrary, he says:

There is no other destiny for the United Kingdom. She must look across the Atlantic to the children of her own blood and finally enter the union as six or eight States—Scotland, Ireland and Wales, each one, and England divided into two, perhaps three.

The Louisville Commercial, one of the leading papers of the south, in referring to the above, says: According to this programme, and allowing six counties for Canada and taking in our present three territories, the greater United States would have a total of sixty members. And allowing twenty years for the consummation of this project, it is estimated that the total population would be 150,000,000. This sounds like a dream—even a "pipe dream."—but yet it is being discussed with every show of interest by a great number of historians and philosophers on both sides of the Atlantic.

PEACE IS ANTICIPATED ABOUT JUNE THE FIRST

General Impression is that the Boers will Al Lay Down Arms in About Six Weeks

London, April 21.—The general impression that peace would be made about June 1st was confirmed by Mr. Balfour's statement in the House of Commons yesterday. The policy of the Government in refusing an armistic in regard as a reasonable and sagacious exhibition of firmness. It may not be pleasing to pro-Boers, but it is manifestly the best policy. Military operations will be continued without reference to the conference, it is natural to assume that peace made too easily might not be permanent.

It is thought that the terms offered by Kitchener must have been definite, or the Boer leaders would not have dispersed to consult their commandos.

Items of Interest

New York, April 19.— Rarely at this season of the year, when the general trend of ocean travel is to the eastward, has any westward-bound liner brought so many saloon passengers as did the White Star steamship Teutonic, arriving yesterday from Liverpool.

More than usually replete with titles were the names that appeared on the extended list of saloon voyagers—Lords and ladies, rear-admirals and vice-admirals, colonies and captains, and K.C.B.'s. And, by way of contrast, these simple words, "Governor Hogg." Nothing else. But nothing else was needed to identify in this passenger the redoubtable Texan whose scorn of knee breeches outbalanced his desire of an audience with England's King.

"Certainly I refused to masquerade in any such middle-age frumpery as that," the former Governor of Texas explained, as he watched the examination of his baggage yesterday. "Fancy me in knee breeches, a tight-fitting silk coat, and a cocked hat, with rooster feathers stuck in it! Well, others may get themselves up in that rig if they want to, but I have not been taken that way yet."

"Why didn't you stay for the coronation ceremonies?" he was asked.

"Well, I don't go in much for coronations. Besides, I was over there on business—and pleasure," he added, reflectively. "I did want to see the King, but"—and he held one massive leg out for inspection—"no knee breeches for these."

"How would the Chinamen down in Washington feel if they were requested to come to the White House dressed in American clothes they had never worn before? Why should an American citizen, sir, lay out $350 on a uniform with which to go into the presence of royalty? I received an invitation to go before the King. It was a compliment. I would have liked to go. But they told me I must dress as a knight. I am no knight. I could not be a knight without laying aside, even though temporarily, my allegiance to my own country! So I didn't go!

St. John, April 19.—A remarkable case of suicide is reported at Hartland, this country. The body of Ambrose Crouse was found buried, and evidence points to his having buried himself alive. Crouse was 30 years of age, and had recently shown signs of mental unbalancing.

He disappeared from his home on Tuesday. One hundred men have been searching since Wednesday, and yesterday they found the body. Freshly-turned earth was discovered on a hillside and near by was a shovel. The searchers dug and under a few inches of earth came across Crouse's body. Evidence pointed to his having smothered himself; he had dug for himself a grave on the hillside, lay in it, and worked at the overhanging bank until it fell in on him.

An inquest will be held.

London, April 19.—John Redmond, Irish Nationalist, delivered a flagrant speech on the Crimes Act proclamation in the House of Commons last night. He described as infamous calumnies the stories that crime existed in Ireland. He said that the proclamation was an infamous conspiracy to foment crime in Ireland, where no crime existed. A hundred men, Mr. Redmond continued, stood ready to replace every man sent to prison in this struggle. They entreated Mr. Wyndham the Chief Secretary for Ireland, to change his policy; but, if he continued it, they would meet him face to face and give him blow for blow. Their answer to his coercion of Ireland would be to harden their hearts, strengthen their organization, and compel redress.

Mr. Wyndham replied that while there was a comparative lack in Ireland of crime against the person, the lives of people were made miserable by intimidation and boycotting.

THE FIGHTING FREE STATERS.

The latest development of the peace negotiations is peculiar. It will be remembered that originally the Free Staters had no quarrel with Britain. They were dragged into the war by the bumptious Transvaalers. Now the latter have had enough and are ready to make terms, but De Wet, Delarey and Steyn are still unsurfeited. After the capture of Cronje the Free Staters charged that the Transvaalers made undue haste to quit and with the exception of the battles of Diamond Hills and Belfast there was really very little further organized resistance in the Transvaal. Botha, with the exception of occasional forays to help De Wet, has shown great enthusiasm in the war personally since that time.

It would be curious now if the Transvaalers should make terms and the Free Staters continue the war alone, but it must be remembered that most of the blockhouse system is in the heart of the Transvaal and it has probably done much to discourage that section. Should the Transvaal accept terms of peace, the large proportion of the British forces could be turned into the Free State and the further resistance of the indomitable De Wet and Delarey would not be protracted.

CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT.

What shall a child gain in the way of a smattering of education if he lose his good eyesight. A London oculist declares that the large amount of defective eyesight among young people is due to the present condition of the education laws. No sooner are the children of the lower classes pushed away from their mothers' breasts than the school board officer swoops down upon them, and carries them off to the badly lighted and worse ventilated school room, where for about five hours per diem they strain their eyes in the endeavor to read small print and learn a smattering of French, painting and the 'ologies, embroidery and the grammar of music. Hence unnecessary strain often takes place, and the shape of the eye becomes gradually altered, accompanied, of course, by defective vision. The opinion of the oculist quoted is that seven or eight years of age is time enough for a child to begin schooling.

The promptness and despatch with which that British loan was subscribed would not indicate that John Bull was reduced to the straits of taxing the poor man's bread, as some people blindly allege.

There Was One.

"Is there a man in all this audience," fiercely exclaimed a female lecturer, "that has ever done anything to lighten the burden resting on his wife's shoulders? What do you know of woman's work?"

"Is there a man here," she continued, folding her arms and looking over her audience with superb scorn, "that has ever got up in the morning, leaving his tired, worn-out wife to enjoy her slumbers, gone quietly downstairs, made the fire, cooked his own breakfast, sewed the missing buttons on the children's clothes, darned the family stockings, scoured the pots and kettles, cleaned and filled the lamps, swept the kitchen, and done all this, if necessary, day after day, uncomplainingly? If there is such a man in this audience, let him rise up! I should like to see him!"

And in the rear of the hall a mild-looking man in spectacles, in obedience to the summons, timidly arose. He was the husband of the eloquent speaker. It was the first time he had ever had a chance to assert himself.

"What are you going to paint on this dazzling white canvas, may I ask?"

"That is a finished painting, miss. It is entitled, 'The Snow Storm.'"

"Why, so it is! How stupid of me! Isn't it beautiful?"—Chicago Tribune.

Little Mothers in Japan.

Although the Empire of Japan is said to be a "paradise of children," where they are allowed to do very much as they please, and where they seldom, if ever, cry, their life is not all play. The little boys and girls have their work to do, but in many skilful ways they turn work into play. Take, for instance, the little girls who have baby sisters or brothers to care for. They tuck the youngsters into their queer garments and go on with their games of ball. If the baby grows tired and begins to fret the "little mother" jounces it up and down over her shoulder with a peculiar thumping motion of her back, without stopping the game. All the time she sings some pretty song.

Dr. Chaillu's Animals.

In a long review of Paul Du Chaillu's "The World of the Great Forest," The Spectator, London, declares the book's only fault is the failure to supply all the details the reader wants to know about its furred and feathered heroes and heroines.

"Do the hippopotami, of the West Coast river really go across country for a swim in the Atlantic on moonlight nights?" asks The Spectator. "Where is the 'land of plenty' to which the monkeys migrate? What are the fish which regularly travel up the rivers from the sea in the dry season to spawn? Where is the place where the forest eagles cross that great continent to rear their young? These questions are among many suggested by the book.

"The description of the bathing of the 'hippo' 'trippers,' from their cautious entry into the sea to their return at 4 a.m., 'when each family went back to its shoal,' hardly bears quoting, but the idea is novel and amusing. The illustrations of the life of these creatures and of their seaside party by Mr. Gleeson are really admirable.

"The native names of most animals are short. An exception is that of the great forest eagle, the monkey-eater. It is one of the crested hawk-eagles, of which the native name is 'guanionien.' The difficulties of these birds' life when monkeys are scarce; their power of soaring to such vast heights as to be invisible to the monkeys, and of dropping down from the blue, whence their keen eyes see the monkeys on the tree-tops, of their hovering over the tops of certain trees on which fruit grows which the monkeys will probably come to gather—are all fresh and vivid."

A Canadian Herd Record.

The following letter is published by Hoard's Dairyman:—

Enclosed you will find a brief report of our dairy of twelve cows for the year 1901:—

No. lbs. milk for year..........	62,595
No. lbs. cream from same......	8,559
No. lbs. skim milk	54,036
Cream was shipped to Montreal and averaged me about 78 cents a gallon of 10 lbs., or.	$670.80
54,036 lbs. skim milk, 20 cents..	108.07
Total...	$778.87
Average milk per cow..	5,216 lbs.
Average money per cow	$64.90
Average of milk per hundred lbs.	$1.24½

You will see that I value the skim milk at 20 cents per hundred. I consider it worth this to me to feed at home. My cows are grade Durhams and Jerseys. We have a silo; have used it seven years, and consider it the cheapest feed we can raise here. Had about four acres last season, and had 65 double loads to put in silo. Thought we had nearly 60 tons. Am feeding it twice a day in winter, and find our cows do just as well. I have water in stable. Cows have only been out once this winter. Stable is well lighted, and has a ventilator in it. Cellar under stable, and in this way think we save the liquid manure. A.E.H.

Richmond, Que.

Give the Cows Sunlight.

The one thing that we think quite as important to them as either fresh air or exercise is that of which they are most frequently deprived in the old-fashioned stables of those who believe in having them out of doors during the day, and it may be that it is so necessary to their well-ing that a few hours' outing may do them good enough to counterbalance the injury done by being out in the cold.

Sunlight is as necessary to the thrifty and healthy growth of animals as of plants. Every stable or place where they are kept should be well lighted upon the south side, not only by having plenty of glass, but that glass kept clean enough to allow the sun to penetrate it freely. We have seen glass so opaque with cobwebs and dirt as to admit only enough light to allow one to grope his way about in semi-darkness. The "dim religious light" of the ancient and some modern churches is not good enough for a barn. We do not care for blue glass or other stained glass, but want a clear, clean, transparent glass, that will let in the full rays of the sun. Even double sashes of glass now cost but little more for the space they occupy than the siding and painted clapboards, or a single sash with a curtain to shut out the cold at night.

Not every one can afford new barns with the modern improvements, but many old ones could be so changed at small expense as to make the stables much warmer and lighter, and when this is done they will be found a better place for dairy cows than the barnyard when the temperature is below freezing or when there is a cold wind or rain.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Almost ever since Bloemfontein has been captured a theatrical company has been playing there without intermission, and has been doing a good business.

The fruit grower should know every tree in his orchard, and he should go over the orchard frequently and satisfy himself that everything is favorable to the trees. Some trees may be backward in growth and he should endeavor to learn the cause. It may be due to a lack of plant food in the soil, to the pruning, to too much grass, to the mode of cultivation, or to insects; but a thoroughly competent fruit grower will discover the cause if possible, and remove it.

drawn from the udder as the last. In experiments made to test the matter it was found that the difference was so great that with some cows the strippings consisted almost entirely of butter fat. It is important, therefore, that milking the cows be done in a thorough manner, leaving nothing in the udder. If this is done the cow will not be so liable to become dry as soon as when the milk is not entirely removed at each milking. The practice of carefully stripping also serves as a check upon careless milkers, as the farmer can, and should, examine each cow after she is milked in order to observe if the milking has been done thoroughly. Where there is no supervision the milking is sometimes performed carelessly and at a loss to the farmer.

A certain pompous and officious judge in a western town had just fined a young lawyer $10 for contempt of court. After it had been paid a grave old attorney walked up to the bench and laid down a $10 gold piece.

"What is that for?" asked the Judge.

"For contempt, your Honor," was the reply.

"But I didn't fine you for contempt," answered the Judge. "There must be some mistake."

"Oh, no, there isn't," replied the old man. "I have cherished a secret contempt for this court for a long time, and I'm willing to pay for it."—Chicago News.

Poultry Ailments and Remedies.

For Roup—Separate the sick from the well, put former in warm, dry quarters, inject camphorated sweet oil into their nostrils and throat. Give fresh water and nourishing food.

For frosted wattles or combs, prepare a salve of vaseline (one pound), spirits of turpentine, kerosene, oil of tar, and oil of sassafras, one spoonful each.

To prevent egg eating in fowls, make a paste of flour, red pepper, mustard and water; put into some empty egg shells, and place them where the hens will find them. One dose is enough.

For feather-pulled fowls, make an ointment of lard and sulphur, and rub on the bare spots if the feathers have come out because of parasites. There is no "positive cure" for fowls that pull feathers except the hatchet applied to the neck.

What is frequently supposed to be cholera is nothing more or less than indigestion. It may be caused by feeding too concentrated feeds and lack of grit and the drinking of impure water. Sharp grit is a necessity, and oyster shells furnish it.

Leg weakness is brought about largely by an unnatural forcing system. It is sometimes caused by improper feeding, lack of exercise, lack of variety in foods, dampness and cold. The converse of all this is the remedy

Colds are prevalent in fowls at this time of year. Coughing, sneezing and watery eyes and nostrils are sure indications. A simple cold can be dealt with effectually by putting the fowl in a warm place, and giving small doses of castor oil, say a scant teaspoonful. Canker is the worst form of cold or roup. Give water to drink into which a few drops of a solution of copperas has been put. Give no hard grain. A real case of roup is incurable, and the fowl might as well be killed first as last. It doesn't pay to doctor it unless worth its weight in gold. —Agricola.

Turkeys For Profit.

Mr. B. L. Davis, Meshoppen, Penn., writes to The New York Tribune Farmer:—

I have been fairly successful in raising turkeys for profit, and this is my method: I raise my own hens, keeping from four to six, and always selecting the finest specimens. I never mate them akin, but purchase the finest bronze gobbler I can get, keeping him until two years old. When it is time for them to begin laying, which is usually about April 1, I watch them carefully, as they are very sly about hiding their nests; but they are never lousy if permitted to do so. I gather the eggs every day, marking each one with date, keeping in a cool place and turning twice a week. I do not keep them longer than four weeks before setting. I have learned by experience that June is the month for turkeys, the weather being dry and warm, which is essential for them.

I do not allow them to set the first time they are broody. They break up easily and will begin laying within ten days. When the turkey wants to set the second time, I fix the nest carefully, giving her eighteen eggs, covering some brush over to protect from crows. At the same time I set a hen on nine eggs, giving all the poults to the mother turkey. They hatch in twenty-eight days, and must not be disturbed while hatching.

When the poults are twenty-four hours old remove them carefully from the nest so as not to injure them (for they are very tender) or frighten the mother, and place them in a triangular pen made from three boards 12 inches in width and 14 feet in length, placed in the orchard, where they will get the morning sun and the shade during the hottest part of the day. I feed the mother corn or buckwheat night and morning, and the little turkeys stale bread soaked until soft in sweet milk, with a dash of black pepper every other day. I squeeze the bread dry, only putting down a little at a time on a clean board, and taking care not to feed to much, as it will cause bowel trouble.

While in the pen I feed them four times a day—at 5 o'clock in the morning, at 10, at 2 and at 7 in the evening, supplying them with crushed eggshells, pure sweet milk and water at all times. I keep them in the pen until they are strong enough to jump out, which will be in from ten days to two weeks. After this feed mostly cornbread in the same way as the white, but only twice a day —early in the morning and in the evening—and let them roam at will; but if they are not at their feeding place by 5 o'clock I hunt them up, as I always feed them in the same place. They soon learn to come of themselves. As they grow older I give crushed oyster shells in place of eggshells. When ten weeks old they will need feed only evenings.

How Long to Keep the Dairy Cow.

The answer is short to the question, "How long should a dairy cow be kept?" Keep the cow only so long as she pays a gratifying profit. If no record is kept of profit and loss on the farm, neither man nor beast will get credit for services rendered. Every animal should have a ledger standing account. Even justice to man and beast alike is honorable. The farmer's methods in bookkeeping are not always commended by expert accountants. Business demands system, and that system must be correct. When the leaf is turned over in correct bookkeeping, the profitless live stock will be got rid of at the earliest possible moment. Profitless stock is the heaviest tax the farmer, dairyman and breeder is imperiously called upon to pay. The tax on real estate in comparison is only a feather weight in the balance. The farmer's son should be sent to a business college, if only for three months. The investment will pay a good interest for life.

It is more than probable that men who keep no profit and loss on stock have mortgages to pay interest on—that perpetual source of annoyance. No man of fine feelings lives as long or is so happy under the strain of interest paying as he who is free from debt. Small incomes pay off debts too slowly for much joy. Possession without debt is ennobling to manhood, and a rich mine of happiness for the home. Milk the cow only so long as she is profitable, then quickly turn her into beef and cash. —H., in New York Tribune.

Here is a little gem clipped from a small boy's essay on parents:—"Parents are things which boys have to look after them. Most girls also have parents. Parents consist of pas and mas. Pas talk a good deal about what they are going to do, but mostly it's the mas that make you mind."—Chicago News.

There's Nothing "Just as Good"

As Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for womanly diseases. No one knows this better than the woman who has tried local doctors and many medicines and found no cure until she began the use of "Favorite Prescription." It establishes regularity, stops weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"I was troubled for three years with ulceration and female weakness and my doctor gave me but little relief," writes Mrs. Lulu Hunter, of Allenton, St. Louis Co., Mo. "I saw an advertisement in the paper of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I began the use of it about a year ago. I took five bottles of it, and one bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and my health is better now than it was for years. I have also recommended these medicines to some of my friends, who suffered from female weakness, and good results have followed."

Mrs. or Miss?

JUST as a sort of New Year's card, the Woman's Suffrage Society of Paris have issued a manifesto contending that, as woman in her maiden name accomplishes all the duties of a citizen, she does prejudice to her interests by sinking her identity and losing her individuality in adopting the name of her husband when she marries. Consequently, it seems on the tapis that in future, when Miss Smith marries Mr. Brown, she will still retain her maiden patronymic of Smith. Being married, she must of necessity be Mrs.; therefore, if she retains her maiden name of Smith, we shall have the weird anomaly of Mr. Brown and Mrs. Smith as man and wife. Now, supposing Mrs. Smith, otherwise Mrs. Brown, should, by any unforeseen event, meet with a Mr. Smith in the absence of her husband, and it should go forth to the world—in a hotel visitors' book, for instance—that they were actually Mr. and Mrs. Smith, where the dickens, in the event of trouble, would Mr. Brown come in? Mr. Brown might swear by all that was holy that Mrs. Smith was Mrs. Brown, but if Mr. Smith swore that she was Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Smith did not stoop to deny it, what jury outside a lunatic asylum could convict Mrs. Smith of playing fast and loose with Mr. Brown? It is a complex problem, to say the least of it; but if the Woman's Suffrage Society of gay Paree are not content to let well alone, I suppose they must put up with the consequences.

A Girl's Daring Feat.

IT seems hardly possible that a girl of sixteen should save nearly fifty people from a terrible death. Yet that is what Grace Bussell did, who may well be called the Grace Darling of Australia. It happened one day in December that a vessel was wrecked off the coast of Australia, a few miles from the Bussell home. The lifeboat on board the steamer was lowered, but it capsized and the eight people in it were drowned. So the rest of the crew clung to the sinking steamer. The surf ran so wildly that no one could dare swim through it, and there was not a house or person in sight. The girl, who was a splendid horsewoman, was riding along with a native servant. She caught sight of the vessel in distress; turning her horse's head toward the coast, she started him on a quick gallop. When she reached the sea she urged her horse into the angry surf. She rode boldly on till she reached the vessel. With great difficulty she took some of the children in her arms and put them before her on the saddle; then, with bigger children and women clinging to her dress, she started for the shore, gave those she had rescued to the care of her servant, and returned again to the wreck. So she went backward and forward for four hours, till all were safe on land, the servant having ridden to bring out the last man.—"Leslie's Weekly."

When Judge Barnard was on the bench and holding court in Poughkeepsie a lawyer who did not like him chanced to see a one-cent coin lying on the floor. Picking it up and holding it forth in ostentatious display, he said:

"I imagine, your Honor, from the value of this coin, that it must belong to the court."

"And I imagine," replied Judge Barnard, "that if it was not such a small coin the court never would have seen it." —New York Times.

Edison's Prophecy.

Mr. Edison's latest theory is that by and by we shall be able to do without sleep altogether, as by the more perfect processes of electric lighting it will be difficult to tell night from day, and we shall forget when bedtime comes round. The man of the future is evidently going to live pretty rapidly. It was only the other day that we were told that square meals would be a thing of the past in the good time that's coming. Instead of laboriously working your way through seven or eight courses, all you'll have to do will be to go to the nearest chemist and buy a few pills with the nourishment of a city dinner concentrated into each. In the face of these conditions one feels disposed to urge the race unborn to stay where they are for their own sakes.

Man as an Incarnation.

PEOPLE of a materialistic frame of mind, to whom man is but a machine, says an editorial writer in the "Hospital," are apt to put on one side all that cannot be weighed and measured as not only inexplicable or unthinkable, but as quite beyond the range of reasonable discussion. Such people are advised to attend a meeting of the Society for Psychical Research for "a change of scene." What they will see is thus described:

"There they will find people, quite as convinced as they are of their own sanity, and quite as content as they can possibly be with the correctness of their own interpretation of things, asserting the most astounding propositions, without turning a hair. To those who are so self-centered as to think that there is something cranky about all who do not see as they do, it is a wholesome awakening to find good, solid, comfortable, and respectable people believing in telepathy as a thing indisputable, and holding that man, as we see him engaged in his various more or less ignoble pursuits, in the city and elsewhere, is but the incarnation of one little bit of himself as he exists in an intangible and ethereal form. At the last meeting of the Psychical Research Society, Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., said that he did not hold that the whole of any one of us was incarnated in their terrestrial bodies; certainly not in childhood; more, but perhaps not so very much more, in adult life. What was manifest was only a definite portion of a much larger whole. What the rest was doing during the years spent here he did not know. Perhaps it was asleep; but probably, he said, it was not entirely asleep with men of genius, nor perhaps was it all completely inactive with people called mediums. Now to the modern materialist all this is absolute 'rot.' Yet Dr. Lodge is not exactly a man to pooh-pooh. Indeed, may not the immaterialists retort that this is a Christian country and that our very religion teaches us not to weigh and measure too exactly? Again, Roentgen, Tesla, and Marconi have of late been giving many shocks to old ideas. At any rate, this is clear, that we must not too rigidly put outside the bounds of sanity belief in the unthinkable. It is a queer world, and which half of it is sane appears still undecided."

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 13 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 2 1-2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 3 1-3 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After jogging along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented shoals for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing, off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 83. There were 188 new cases in September, 360 in October, 473 in November, 804 in December and 1,295 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. At present the plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

Recognized Their Old Friend.

THE love which English people, especially British soldiers, feel for Florence Nightingale has been shown at many times and in many places. A new and striking instance of it was recently given by the "Sunday Magazine."

The late Sir John Steell, sculptor to Queen Victoria, was modeling a bust of Miss Nightingale, when an officer of one of the Highland regiments which had suffered so cruelly in the Crimea heard that the bust had just been completed, and was in Sir John's studio. Many of the men in his company had passed through the hospital at Scutari, and he obtained permission from the sculptor to bring some of them to see it. Accordingly a squad of men one day marched into the big studio and stood in line.

They had no idea why they had been mustered in so strange a place. Without a word of warning the bust was uncovered, and then, as by one impulse, the men broke rank, and with cries of "Miss Nightingale! Miss Nightingale!" surrounded the model, and with hats off cheered the figure of their devoted nurse until the roof rang.

So spontaneous and hearty and so inspiring was the whole scene that in after days Sir John Steell declared it to be the greatest compliment of his life.

A Smart Salesman.

Jeweler (to new boy)—Did you sell anything while I was out, Johnny?

"Yes, sir. I sold six plain gold rings."

"Good, my boy," said the jeweler, highly pleased. "We'll make a first-class salesman of you one of these days. You got the regular price, of course?"

"Oh, yes, sir. The price was marked on the inside, 18c., and the gentleman took all that was left, sir."—N.Y. "Life."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
The World Lost for Love's Sake
By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter with the intention of keeping that strange appointment, her heart beat so fiercely she thought it would break with its weight of woe.

She drove directly to the place indicated, and standing on the pavement, evidently watching for her, she saw a graceful, handsome stranger.

The resemblance was so strongly marked, she knew he must be Janet's brother.

She raised her white, jeweled hand, and in an instant he was standing beside the carriage.

"Have you brought that letter that was intrusted to you?" asked Daisy, in a faint voice. "Here is the money—give me the letter."

"I shall be most happy to comply with madame's wishes if she will allow me but a few moments' conversation first," declared the handsome Frenchman, with a low bow. "I am going uptown; if you could take me in your carriage as far as the park—dropping me down there—I should be much obliged; besides, I have something to say to madame which she must hear."

Although his tone was smooth and respectful enough, Daisy could detect determination in it; she was in this man's power—she dared not refuse his request.

With a haughty gesture she moved the folds of her dress aside, and he seated himself in the coupe.

"I am sorry to know that such a beautiful lady as yourself is placed in the predicament this letter in my breast pocket shows you to be in," he said, and a merciful smile stirred beneath his heavy mustache, showing a set of dazzling white teeth, "but since it is so, and madame is so wealthy," he continued, "it is but right that you should share with those who keep your strange secret."

Daisy drew a little, quivering breath.

"You torture me," she cried. "Give me the letter—take the money and go. Leave me before I go mad!"

She saw him bow coolly, smilingly, as he counted the money over rapidly, then transferred it to his breast pocket; but to her consternation he did not hand her the letter, although she held one hand appealingly out to him, clutching her fair white throat with the other, as if for breath.

"I cannot part with so valuable a paper, even for the sake of so lovely a lady as yourself, for a meager sum like this," he said, tauntingly. "It is worth five times that amount to me. No matter what arrangements you made with Janet, you must make different ones with me. She did not realize what a veritable gold mine she had stumbled across. Yes, this paper goes to the one who will pay me five thousand dollars for it!"

Daisy threw up her cold, white hands in a gesture of despair that was heart-breaking to see.

"Don't—don't—I cannot bear it!" she gasped. "Oh, my God! my God! be merciful, and show me some way—any way—of escape from the meshes of the terrible net which is closing around me. I couldn't get five thousand dollars if my life depended upon it," she moaned, wildly.

"Your handsome young husband is very rich and indulgent, I understand," he answered, insinuatingly, adding:

"'When lovely women stoop to folly' They must stand the consequences, you know."

Daisy's eyes flashed fire.

"I would not ask my husband for money. I would die first," she said.

"Suit yourself, fair lady," responded the Frenchman, with a shrug of his shoulders. "I will merely say I would take it in sums to meet your convenience—say five hundred a week. Of course, in the style you are living, you must have that much pin money.

"I have still further demands to make upon your good nature, fair lady. I have a secret ambition, and you must gratify it. It is this: I long to enter the social world—to be on equality with the aristocrats who dare snub me now, if I may use that phrase—and you must introduce me into society; under these conditions, and these alone, is your secret safe."

The very boldness of the proposition staggered Daisy.

"It is easily accomplished," he went on. "Give a series of luncheons, a party or two, and receptions, and introduce me as the lion of the occasion—a French count, a marquis, or something of that sort. I tell you madame, it must be managed in some way."

"A word to the wise is sufficient, madame. You must begin by introducing me to your husband as an old friend of the family; the rest will be plain sailing. Refuse—well, you know what to expect then," he said, with darkening brow.

"Have you no pity, no mercy, no heart?" moaned Daisy, distractedly, as she sank back in her seat with a bitter cry.

"I have a heart, and a very susceptible one," he declared; "especially where a young and lovely woman is concerned.

"There is to be a grand ball at Mrs. Colonel Dillingham's on the tenth instant. I have often seen you with her, so it is safe to presume that you are friends. You must secure an invitation for me to this ball and while there you will present me to your friends."

"If I cannot, what then?" cried Daisy, desperately.

"It will be quite as well for you to supply the 'what then.' It is not polite to threaten a lady."

"Will this be the first and last time you will make a request of this kind to me?" cried Daisy, bitterly.

"If you introduce me about among your friends, I may safely answer 'Yes,'" he replied, "for I——"

The sentence never was finished, for, glancing back, he chanced to behold the coachman behind signal their driver, and he saw, too, Alexander Hamilton, white as death, leaning excitedly from the coach window.

In a single instant he had determined on the course he must pursue. Mr. Hamilton must not find him there, as no explanations could be given by Daisy taken in such momentary disadvantage.

"Here is my address," he said, thrusting a card into her hand, "the invitation to the ball will find me there," and before Daisy could utter a reply he had flung open the door and sprung from the vehicle, but not an instant too soon, for at that very

Caught in a Stampede.

TWO years ago, when the cowboys of north-eastern Arizona came together to find out who was the "best man" in various ways, James Evans won the steer-tying championship by roping, throwing and tying a vicious steer in twenty-four seconds. But in a recent round-up the champion did a more remarkable thing, by which, says the Kansas City "Star," he saved his own and another man's life.

While he and some companions were camping for the night on a high tableland, which ended a few miles away in an abrupt drop of two hundred feet, a storm swept through the mountains. Made nervous by the lightning, the herd of fifteen hundred cattle stampeded in the direction of the precipice. Evans and his men mounted hurriedly and, circling to the front of the maddened cattle, tried with whoops and revolver-shots to turn them back.

In the dense blackness of the night Evans's horse missed his footing and went down in a heap, one leg in a gopher-hole. The horse of a cowboy named Davis, running close behind, stumbled over Evans's horse, and Davis, too, came to earth and lay still, unconscious.

Fifty yards away came the herd, and a short flash of lightning showed Evans the situation. The swiftly moving sea of cattle reached one hundred yards each way. Unable to arouse Davis, and never thinking of leaving his disabled comrade, Evans took the only chance of saving both. He emptied his own revolver and his companion's into the center of the herd, cutting a breach in the front of the mass. Then, throwing the inanimate form of Davis over his shoulder, he awaited his opportunity.

As one of the leaders brushed by, Evans, with one movement, put the body of Davis across the shoulders of the steer, and mounted, also. Vainly the animal leaped, bucked and side-jumped. With his legs wrapped tightly around the body of his mount, Evans drove his spurs deep in, and held himself and Davis in place.

The steer, wild with rage, agony and fright, rapidly left the herd in the rear, and, veering to the right in a furious gallop, carried his riders out of danger. Then Evans rolled off the back of his strange rescuer, and a half-hour later, when his cowboys turned the herd at the rim of the canyon, and rode back to look for the foreman and Davis, they found them, both unconscious. The weary steer, with his sides covered with blood, lay exhausted a short distance away.

The outfit ordered a medal for Evans, and the steer has been pensioned for life on the best alfalfa in the valley.

A Revolutionary Age.

Soulless corporations, heartless coquettes and conscienceless rascals of various sorts we have had with us now these many years, and it looks very much now as if a kind of providence was about to even things up a little by providing us with such useful contrivances as wireless telegraphy, heatless light, smokeless powder, boneless shad and seedless oranges. If some genius will rise up now and give us a breed of biteless dogs and stingless mosquitoes, together with some loseless umbrellas and spendless cash, we shall all be happy and content.—"Leslie's Weekly."

When to Get Married.

The astrologers, it is said, have named the following as propitious dates for marriages for 1902: January 2, 4, 11, 19 and 21; February 1, 8, 10, 19 and 21; March 2, 5, 12, 20 and 23; April 2, 4, 12, 20 and 22; May 2, 4, 12, 20 and 29; June 1, 8, 11, 19 and 21; July 1, 8, 12, 19, 21 and 31; August 2, 11, 18, 20 and 30; September 1, 9, 16, 18 and 28; October 1, 8, 15, 17, 27 and 29; November 5, 11, 13, 22 and 25; December 1, 8, 10, 19, 23 and 29.

The Monk's Knowledge of Women.

AN interesting story comes from the French Alps of Dauphiny relating the futile efforts of the Princess of Croy, who desired to enter the monastery of the Grande Chartreuse, a habitation from which women visitors are rigidly excluded.

The story runs that the Princess dressed herself in boy's clothes and accompanied her husband to the institution. The gates were opened to them, and the Prince sent his card to the father superior, with a line to the effect that he was accompanied by a friend.

Just as they were about to make the round of the building the word was received that the father would like to see the Prince and "his friend." Going upstairs they were received by the smiling monk, who cordially invited them to join him in an appetizing luncheon. The Princess endeavored to make the best of the situation, but she was not put any the more at her ease by the fact that the monk kept gazing sharply at her.

At last he exclaimed suddenly: "Catch it, young man!" at the same time throwing at her a large pear. The Princess was startled, and, thrown completely off her guard, made a motion to grab up her skirt, the absence of which she overlooked in her confusion.

Then the father stopped smiling and said with great gravity:

"I beg your pardon, madam, but ladies are not allowed in the monastery. I must ask you to wait outside until the Prince has finished his inspection."

The Democracy of Children.

ONE amusing trait in children is their unconscious democracy. They are nearly always democratic when permitted any latitude. The desire for playmates levels sense of caste, if any exists. On a street through which I often pass there is a coterie of children who blend with the most thorough harmony, although they are of quite different social strata. One of the boys is a "smart" young gentleman in knickerbockers, always well groomed; another is a little Italian; a third, the thin, restless, wide-eyed son of a housekeeper. One of the little girls is a negress, with her woolly hair standing out from her head in this curved-up fashion. She is quite a belle in this "mixed" company.—Harper's "Bazar."

Abigail Again.

I SEE by the papers, says a writer in "Pick-Me-Up," that some worthy people in high places are getting a little tired of the servant girl question, and now there is a proposal to bring boys up to the job. What will become of the balance of the girls willing but not henceforward able to take to service, is not stated. Perhaps the English language is too abrupt and practical to permit of any reliable statement of the kind. But, of course, it's the old trouble. When mistress and maid fall out the fault is always the maid's. We never hear of any society for proving mistresses in the wrong. And poor old Abigail is down again!

I think before people lay the blame too heavily on Abigail they should search their own hearts and see if there is no fault in themselves. Just because the family thinks it would like to have breakfast at eight o'clock in the morning, Abigail's night's rest is practically broken from seven a.m. onwards. First there is the alarm clock, which rattles like the Day of Judgment; and just as she has turned over and gone to sleep again, the electric bell over her head starts its infernal clatter, interrupting her in a most lovely dream just where she and the milkman's young man had arranged to get married as soon as he could get trusted for a suite of kitchen furniture and a regulation four-poster. And as a final blow she has to sit up in bed and hear the master downstairs offering to run up and drag her out of bed, while the missis is declining the offer with some energy. No thanks.

How much nicer it would be to treat Abigail like one of the family. Now and again it would show a very good feeling if the head of the family went off to the city without his breakfast rather than disturb Abigail in her second go of beauty sleep. When employers meet together and talk of Abigail's sins, it never seems to occur to them that they might win her over by a timely display of generosity. Nobody seems to think anything of it if missis comes down to breakfast in a dressing-gown. She chooses to do it, and that is enough. But if Abigail waits at the breakfast-table in a red flannel petticoat, fastened over her shoulders with a safety-pin, the harsh remarks that are heaped upon a poor orphan girl are positively brutal.

What Abigail objects to so much is the perpetual fault-finding. Suppose she does drop a plate on the ground and break it? A plate must be broken sooner or later in the ordinary course of nature, and, as Horatius said when he called for volunteers to defend the narrow pass, we may as well pick it off as wait for it to drop on us.

In many households it is quite a usual thing to keep a common, irresponsible cat of indifferent moral character, and to let it have the free run of the place. If the cat does anything wrong, the missis at once blames—Abigail. Is it any wonder that the servant girl has turned at last after centuries of injustice? If the cat should get the key of the beer cask and go down and draw off a modest quencher, it's as likely as not that Abigail is charged with having taken the beer for her favorite policeman, when it is well known that he is a teetotaller and only eats cloves to improve his complexion. As every naturalist is well aware, it is quite a common thing for a cat to run round to the pawnbroker's with a couple of the best tablecloths till the end of the month; but as sure as anything Abigail will be charged with the offence, just because the ticket happened to fall out of her petticoat pocket. Most unreasonable.

The way to solve the problem is not for the mistresses to entrench themselves on one side and the maids on the other, and speak in harsh and inconsiderate language of the opposition. As Lord Rosebery says, the way to make peace is for two travelers to arrive at an inn and have a drink or something of that sort, and drop hints of mutual concessions in between the sips. The mistresses should meet the maids casually and get some idea of the basic principles of domestic service as governed by the natural aspirations of both sides. As I make it out, the point of view of the mistresses will be that they want a girl who will always get up at six in the morning, who will always look neat and tidy, and who will be talked at in a loud, rasping voice from the attic to the cellar without once answering back in the dreamy, picturesque language of Bermondsey. A girl who can do the work of three men, and who has a small appetite, will be preferred.

From the maids' point of view, I understand it is considered essential that a bicycle should be kept on the premises exclusively for kitchen use, and that the offensive habit of locking up the piano and hiding the key will be discontinued. It will also be necessary that the objectionable practice of counting the bottles of sherry in the cellar, and the mince pies in the larder, should at once cease, as this sort of thing is calculated to imply distrust and want of confidence. The question as to the privilege of wearing the missis's sealskin jacket or her new hat is not definitely settled; but it is understood that a concession of this sort would go far to remove the bad blood that has been stirred up in this unfortunate controversy.

Sweetness Long Drawn Out.

A business man of whom the "Youth's Companion" tells declares that the average stenographer will not learn to spell correctly until the millennium comes. In support of his opinion he relates his experience with a young woman whose spelling, as he describes it, had an "engaging originality," but who was so amiable and even-tempered that he seldom found heart to rebuke her.

One day she appeared before him with a neatly written letter for a Southern correspondent. He hastily looked it over.

"See here," he said, "you've spelled sugar s-u-g-g-a-r."

The young woman looked at it a moment critically, and then her face brightened as she replied:

"So I have. How careless of me! I don't see how I came to leave out the 'h.'"

Supply Limited.

"This is tough luck," said Ham, mournfully, as he leaned out over the side of the ark. "What's wrong now?" queried Shem. "Why, all this water to fish in," replied Ham, "and only two fishin' worms on board."—Ohio "State Journal."

A Classification.

Henry Thomas Buckle's thoughts and conversation were always on a high level. Once he remarked: "Men and women range themselves into three classes, or orders, of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons; the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things; the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

Poultry and Dairy.

Washing the hands seems a needless task sometimes, but the successful dairyman will find the moments spent in this way are the most profitable of the day. Clean hands lead to clean cows, and with clean cows there will be a clean product.

Experience With Houdans.

I have had fifteen years' experience in breeding Houdan fowls, and am strongly of the opinion that the high favor in which this breed is held by the French farmer and poulterer is not misplaced. I think it a great mistake that the Houdans are not more generally raised by the farmers of this country. They are medium sized, good layers of large white eggs, and are highly esteemed as a table bird. They have no combs to freeze in severe weather—a convenience to farmers who expect fowls to thrive without protection.—Charles Hopper, Ashley, O.

Poultry on the Dairy Farm.

Just why dairymen do not make poultry-raising pay is not a problem hard to solve. The reason is lack of knowledge relating to poultry-raising. How can we make fowls hustle and exercise? First, we must not feed too heavily or make it too easy for birds to get their food. We must get them out of their houses in winter as much as possible. The profit in winter depends on having the hens well housed and giving special care. A house 12 by 20 feet is large enough for 30 fowls. Do not permit any of the floor space to be occupied with nests, roosts or other fixtures. All of the floor space should be reserved for the hens, and a part of it should be used for a scratching floor. Put in only enough glass for lighting purposes.

One reason why some people do not succeed with poultry is that they do not know how to feed to the best advantage. Large fowls require a different system of feeding than small ones. Leghorns are not likely to get overfat. They will leave corn on the ground and run after insects; while the larger breeds will eat the corn that is given them and stand around waiting for more. Chopped clover is good, and should be fed each day, and chopped vegetables will not take its place. On the average farm there is much that goes to waste that the fowls can utilize, and this helps to give profit.—F. M. Munger, in American Agriculturist.

Guinea Fowls for Farm.

There is a difference of opinion as to the profitableness of guinea fowls. Where one person succeeds ten will perhaps fail. Guineas are very like wild birds in habits and it is thought that it is impossible to tame them but this is not the case. On a farm where they have a wide range guineas can be raised to advantage. They begin to lay in April and lay until the middle of October. During this season chicken hens get broody and in August and September moult and a flock of guineas will keep the egg basket filled.

Young guineas are susceptible to cold, and we do not set any eggs until the first of June, and have them coming off from the first of July until the middle of August. Those taken off later will not get grown before cold weather, but will make nice broilers to use in the fall. We set the eggs under an ordinary hen and raise them with the chickens; keep them fastened in a coop with the hen for several days, until they get used to the hen; then turn them out to forage in the day but shut them up at night. We give them the same kind of food as the young chicks, making sure to keep the coop's floor covered with coarse sand. The little guineas are so tame that it is hard to keep from stepping on them when going to feed or to put up at night. Her guineas roost in the fowl house, and although they make the circuit round the farm every day, they come back to a clover patch near the fowl yard to lay, and nearly always lay near each other. I do not find them any harder to raise than chickens. They are great foragers, bug catchers and insect destroyers, and trouble grain and truck patches less than any other class of fowls.

The meat of the guinea resembles that of wild game in flavor, and is delicious, fit for an epicure. In many sections of the country partridges, quails, etc., are very scarce, and I do not see why guineas could not be hatched by incubators and raised to supply those who know what a toothsome bird the guinea is.—L. G. Holland, Ninety-Six, S. C.

The Water on a Dairy Farm.

The water supply should be even more scrupulously guarded than the food supply. It serves a double purpose, that of water for the cow and for the washing of the utensils. The water for both should be equally pure, and it ought to be made an axiom that water unfit to wash the pails or cans is unfit for cattle to drink. The milking cow requires large quantities of water, and whether it be capable of demonstration that impurities may find their way into the milk, it is safest to take the benefit of the doubt and use only pure water. A shallow dug well in the corner of the cow lot cannot escape contamination at some time. The contamination may not last all the time, and it may be, as is usually the case, that it is of a harmless character. The fact is that any contamination from the surface, no matter what may be its character, marks the well as one that may become infected and the cause of an epidemic. It only remains for the right kind of an infection to enter. It may require one year or forty years.

The special forms which are partial to the water supply are the intestinal germs that cause diarrhoea and the typhoid form. Many of the most alarming epidemics of typhoid have been traced to such source. It is not an easy matter to obtain an adequate supply of water at all places about a city, but as far as possible it should be from driven wells. As far as tested, all driven wells of more than twenty-five feet are supplying pure water. The hard-pan near the surface acts as an effective barrier to the passage of germs, and those that come from below are harmless. A driven well of twenty-five feet is a deeper well from a sanitary standpoint than any dug well. All dairies within the corporate limits of a city should be compelled to use city water.—United States Bulletin No. 88.

Turning Smoke Into Gold.

QUEEN ELIZABETH of England was not a thoroughgoing spinster, for she had so little prejudice against the practice of smoking that she permitted Sir Walter Raleigh his pipe in the royal presence. She was sufficiently a woman, however, to twit him openly on his devotion to the weed, and it was on one of these occasions—or so the author of "The Soverane Herbe" shrewdly surmises—that the knight replied:

"I can assure Your Majesty that I have so well experienced the nature of it that I can tell even the weight of the smoke in any quantity I consume."

"I doubt it much, Sir Walter," replied Elizabeth, holding it was impossible to weigh smoke, and mayhap scenting a joke, "and I will wager you twenty gold angels that you do not solve my doubt."

Gallantly accepting the wager, Raleigh filled his pipe with a weighed quantity of tobacco, smoked it out, and then, weighing the resultant ashes, announced the weight he had smoked away.

"Your Majesty cannot deny that the difference has disappeared in smoke."

"Truly, I cannot," answered the Queen. Ordering the wager to be paid, she turned to the courtiers around her and said: "Many alchemists have I heard of who turned gold into smoke, but Raleigh is the first who has turned smoke into gold."

Judge Roger S. Greene, for many years Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory, was eminent not only for his legal attainments, but also for the accuracy of his scholarship and scrupulously correct use of language. A mispronunciation was an offense that he could not permit to pass unnoticed.

In arguing a case before him one day an attorney cited Browne on Carriers, pronouncing the name of the author Brown-ey. The Judge interrupted the argument to give him the correct pronunciation, which he accepted for the moment, but soon relapsed into his error, whereupon the Judge again interrupted with:—

"Mr. ——, that author's name is not pronounced Browney, but Brown. As in the case of many similar words, the final 'e' is silent. There is an 'e' at the end of my name, but you would not call me 'Greeney,' would you?"

"That depends," instantly replied the lawyer, "on how your Honor decides this case!"—New York Times.

"O, I suppose it is," replied the professor, "for everybody except the recording angel."—Chicago "Tribune."

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm on route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

Had a Treat in Store for the Boys

On Saturday evening, Mr. W. J. McCallum gave his many patrons a pleasant surprise, by adding to his bill a fare so early in the season, a delicacy, namely "Frog's Legs."

The Jarvis Street Choir

Arrangements have been completed for the visit to Peterborough of the Jarvis st., choir, on Monday, May 12. The choir will leave Toronto by special train and will be entertained here by the choir of St. Paul's church, where they will give a concert in the evening. There are fifty voices in the organization, and it is considered one of the best in Canada. An effort will be made to have the local choirs attend the concert in a body. The leader, Mr. A. S. Vogt, is the conductor of the celebrated Mendelssohn choir, which, according to competent critics, has no equal in this country. Mr. Crane deserves the hearty thanks of the music treat in store for them.

Will act, not so much directly upon the nerves as upon the digestive functions and the abundant formation of red, vitalizing blood. Nerves can't be fed on medicine. They can, however, be restored and strengthened by assimilated food. The marvellous action of Ferrozone arises from its action over the digestive and assimilative processes. When you take Ferrozone the blood is purified, strengthened, and grows rich and red. Then you grow vigorous, healthy and beautiful, ready to work, because you have the strength to do it. No tonic for the brain, blood or nerves compares with Ferrozone. Price 50c., at Ormond & Walsh's.

THE CONTRACT AWARDED

For the Erection of a New Factory for Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons

The enterprising and popular firm of J. J. Turner & Sones have outgrown their present premises, and are about to erect a splendid factory and warerooms. The contract for the work has been awarded to Messrs. Gordon & Finnis, and the work will commence at once.

The building will be of brick, and will be erected at the south-east corner of George and King street, opposite the present premises. It will be 65 x 100 feet, and three storeys in height. The ground floor will be warerooms, and the two upper storeys will be the manufacturing departments. In the rear will be fine brick stables.

The new building will fill another of the few remaining vacant corners of Geo. St. with a substantial structure. It speaks in the highest terms of the success that has attended the efforts of Peterborough's enterprising firm, Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons.

REMAINING QUOTA LEAVE FOR S. AFRICA

Last Night on the Midnight Express—More to Go Wednesday

The remaining recruits who were left behind Thursday night and those sworn in on Friday and Saturday left on the 12.3 train last night, for Halifax, en route for South Africa. The men were formed up at the armories, and were escorted to the station by the 57th band, bugle band, fire brigade and a crowd of enthusiastic and loyal citizens, who turned out to give the boys a send off and have a farewell shake. The boys were in the best of spirits, but the hearty send off was dulled by a touch of sadness.

THE CAMPAIGN

The Committees Getting Down to Work Now That the Date for Election is Known

The elections are to take place on May 29th, and the announcement of this fact has put much life into the politicians of both sides of politics.

Hon. Mr. Stratton's committee rooms have been filled nightly to overflowing, and on Saturday night the crowd was more than the place could comfortably accomodate. Mr. Stratton himself was present and delivered a short and stirring address.

Reports from the various committees indicate an increased majority over what it was four years ago. In East Peterborough the outlook, Mr. Stratton said was exceedingly bright, and he had no doubt as to the election of the government candidates

Much enthusiasm was manifested, and hundreds of willing workers are devoting their time to perfect the organization.

Mr. Miller addressed a meeting of the supporters at the Conservative Committee rooms, and told them of his hopes, and desires. He urged organization as the one duty of the hour.

A SPRING POEM

But One Verse in all That Our Press will Probably Stand at One Time

This great family journal received for publication yesterday a poem on "Spring." It evidently was written by some deputy hand whose rich imagination inspired him to do justice to the creek that runs through the town, as well as to the subject proper. The first verse runs as follows:

Now the glory of the springtime o'er
  Otonabee's great plains
You can hear it marching, marching, to the music of the rains.
As they fall in rhythmic cadence on the shingles over head,
Or beat a muffled tattoo in the brooklet's stony bed.

There may be a springtime like that somewhere, but not hereabouts. Spring so far has lacked enough moisture to march in ragtime. The sprinkling carts only beat a rapid tattoo on the dusty pavements and the anxious householder cannot even swear in rhythmic cadence as he sits supinely by and watches his carefully nurtured lawn shrivel up. Fact is this g.f.j. has no use for spring poems at all.

AS TO LUMBER CAMPS

A Very Desirable Law Passed at the last Session of Parliament

At the recent session of the Ontario Legislature the Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provincial Secretary, with his usual foresight, introduced a bill which became law, authorizing the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council to make and enforce regulations to apply to lumber and other camps where large numbers of men are employed. These regulations require such camps to be kept in a cleanly and healthy condition, prevent the polution of the water supply for such camps and provide for their inspection, and also provide for the employment of duly qualified physicians, and for the erection of permanent or temporary hospitals for the employees in such camps. The expense of carrying out these regulations for the protection of the health of working men, and preventing and checking outbreaks of disease, shall be borne by the employing firms or corporations concerned.

The Cause of Deafness

Deafness and impaired hearing are due almost entirely to catarrhal inflammation of the eustachian tubes. Permanent cure is guaranteed to all who inhale Catarrhozone as directed. This vegetable antiseptic is inhaled at the mouth, and after traversing all the air passages of the respiratory organs is exhaled through the nostrils; it completely erradicates catarrh from any part of the system, clears the ears, nose and throat, and allays inflammation, congestion and soreness. For deafness, earache, ringing in the ears, head noises, catarrh, asthma and bronchitis, medical science can devise nothing as beneficial as Catarrhozone. Complete outfit for two months' use, price $1.00; trial size 25c. Druggists, or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Terrible Scenes at the Destruction of the City of Pittsburg Near Cairo--Passengers Penned in on All Sides.

Special to The Times.

Cairo, Ill., April 21.—Although no complete list of either the victims or of the survivors is yet obtainable, investigation to-day indicates that almost one-half of the 150 people on the City of Pittsburg were lost when that steamer was burned yesterday at Ogden's Landing, between this city and Paducah. Many of those who were brought to this city are suffering from injuries, exposure and fright. The number aboard was about equally divided between passengers and crew, the latter suffering the greatest loss in casualties. The names of many of the roustabouts were not known, and the number drowned or burned is not likely ever to be ascertained.

The fire started in the lower part of the steamer in the freight material, or possibly in the engine room, and shut off the means of escape there, while passengers jumped overboard from the upper decks. Within ten minutes after the discovery of the fire at 4 a.m. survivors say that the upper decks were swept by flames and passengers were penned in on all sides, even the life preservers being cut off by the flames. The panic that followed caused a greater loss of life than would have ensued if the officers could have controlled the terror-stricken people. Some rushed through the flames and perished; others fainted and sank down to be cremated. Many in their nightrobes, some of them afire, jumped overboard and were drowned. Those who got into the boats saw others drowning as their overcrowded craft pulled to shore. The barely clad survivors on the shore not only witnessed horrifying scenes around the charred hull, but also suffered from early morning till relief came in the afternoon. The captain says there were 60 passengers, not including a dozen babies. There were as many women as men in the cabin, and the age of loss was among the women and children. As the register, with all other records, was burned, and the survivors scattered in every direction, there is great difficulty in getting a list of the survivors. It is conceded that many bodies will never be recovered, so that there will never be a complete list of the victims. It is thought that many charred bodies will be found in the hull of the burned steamer when the mass of embers ceases burning, so that the search for the remains can be continued.

Cairo, Ill., April 21.— Turner's Landing, twenty-four miles from this city, on the lake shore, was the scene of a disastrous fire yesterday morning, when the paddle wheel steamer City of Pittsburg was burned to the water's edge. Many of the passengers were sleeping when the conflagration started, and frightful panic ensued when the alarm was given. Children cried piteously, begging that they be saved. Lifeboats were manned and every effort made to save the passengers. Boats were sent from shore to help in the work of rescue, and passengers were landed at the river banks. As fast as the boats could be emptied they returned to the ill-fated steamer. The burning steamer was quickly headed to the bank, but passengers were forced to jump from the stern, and, trying to swim ashore through the swift current, many were drowned. Many also perished in the flames. Help, except from people living near by, did not arrive until 2.30 o'clock this afternoon, and passengers who only had no night clothes and were without food suffered terribly.

There is so far no definite information as to the loss of life. It is thought that at least sixty persons perished.

HORRIBLE TORTURES BY THE AMERICAN ARMY

The Country Shocked Over the News That Now Comes from the Phillipine Islands

Special to the Times.

Washington, April 22 — "The Presidente's mouth was held open and water was allowed to run into it from a small tank. The Presidente was held under the tank for from five to ten minutes. When he was so full of water that his body was swollen he was rolled on his stomach violently on the ground. The water gushed from his mouth. He squealed. His eyes became bloodshot and he struggled like a crazy man. It took several soldiers to hold him."—Sergt. Edward L Davis, of Company M, Twenty-sixth Volunteer Infantry, in describing the "water cure" to the Senate Philippines Committee.

Sergt. Davis was at the taking of Igbaras. He was in the same regiment with Riley and Smith, who told of this same instance of "water cure" before the Senate Committee a short time ago. His story was substantially the same. Sergt. Davis lives at Greenfield, Mass. He is a soldierly-appearing young fellow, who told his story clearly and concisely. He was examined by Senator Rawlins and made all his statements under oath.

CAPT. GLENN PRESENT

Davis went to Igbaras with his company. Soon after the Massachusetts man arrived Capt. Glenn came with a detachment of regular troops. Capt. Glenn ordered Sergt. Davis to take a squad of men and bring in the Presidente. The headquarters were at a convent. Davis located the Presidente, arrested him and carried him to the convent.

Capt. Glenn, Lieut. Conger, and Dr. Lyon, the contract surgeon, were present when the Presidente was subjected to the "water cure." Capt. Glenn, who was responsible for the torture, was then on Gen. Hughes's staff as Judge-Advocate of the Visayas.

The Presidente, who was given the old. After reaching the convent he was requested to tell whether men had been sent out to notify the insurgents that the town had been captured by "water cure" was about forty years the Americans. He refused to reply.

Capt. Glenn at once detailed two privates belonging to the Eighteenth Infantry to strip the Presidente and administer the "water cure." The clothing was removed above the waist and the man's hands were tied behind him.

ORDERED BY THE CAPTAIN

"After this had been done," said Sergt. Davis, "the man was taken to the water tank and thrown upon his back while an interpreter stood over him. A stream of water was directed into his mouth, which was held open."

"Who gave the command for this treatment?" was asked.

"Capt. Glenn," was the reply.

"How was the man's mouth kept open?"

"By means of a stick, but I couldn't see just how it was done."

The second application of the "water cure" was described by the witness, who corroborated the testimony of Sergt. Riley, that the details of administration were supervised by Contract Surgeon Lyons, and that Capt. Glenn and Lieut. Conger were both present when it occurred.

Sergt. Davis said in reply to questions as to the physical effect, that the man "squealed" terribly and that his eyes were bloodshot, but that the next day he was able to mount his horse and lead the scouts to the mountain. Afterward he was, the witness said, taken to Iloilo and placed in prison.

The witness also repeated the statement that two police officers of the town of Igbaras had been subjected to the "water cure."

In answering questions of various Senators, Sergt. Davis said that the "water cure" torture in all the instances which he had indicated was applied by regular soldiers. The members of the Twenty-sixth Volunteers, to which he belonged, had not participated in this punishment. He had been in charge of a detachment of volunteers at Igbaras for several months before the regulars arrived and for some time afterward, but had no trouble with the natives.

WANTON BUTCHERY

Richard O'Brien, formerly a corporal in Company M, Twenty-sixth United States Volunteers, told yesterday to a New York World reporter of the tortures he had seen practised by officers and men of the United States army in the Philippines. He was with his regiment in the Philippines for two years, and was stationed on the Island of Panay, Province of Iloilo.

In speaking of the "water cure" torture he said that he remembered vividly when the Presidente, or Mayor, of the town of Igbaras, in the Province of Iloilo, was bound hand and foot and forced by means of the "water cure" to give information.

"Throughout the Philippines the 'water cure' system is the recognized means of forcing confessions from the insurgents and their friends," said O'Brien. "If a Filipino dies under the treatment nothing is thought of it."

In describing the wanton butchery of the natives, encouraged and countenanced by the officers, Corp. O'Brien tells this awful story of the visit of the troops to and the pillage of the town of Barrio la Nog.

"It was on the 27th day of December, the anniversary of my birth," said Corp. O'Brien, and I shall never forget the scenes I witnessed on that day. As we approached the town the word was passed along the line that there would be no prisoners taken. It meant that we were to shoot every living thing in sight, man, woman or child. The first shot was fired by the then first sergeant of our company. His target was a mere boy, who was coming down the mountain path into the town astride of a carabao. The boy was not struck by the bullet, but that was not the sergeant's fault. The little Filipino boy slid from the back of his carabao and fled in terror up the mountain side. Half a dozen shots were fired after him. The shooting now had attracted the villagers, who came out of their homes in alarm, wondering what it all meant. They offered no offence, did not display a weapon, made no hostile movement whatsoever, but they were ruthlessly shot down in cold blood, men, women and children. The poor natives huddled together or fled in terror. Many were pursued and killed on the spot.

FIRED ON WHITE FLAG

"Two old men, bearing between them a white flag and clasping hands like two brothers, approached the lines. Their hair was white. They fairly tottered, they were so feeble under the weight of years. To my horror and that of the other men in the command, the order was given to fire, and the two old men were shot down in their tracks. We entered the village. A man who had been on a sick-bed appeared at the doorway of his home. He received a bullet in the abdomen and fell dead in the doorway. Dum-dum bullets were used in that massacre, but we were not told the name of the bullets. We didn't have to be told. We knew what they were.

"In another part of the village a mother with a babe at her breast and two young children at her side pleaded for mercy. She feared to leave her home, which had just been fired —accidentally, I believe. She faced the flames with her children, and not a hand was raised to save her or the little ones. They perished miserably. It was sure death if she left the house—it was sure death if she remained. She feared the American soldiers, however, worse than the devouring flames.

ORDERED NATIVE BEHEADED

"At Guymbal American officers actually countenanced the beheading of a native in public, but the program was not carried out, simply because the appointed executioner became nervous and did not wield the bolo properly. The victim was Patro Gargenero, who was called a bandit, but who was however, a learned man. He had been Presidente of the town and was reputed to be wealthy. He was accused of having murdered a boy.

"I have said all I wanted to on the subject of the order to Gen. Chaffee to courtmartial Gen. Jacob H. Smith," said Secretary Root yesterday as he was about to sail for Cuba. He referred to the charge of Major Waller that Gen. Smith had given orders to "kill and burn."

"Some of the courts-martial will be held in this country, because the regiments from which witnesses are needed have been brought home, and it will be much easier to secure the evidence wanted here than in Manila. I cannot say now whether any of the officers against whom charges have been preferred will be tried in Manila or not."

CONDITION OF HOLLAND'S QUEEN IS UNCHANGED

The Terror Stricken Nation is in a Terrible State of Suspense

Special to The Times.

The Hague, April 22, 3.30 a.m. The condition of Queen Wilhelmina is unchanged. Her physicians say it is impossible to predict the date of the Crisis in her illness. An extraordinary Cabinet Council was held to-day. The meeting caused numerous rumors concerning a decision of the matter of the Regency but it is said upon good authority that this matter was not discussed at the Council. It is reported that a lady's maid of Queen Wilhelmina's household has been attacked with typhoid fever. The Queen's mother burst into tears when she was first told her daughter had typhoid fever. She seldom leaves the sick chamber.

London, April 22, 4 a.m. In a despatch from Castle Loo, the correspondent of the Daily Mail declares the information vouchsafed. The public minimizes the gravity of Queen Wilhelmina's condition and magnifies her chances for recovery. The griefstricken nation, which loves the Queen to the point of idolatry, the correspondent continues, is in a state of terrible suspense, while the politicians are aghast at the possibility of a fatal termination of her illness.

A PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT

Given Last Night by the Young Ladies of St. Luke's Church

A really delightful entertainment was given last night in the opera house, by the young ladies of St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham. There was a good audience, and the programme was of unusual merit, reflecting much credit on those who took part in it. The following was the programme and cast,—

CHARGED WITH TREASON

Col. Lynch, Who Fought for the Boers, Formally Indicted

Special to The Times.

London, April 22 — Although there is no indication that Colonel Arthur Lynch, who fought on the Boer side in the South African war, and who was elected to represent Galway City in Parliament in November last, has any intention of placing himself within reach of the British courts, the government is bringing witnesses from South Africa to testify in support of the charges of high treason brought against him. Lewis Handley, an American by birth, but a naturalized British subject and a farmer of the vicinity of Glencoe, Natal, landed in England to-day. He says Col. Lynch was the leader of the Boer force, principally composed of Irishmen, who raided his farm in 1900, confiscated his stock and other movables and destroyed his crops. Lynch informed Handley that he (Lynch) was a British subject.

The Evils of Constipation

This dangerous condition causes sick headache, abdominal pains, piles, and in severe cases insanity and apoplexy. The most agreeable and satisfactory remedy is Ferrozone, which makes the bowels so well ordered that natural and unassisted action is established. It is mild and certain in action and never causes distress or inconvenience, and may be taken as long as required. Pains in the stomach and intestines, piles, biliousness and headache disappear at once when Ferrozone is used. Recommended and sold by druggists, price 50c., or by Ormond & Walsh.

No Pills like Dr. Hamilton's.

Weather Notes

Probs, To-day.—Mostly fair and becoming warmer.

The weather is cold and wintry in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and snow is reported from many points. Further South in the Mississippi Valley a pronounced warm wave has appeared and is likely to extend into Southern Ontario

SENSATION II AUSTRALIA

Senator Declares Troops Should Not be Sent Against Boers

Special to The Times.

Victoria, B.C., April 22 — News of a pro-Boer sensation in the Australian house was received by the steamer Noana. Senator Higgins made a pro-Boer speech, arguing that there was no justification for the sending of contingents to South Africa by Australia to aid in exterminating a brave people and he argued for general amnesty for the Boers, his speech being drowned in the uproar it created.

Your Decision This Day is All-Important

Paine's Celery Compound
Guarantees a Freedom From Disease and Sickness

INDIFFERENCE AND CARELESSNESS LEAD TO PHYSICAL SHIPWRECK AND THE GRAVE

The weak, ailing, sick and diseased have now more than ever before under their control their physical condition. They are free agents, and almost wholly responsible for their future. When the brain is not affected, and the mind can discern between right and wrong, a duty to themselves, their friends and country loudly demands a marked decision—prompt and determined action when health is impaired and life is in danger.

It is the part of wisdom that true decision be made to-day; to-morrow may be too late. In thousands of cases the checking and banishment of disease depends upon instant action; An hour lost frequently means the snuffing out of some precious life.

Few people in our country are without some knowledge of the wondrous life-giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound, a medicine that guarantees release from the diseases common to life.

What will your decision be to-day, poor sufferer? Will you give Paine's Celery Compound the fair and honest testing that others are giving it, with its certain reward of health, strength, vigor and happiness, or will you remain indifferent and careless, content to pass your few days or weeks in misery, agony and wretchedness until the dark grave claims you as its victim?

It is almost needless to enumerate the blessed results that flow from Paine's Celery Compound when used promptly in springtime, as you and your friends have a knowledge of them. Of this you may be assured: the seeds of disease are banished, the system is fortified, the blood is made red and pure, the nerves braced, digestion regulated, headaches, sideaches and backaches forever dispelled, and sweet, restful sleep takes the place of insomnia.

IMPALED ON A HAT PEG.

London, April 21.— The funeral took place at Harrow of Police Constable Patrick Burns, whose death resulted from injuries he received in a remarkable manner on Good Friday night.

He was about to go downstairs when his foot caught on the top step, and he fell headlong. In falling he dashed against a row of hat-pegs fixed in the wall, one of which penetrated his eye with such force that as the man fell to the ground the peg was torn, with a large piece of wood, from the wall, and remained embedded in his head.

After a long period of unconsciousness he succumbed to the terrible injury a few days ago.

DISTRICTS OF RUSSIA ARE IN OPEN REVOLT

Times Records a Spontaneous Protest of Russians Against Present Conditions Similar to French Revolution

Special to The Times.

New York, April 21.—"Private acounts of absolute authenticity," says the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, give news of serious disorders in southwest Russia. Since the pillaging of the Duke of Mecklenburg's house the disturbances have spread to large districts in Kharkoff and Poltava, which are in open revolt. The rioters are unorganized, and have no definite object. The movement is apparently a spontaneous protest against the existing conditions. The correspondent says the present unrest in Russia recalls the situation in France before the revolution. Competent judges do not expect the movement to develop as the French revolution did, but certain things cannot go on as at present.

UNCLE SAM'S BIG WAR SAID TO BE OVER.

Surrender of Aguinaldo's Successor will Hasten the Event

PEACE NOW SAID TO BE IN SIGHT

But General Chaffee Reports Trouble with the Moros in the south—Soldier Murdered Chiefs Refuse to Give up the Guilty

Manila, April 22.—Gen. Malvar, the last of the great rebel Generals, has surrendered to Gen. Bell. This information was contained in the following telegram received from Gen. Lloyd Wheaton to-day.

"Malvar has surrendered unconditionally to Bell at Lipa. Organized armed resistance to the authority of the United States has thus been terminated in this department."

This is the climax of Gen. Wheaton's wise but just and consistent policy, which was inaugurated last December by Gen. Bell when he established protected zones and reconcentration camps. The camps were erroneously supposed to be similar to those of Captain-General Weyler in Cuba. They were quite the contrary. In the Philippine camps not a single case of starvation has been reported, and the death rate is below that of the neighboring provinces where there are no camps. The majority of the peasants are better fed, housed and protected than they were formerly.

In the meantime these people are co-operating with the native volunteers who are relentlessly rounding up the rebels. Their work has resulted in the capture or surrender of 3,600 riflemen and hundreds of storehouses with enormous provisions and supplies of ammunition.

The personal surrender of Gen. Malvar, with his promise that his entire command will come in, will permit thousands of people to return to their homes before the planting season begins, as they know now that they will not be disturbed by the rebels.

This announcement of Malver's surrender has caused the greatest rejoicing in the province of Laguna, Batangas and Cavite, where he had been operating with more or less success. It is a happy termination of the struggle in these places, which had necessitated the establishment of the reconcentration camps.

Gen. Bell, who has achieved this result, is held in universal respect and admiration by the natives.

Washington, April 19.—The War Department to-day received an encouraging despatch from Gen. Chaffee with reference to the campaign in Batangas province under Gen. Bell. He reports the uncontional surrender of Gen. Malver, one of the few remaining hostile insurgent leaders, and adds that organized armed resistance to the United States is terminated in the Department of the North Philippines.

Gen. Chaffee's despatch is as follows: "Unconditional surrender Malver to-day to Brig-Gen. J. Franklin Bell. Organized armed resistance to United States terminated Department North Philippines."

When Aguinaldo was captured Gen. Malver announced himself as leader of the Filipinos and tried to rally the scattered forces. A few months ago his camp and his private papers were captured, and since that time he has been kept on the run. Malvar is the last of the prominent Filipino Generals, Lukban, who commanded in Samar, being captured some weeks ago.

Items of Interest

London, April 22.—A new use for the numerous chalkpits in the south of England lies in their utilization as ranges village rifle practice. On Saturday afternoon the Countess of Onslow opened the new range of the Merrow Rifle Club, which is situated in a chalkpit near Clandon Park, Surrey. Lord Onslow has given the range to the club, and has promised to present a challenge cup for competition.

Kingston, Ont., April 21.Mrs. Bruce Carruthers this morning received a cablegram from Klerksdorp, in the Transvaal, from her husband, Lieut. Bruce Carruthers, which contained but two words: "Never better." This is the first word received since the battle in which he won fame.

SUFFERING FROM GUNSHOT.

Ottawa, April 22.—A cable from the Casualty Department at Cape Town announces that Farrier Wm. ARE RUINING IRELAND'S FAME.

Free Fight in a Church — Sequel to Lloyd George Riots.— French Colonial Weakness.

London, April 21.—The action of Dr. Thompson, M.P., in strenuously protesting against the Irish members cheering the news of Lord Methuen's defeat has been widely supported by Catholics in Ireland.

Speaking at a Catholic bazaar at Omagh, Dr. Thompson said that when he saw things done which he believed were ruinous to the fair fame and character of Ireland he would certainly speak out. He would be a coward and a poltroon if he did not do so.

FREE FIGHT IN A CHURCH.

London, April 21.—The campaign against alleged ritualistic practices in certain Bristol churches has culminated in a free fight in All Hallows' Church.

In endeavoring to eject a Wycliffe preacher, who stood up to condemn a portion of the service, the church officials met with strenuous opposition from a section of the congregation.

Sticks and umbrellas were freely used, men struggled fiercely together, ladies fainted, and the police had finally to be called to restore order.

SEQUEL TO LLOYD-GEORGE RIOTS.

London, April 21.— The Birmingham City Council recently discussed the report of the Watch Committee in the enquiry which they were directed by the council to make into the conduct of the police force towards the crowd on the occasion of the Lloyd-George riots. The report completely exonerated the chief constable and his principal officers, but admitted that certain officers, whom the committee had failed to discover, had lost their heads, and on their own volition assaulted inoffensive persons. The report was adopted. The riots arose out of the attempt of Lloyd-George, a pro-Boer, to address a demonstration.

London, Monday, April 21. — A despatch to the Standard from Pretoria, dated Saturday, says there is considerable reason for believing that a tentative agreement regarding peace has been arrived at, which, unless something unforseen happens to vitiate it, will prove mutually cordial. The correspondent adds that he understands that the basis of assured peace on the initiation of the Boers themselves has at length been reached. The Boer leaders left Pretoria Friday night. Gen. De Wet goes to Heilbron, Acting President Schalkburger and Gen. Delarey will leave the train at Klerksdorp, Gen. Lucas Meyer goes to the Lydenburg district, State Secretary Reitz and a companion will meet the burghers beyond Pietersburg, and Gen. Botha goes to Dundee and thence to Vryheid, whence he will reach his main commando. Arrangements have been made by which the burghers will be summoned to the different rendezvous, where on agreed dates the British terms will be clearly laid before them. Meanwhile there is nothing in the nature of an armistice except that no attacks will be made on the Boers on the actual dates of their various meetings. While it is possible that some of the Free State burghers will prove recalcitrant, it is confidently expected that the Transvaal Boers almost to a man will acquiesce in the wishes of their leaders.

The Pretoria correspondent of the Daily Telegraph concludes a despatch to that paper saying:—"As most of the Boer delegates have ordered clothing and groceries here for early delivery you may draw your own conclusions."

GEN WARREN DISSATISFIED.

London, Monday, April 21.—General Sir Charles Warren has written to the newspapers regarding the Spion Kop despatches published by the Government last Wednesday. He states that they do not contain some of the most important documents bearing on the subject, give a totally incorrect view of the matter if considered by themselves, and reflect injuriously upon the military reputation of himself and those who served so well under him. He trusts that the Government will publish the complete documents. Meanwhile he says he will refrain from making any further statement.

MUST CONSULT BURGHERS.

London, April 21.—The reference of the British terms by the Boer military leaders to their commandoes shows that the delegates are acting strictly in accordance with their own constitution, which says:—

"Treaties of peace require ratification by the Volksraad, which must be summoned as soon as possible for that purpose."

To-day the old Volksraad is scattered to the winds. Many of its members are killed, have been captured, or have fled from their country. Others have died. Only a bare remnant remains. Hence the delegates are obviously required to submit the matter to the people themselves as represented by the fighting burghers. Besides, under the Transvaal Constitution, the Volksraad is bound to allow due time for the people to express their views on any proposed law.

SUGGESTIVE RELIGIOUS CHANGES.

Many new devices to attract people to churches have been invented and adopted of recent years and a religious periodical, the Church Economist, gives special attention to descriptions of them and their working.

The most remarkable, not to say curious, of these innovations, are the vested choirs, borrowed from Roman Catholicism and Anglicanism, which have been introduced even into a Baptist church of New York, but more extensively into Methodist churches in several places.

On Easter Sunday the Washington Heights Baptist Church started the innovation of a vested choir of sixty voices, with cassock and cotta, and the women wearing also mortar-board hats. That is, the vestments are the same as in Episcopal churches. The introduction of such a choir into the Metropolitan Methodist Temple, a year ago, proved so successful, apparently, that the example has been followed by other Methodist churches, one at Chicago having come into line recently and conspicuously.

This is very suggestive because the two Protestant Churches which in the past were always most distinguished by the extreme simplicity of their worship and their church architecture, and were most violently opposed to anything like mere aestheticism in religious services, were the Baptist and the Methodist. They were plain people, and all worldly display, in raiment and in social life, were eschewed by them. Methodists were enjoined by Wesley, in his "General Rules," to "evidence their desire of salvation" by refraining from "putting on of gold and costly apparel." Like austerity of life was the Baptist rule, and the meeting houses of both denominations were usually without steeples or any other marks of a distinctively ecclesiastical architecture.

The change from all this to the pump of vested choirs and the imitation of purely ritualistic features is revolutionary. A generation ago it would have stirred up violent protest throughout those denominations. Now it seems to cause no disturbance whatever, but rather to provoke an amiable desire to repeat and extend the innovation.

Will these ritualistic Baptist and Methodist churches stop with vested choirs merely? Will they not go on, naturally and logically, to the adoption of other features of the liturgical churches they are imitating? We are likely to see the cross introduced, and perhaps the time will come when the plain communion table will give place to a veritable altar, with all its religious significance. This is, therefore, a serious innovation, suggestive of a radical doctrinal transformation in the future. We have seen how Ritualism in the Episcopal Church has advanced to a bold teaching of the Real Presence.

Meanwhile the Paulist Fathers tell of conversions from Protestantism to the Roman Catholic Church increasing at a rate so great and rapid that the time seems to be coming when the Catholic throng will be too large to be contained within the walls of their churches. On the other hand, the propagandas of Mormonism, Christian Science and "The New Thought" are described by their votaries as pushing ahead astonishingly, and, on their side, the agnostics are confident that belief in all Christian dogma and all supernaturalism is passing away not less rapidly.

The religious writers seem to be more disturbed at this time than ever before in the history of Christianity, and signs of unprecedented revolutionary changes appear in many directions.

Out of His Province.

A soap-maker and a banker were at a Wagner concert, says the "Christian Register." The programme did not please them, and they began to talk.

"Every man," said the banker, "wants to do something outside of his own work."

"Yes," answered the soap-maker. "I manufacture good soap, and yet I've always wanted to be a banker."

"You wouldn't be a good one. I am a successful banker, but I always wanted to write a book. And now here's this man Wagner tries his hand at music. Just listen to the stuff! And yet we all know he builds good parlor-cars."

Light Hogs.

A good many farmers in eastern Ontario are still adhering to the very foolish policy of marketing hogs that are too light in weight, and quite unsuitable for packing purposes. The Geo. Matthews Co., Limited, report that during the month of January their receipts of hogs graded as follows:—Selects, 1,308; light, 1,840; light fats, 690; heavy fats, 27; sows, 40; stags, 6; cripples, 21; stores, 123; a toal of 4,154 hogs, of which only 1,308, or about 33 per cent., were suitable for the manufacture of first-class export bacon. If the trade in Canadian bacon is to be increased or even maintained, at its present volume, it is absolutely necessary that only hogs of proper weight and quality be sent to the packing houses.

A Test For Good Butter.

The good housewife who said, "The way to test good butter is to smell it," was surely an expert judge of butter. The fact is that a really good judge of butter seldom tastes it but depends rather upon the senses of smell and sight. The dealer who really knows and deals in good butter can at any time when he is testing a crock or roll of butter, be seen to very carefully pass it in review before his olfactory nerve, and to break it and note the appearance of the broken surface.

The true flavor of butter can be quickly tested in the entirety of a package in this manner, while, if the sense of taste alone were depended upon and the package was not of even quality, the fact might go unnoticed. The quantity of salt in the butter can, of course, only be determined by tasting it. The surface exposed when a package or sample of butter is broken should exhibit what is known as a good grain. That means that it should have a clearly defined granular surface, similar to that found on the broken surface of cast iron of good quality. Do not fail to apply these tests when passing judgment on the quality of butter. Their careful observance and a little practice will make you an expert.—Michigan Farmer.

Clover For Egg Producing.

Experience has demonstrated the value of clover for egg producing time and again. Clover has just the material in it to form egg shell, and hence it becomes an essential part of every ration fed to the chickens. It may not be generally understood that there are nearly thirty pounds of lime contained in each thousand pounds of clover. The chickens fed daily with clover will consequently prove better egg layers than those denied it. The clover hay should be given to chickens in winter in quantities sufficient to satisfy them, and to make them eat more it is desirable sometimes to prepare it in various ways. Cook and chop it up, and mix it with meal or other articles. This will sometimes induce the hens to consume a great amount of clover each day. Cut up into short lengths and mixed with warm mash, and then fed only as fast as the chickens will clean it up each day, is probably the most economical way to feed the clover. Some cut the second crop of clover and place it in the poultry yard for the chickens to eat and scratch over at pleasure. This of itself is all right, but it is rather wasteful. More than half the clover will be lost, and the chickens do not actually eat much more than the leaves. The stalks contain most of the lime, and these should be prepared so the chickens will consume them. Of all foods that can be raised on a farm for poultry, clover is not only the best, but probably the cheapest, and a field of it is as essential to success as a pasture field is necessary to the success of dairying.—Annie C. Webster, in Massachusetts Ploughman.

Just What You Ask For.

Outside the drug store—the store of J. Milhau's Son, at No. 183 Broadway—you may read the announcement at the head of this column, "We give you just what you ask for."

We are glad to seize upon this occasion to pay a tribute to this motto, and, incidentally, to point out a dishonest and very common practice among merchants —that of substituting one article for another.

One business man devotes all his energy, his money and his time to building up the reputation of a certain article. He enables the retailer to make a large profit, and he spends his money that customers may be plentiful.

When a customer asks for the article in question it is dishonest to say to him, as many do:—

"Don't buy that. We have something else just as good and much cheaper."

If the merchant has something good and cheap of his own, let him sell it to his customers by all means. But let him not steal the trade of a man whose energy helps to build up his business. Let him not divert to his own pocket all of the profit which he ought to in honesty share with another.

There are wares that are made enormously profitable to the retailer simply because men push their business with intelligence and perseverance. It is ungrateful as well as dishonest for the sake of a little extra profit to cut into the legitimate business of the advertising manufacturer.

Incidentally, the public, as well as the storekeeper and the manufacturer, are interested in this question of substituting one article for another.

That which is represented as "just as good" is usually not just as good, but very far from it.

If a man has spent a million dollars building up the reputation of a certain article, it is to his advantage to keep up the quality of the material which enters into the manufacture of that article. His profit is large if he is honestly treated, and it would be suicide for him to use inferior material for the sake of a little extra money.

The man who makes up an imitation article and announces it as "just as good" has no such sum at stake. He has invested nothing. He has no valuable name to ruin, and it is to his interest to make the "just as good" article just as cheap as he can make it.

The buyer should remember these facts and put his confidence in that retailer who, like the man quoted at the head of this article, gives to the customer just what he asks for, treats the wholesaler honestly, and shows gratitude for the energy which builds up a successful business and makes the retailer prosperous.—From The New York Journal. Issued by the Association of American Advertisers.

A Classification.

Henry Thomas Buckle's thoughts and conversation were always on a high level. Once he remarked: "Men and women range themselves into three classes, or orders, of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons; the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things; the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

Ping-Pong in Society.

We have no idea on this side of the Atlantic of the extent to which "ping-pong" has affected English society, but the following from a London paper of late date gives an inkling of the popularity—absurd popularity, one is tempted to say—which it has attained:—

"The nice conduct of the celluloid has become a cult. 'Professors' we have already, and now comes the 'school,' where beginners are coached in the subtleties of our latest form of amusement.

"As befits the high rank of 'ping-pong,' the teaching class is an academy, and its location is the balcony at Niagara Hall. There half a dozen tables (9 feet by 5 feet) are open to students. They absorb the rudiments and go forward to excellence under the skilful tuition of Mr. P. Fleming, son of Tom Fleming, known as the father of lawn tennis.

"Around these tables stand, day by day, scores of men, young and middle-aged, maidens and matrons, eager to qualify for proficiency in the dining-room. Half a crown is the fee per lesson, and when the 'ping-pongers' have picked up some mastery of the game a shilling secures the table for a set.

"Frequently a really good player strolls in and takes a turn. It is as if Stevenson descended on a pool-room and casually 'took a cue,' or MacLaren played as 'Mr. A. N. Other' on a village cricket ground.

"Thursday brings its special diversion. Men and women from the ice rink below come up and play 'ping-pong' on skates.

"Of course, there are no sofas nor cosy corners in this academy, and hence no easy hiding-place for the errant ball. Players do not grovel on dusty floors. Ingenuity has evolved a 'scoop' with a long handle to entrap the wanderer in meshes of elastic.

"The game prospers all round. Mr. Fleming has always plenty of calls on his teaching ability from private houses.

"On Thursday week his Majesty is to visit Niagara and watch the skating champions on the ice. It is not beyond the dreams of 'ping-pongers' that the King may ascend the balcony and look on at a game.

"Nay, the fluttering hope is that Edward VII. will himself take a racquet and his first (public) essay in what somebody in 'Measure for Measure' long ago foretold as 'the game of tick-tack.'"

The same paper, The Express, in another issue raises the point as to whether the craze for "ping-pong" is not a sign of national decay, and really, after reading the above, the suggestion does not seem unreasonable. Mr. Kipling might have done his country a real service if he had attacked "ping-pong" instead of cricket and football. Or can it be that the craze is partly due to his bitter lines, for in yet another reference to the new game it is stated that "suburban athletes have forsaken football and golf to foregather in a stuffy club room on Saturday afternoons and trifle with a celluloid ball"; and again "The National Sporting Club has invested in a championship 'ping-pong' table, and amateur boxers have been seen glaring at each other, not across the ring, but over a miniature net." Surely the "flannelled fools," etc., have gone from bad to worse, and the Imperial bard should shortly be heard from again.

Misfortunes of Some Welshmen.

The following extract from an article by Mr. W. L. Griffith, Canadian Government agent for Wales, in The Western Daily News, Cardiff, gives a picturesque sketch of the misfortunes of the Patagonian Welshmen who are likely to come to Canada shortly:—When the idea of a Welsh colony in Patagonia was first mooted Wales was seething with political discontent. But, strong as this feeling undoubtedly was, it required much effort on the part of Professor Michael Jones of Bala and the Rev. Lewis Jones of Festiniog to prevail upon the small band of people which eventually made the venture. The motives of the self-deceived leaders in the movement will always remain open to debate. The attraction to the rank and file was the vision of free land, immunity from taxes, and the self-government so dear to the heart of the Welshman. Fired with these ideas, the imaginative Cymry saw visions of a Cymric Utopia. They not only cherished these ideals, but they were prepared to do all in their power to compass their realization. They were brave, earnest, laborious, ready and willing to sacrifice self. It is pathetic to think of the shock these brave men and women encountered when they finally landed on the desert shores of New Bay, and discovered that the country they had fondly pictured as one of illimitable resources was nothing but a barren desert, and that their leaders, whom they implicitly trusted, had been guilty of carelessness, which was, perhaps, worse than inexcusable. In fairness it must here be stated that Professor Michael Jones squandered a private fortune on what had become his pet project. As they were without means the Welsh people were face to face with starvation. There was nothing to do but, to use an Americanism, "scratch for a living." The history of these people during the first years of the settlement entitles them to the greatest credit.

A Story of Prince Henry.

Prince Henry of Prussia, according to a story told by a diplomat who was once attached to the British Embassy in Berlin, was one day chatting with an English friend in a cafe in Bonn, when he became an object of suspicion to one of those meddling minor officials who flourish in such numbers in Germany. The Prince is too discreet a man to discuss affairs of State in a public place, but on this occasion some subject arose which, while not of general interest, related to the Imperial family. The conversation was in English, and the spying official was acquainted with that language. At length Prince Henry remarked:—"Why, my dear fellow, don't you see that the Emperor would be even crazier than some people seem to believe he is if he did anything like that?"

The official leaned toward his Royal Highness and said: "Sir, are you aware that there is a lese majeste law in this country? Let me hear another remark of that kind, and I make a complaint against you."

The Englishman took in the situation, and a moment afterward remarked: "As I was saying to your Royal Highness before we were interrupted——"

The meddler gasped, rose hastily and withdrew.

A Smart Salesman.

Jeweler (to new boy)—Did you sell anything while I was out, Johnny?

"Yes, sir. I sold six plain gold rings."

"Good, my boy," said the jeweler, highly pleased. "We'll make a first-class salesman of you one of these days. You got the regular price, of course?"

"Oh, yes, sir. The price was marked on the inside, 18k., and the gentleman took all that was left, sir."—N.Y. "Life."

HELPLESS.

The man trussed up so that he can neither move hand nor foot is in his helplessness a fair type of many a man affected by rheumatism. Often the disease only partially disables, and with crutch and cane the sufferer hobbles painfully about.

Rheumatism can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This great blood purifying medicine eliminates the poisons which cause the disease. It increases the activity of the blood-making glands, and so increases the purity and abundance of the blood supply, thus giving vigor and vitality to all organs of the body which depend for their health on plenty of pure blood. It builds up the body with firm flesh instead of flabby fat. The "Discovery" contains neither alcohol nor narcotics.

"I had been troubled with rheumatism for twelve years, so bad at times I could not leave my bed," writes Mr. R. J. McKnight, of Cades, Williamsburg Co., S. C. "I was badly crippled. Tried many doctors, and two of them gave me up to die. None of them did me much good. The pains in my back, hips and legs (and at times in my head), would nearly kill me. My appetite was very bad. Everybody who saw me said I must die. I took five bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and four vials of the 'Pellets,' and to-day my health is good after suffering twelve years with rheumatism."

Cover Crops and Fertilizers.

Prof. I. P. Roberts of Cornell University says:—Cover crops may in a measure take the place of fertilizers and manures. They are not, however, a universal panacea for all soil deficiencies, neither are they a full substitute in all cases for fertilizers. There is always a wide field for the profitable use of one or all of the concentrated forms of fertilizers named, and in many cases there is also a special place for the use of fertilizers, therefore the more need of honest goods. Commercial fertilizers furnish available plant food, but no humus. The cover crop furnishes both, but it is only fair to say that the plant foods in the former are more available than in the latter. Cover crops improve the physical condition of the soil, lessening the cost of tillage. Physically, fertilizers benefit the soil little or none. The humus furnished by the cover crops increases the availability of the plant food already in the soil; fertilizers do not. Cover crops shade the land and conserve moisture.

It is impossible to accurately compare the cost of fertilizers with the cost of seeds for the cover crops and the preparation of the soil for them. The cost of increasing productively by extra tillage, by the use of fertilizers, by cover crops or by all three means, can only be determined in each case by the farmer interested. I give below a single illustration of what a cover crop contains, knowing that another cover crop under other conditions might either be more or less valuable. Second growth of clover, furnished in roots and tops per acre the following:—Nitrogen, 138.86 lbs.; phosphoric acid, 67.35 lbs.; potash, 109.98 lbs. There is removed by 25 bushels of wheat and accompanying straw, nitrogen, 42 lbs.; phosphoric acid, 20 lbs., and potash, 27 lbs. It is believed that most of the nitrogen taken up by legumes is secured from the uncombined nitrogen in the atmosphere. The clover did not add to either the store of phosphoric acid or potash. The plant took them from the soil and made them available.

The word "ponger," indicating an exponent of the art or science of ping pong, has lately sprung into existence. Do the users of this euphonious but backboneless noun realize what they are responsible for? Witness the result :—

"If a man who plays at ping pong is a
"ponger,"
Then a singer at a "sing song" is a
"songer";
If the "songer" is a "singer,"
Then the "ponger" is a "pinger,"
And the man who says it's wrong must be a "wronger."

If your charming partner at the game's a "pingstress,"
Then an operatic nightingale's a "singstress";
If the song she sings is sung,
Is a game of ping pong "pung"?
And is the girl who lingers called a "lingstress"?

After some time a number of passengers got out, and the old gentleman sank into the nearest corner with a weary sigh.

The customer had not been sitting long at the hospitable table of a certain hotel in London when he noticed something mysterious about his plate of "fine old Stilton" and bread.

He watched it very closely for some time, and then with a look of awe on his face, called lustily to the waiter.

"Waiter!" he cried, "remove this cheese."

"Beg pardon, sir," said the waiter. "Can I bring you any other kind?"

"Remove this cheese, I tell you!"

"We've some fine Gorgonzola, sir. I'll——"

"Great Jupiter, man! If you don't remove it immediately I'll call the police!"

"Sorry, sir," said the terrified waiter. "Is there anything wrong?"

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
The World Lost for Love's Sake
By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell; Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

White as death Aleck leaned forward and saw Daisy sitting among the velvet cushions, and to his intense joy—alone.

"I was a madman to be suspicious of my darling," he muttered. "What would she say if she knew it?"

At that instant she raised her eyes and saw him.

"Aleck!" she murmured in horror too great almost for words.

How long had he been sitting in that coach opposite watching her! Dear heaven! how long?

He joined her at once.

"My darling," he said, taking his seat by her side, "I am so glad to see that you have changed your mind about going driving. I am beginning to think now your refusal to go with me was because you preferred your own thoughts to my company, not very complimentary—that."

"I am never so happy as when I am with you, Aleck," she whispered, and he wondered why her voice quivered so piteously, and the big pearly tear drops started in those bluebell eyes.

"It was a sudden whim of mine to go riding, even after refusing you; but I am full of whims, Aleck—you must not think strange of anything I may do, will you, dear?"

It was only natural, loving her as well as he did, he should readily acquiesce in anything she might say.

Daisy readily surmised the true state of affairs; her tormentor must have seen Aleck approaching and that was how he happened to make such a quick exit from the coupe.

But about the ball he had set his heart upon attending, how should she secure him an invitation when her friend Mrs. Dillingham was one of the most particular of women as to her acquaintances?

Daisy called upon her friend the next day and the subject was broached with great tact.

"A friend of yours you are anxious to introduce to me? I shall be most pleased to see him," remarked Mrs. Dillingham. "He is a stranger here, you say; that is unpleasant. If I were to meet him previously I should be pleased to send him an invitation to my ball, any friend of yours must be a valuable acquisition to society, I feel sure."

She wondered why her pretty young friend blushed so pitifully to the very roots of her curly golden hair, then turned so deadly pale.

"Your sister Olive will be here in time for my ball she writes me," Mrs. Dillingham went on, "so we will have two agreeable strangers at least—the graceful French count and pretty Olive."

And again Mrs. Dillingham wondered why her friend shuddered as with sudden chill. Daisy could not bear the name of Monsieur Devereaux—as he had chosen to call himself—mentioned in the same breath with that of her sister Olive.

CHAPTER XIX.
Under a Mask.

The count had been presented to Mrs. Dillingham, and his handsome face, ready wit, and polished manners made him a prime favorite with the lady at once.

"Where will it all end?" Daisy wondered, as she stood dressing for the ball—even Olive noticed how preoccupied she was.

"Of course it will be a grand affair," said Olive, glancing complacently at her lovely figure in the long mirror, "and I intend to make many conquests—among them the noble French count whom every one is raving over. By the way, Daisy, where did you first meet the count? —it is strange you never spoke of it —he is not one to forget, I should imagine, judging from Mrs. Dillingham's description of him."

"I have forgotten where I first met him—at Saratoga, I think," faltered Daisy.

"But Aleck did not meet him," persisted Olive, "he said so. That was strange. Why, Daisy, how awkward you are."

The lovely pearl fan her sister was holding had fallen to the floor from her nerveless hands with a crash —Daisy felt that she should surely die if she were obliged to hear another word concerning her tormentor.

"You must present me to the handsome count—at once," pursued Olive. "Who knows what may come of it—I may yet be a countess. I shall do my best to attract him."

"You must not do it, Olive," Daisy gasped. "Shun him—remember my words—shun him."

Olive Gordon looked at her curiously. "Why do you speak like that?" she asked frowningly. "I am sure if he were not very nice you would never have taken so much pains to introduce him to Mrs. Dillingham. I understand just what is the matter with you, Daisy, it's pure, simple jealousy—you're afraid pure, simple jealousy—you're afraid only plain Mrs. Hamilton."

"I'd rather be Aleck's wife than have the whole world," said Daisy huskily—bravely keeping back the hot tears that would start to her eyes.

It was like death to her to go to the ball and face the fiery eyes of the man who had it in his power to blast her life or to spare her—and more bitter than death to present him to Aleck and her sister, Olive. She never remembered afterward how she got through it. She noticed with horror, how admiringly the count's eyes rested on Olive's pretty, piquant face, and a glance full of fire and passion seemed to flash from his eyes to hers.

"A half a million in her own right," the count was thinking to himself as he bowed low over Olive Gordon's pretty white hand. "That isn't bad—besides the girl is beautiful. Why shouldn't I win her? her sister must use her influence in my behalf."

"This count is a very good fellow, I suppose," said Aleck to Daisy when they found themselves for a few moments alone together; "but there is something about him which puzzles me—upon my honor, he does not seem accustomed to good society, and there is a sort of flashiness about his dress. He seems rather attentive to Olive, don't you think so? How did you come to know him, Daisy?" he inquired, abruptly.

The lights and the flowers of the conservatory in which they stood seemed to whirl around her; by a violent effort she controlled her voice to speak.

"It was at Saratoga, Aleck, I think," she faltered disconnectedly.

"How strange that you did not mention it at the time," he said con-

Honor for a Canadian.

Canadians generally will be interested in learning that Dr. J. Beattie Crozier, author of the famous work, "History of Intellectual Development," has been selected as one of the 300 representatives of the empire in the splendid ten-guinea volume of portraits and biographies which the Grosvenor Press are bringing out. The work consists of representative men of every class outside of the military and civil services, who will have a volume to themselves. Dr. Crozier will be one of the representatives of the department of philosophy. Also, of course, he will stand as one of the representatives of Canada, a distinction he has well earned, and on which I am sure his countrymen will warmly congratulate him.

An Outspoken Journal.

It is refreshing, and even entertaining, to turn occasionally to that ultra-Radical English journal, Reynolds' Newspaper, and see the use which is still made of that right of free speech which is sometimes supposed to have been menaced by the developments of late years. Reynolds' does not take much stock in the colonies of the empire, nor, for that matter, in the mother country either, and in an article dealing with the war the other day made the following amiable reference to the progressive colony of New Zealand, the advanced radicalism of which might have been expected to meet with sympathy in its columns :—"Amid all this scene of woe and desperation, one sinister figure emerges—the ogre of Capitalism. Seddon, the frozen meat 'patriot,' with the hostile tariff against British goods, and his bankrupt colony living on borrowed money, rages about the contracts for supplying the army. The foreign Jewish 'patriots'—who used to sing 'God Shave the Queen'—domiciled here, have secured most of those contracts, as they secured the astounding contracts for the supply of horses. And behind this section of old Jewry is that other section of Judaism with which Rhodes the Raider is connected. Fine patriots, indeed, making their millions out of the war, while the Government refuses to pay poor Tommy Atkins his back wages, leaving him to starve in the street, or to die in the workhouse."

Here, too, is Reynolds' pleasantly frank way of dealing with the Anglo-Japanese alliance :—"We are going the way of all nations given up, on the one hand, to the most sensual luxury, on the other to the most immoral and criminal seizure of their neighbors' territory. The latest sign of our feebleness, under a Government composed of rich men and land monopolists, whom the international Jewish capitalists have by the throat, is the treaty with Japan. Only a couple of months ago that vulgar self-advertiser Chamberlain was hurling insults at Germany—a country that had previously rejected his cringing appeal for an alliance—and boasting of our 'splendid isolation.' To-day our Government, composed of fools and knaves, recognizing the gravity of the position of affairs in South Africa, is obliged to beg little Japan, a semi-savage nation, with a veneer of western culture among its more prosperous classes, to enter into an alliance with decaying England. The humiliation of it! The danger of it!"

Presbyterian Lenten Service.

A regular Lenten service in a Presbyterian church is not heard of often, but Dr. Hunter of the King's Weigh House Church, London, has begun this innovation during the present season of Lent. In the course of a conversation with a representative of a London newspaper, Dr. Hunter expressed himself as strongly in favor of the observance of all the seasons of the "Christian year." "It belongs," he said, "to the whole of Christendom and not to any one section only. Nonconformists have lost much through their non-observance of these special seasons. For instance, Lent arose originally out of a deep necessity of the inner life, and, more even than men long ago, we require such a pause amid the rush of business and pleasure. It is well for us to have such a season, it is better still if we seek to profit by it. It is wise and good that so many in our day, and in so many of our churches, are returning to the old paths of meditation and prayer and are seeking to fill the best of the old forms and observances with a truer and better meaning and spirit."

Dr. Hunter has always been an advocate of the observance by Free Churchmen of the feasts and fasts of the church. When he began his ministry in York twenty-eight years ago he introduced the custom of a service on Good Friday, and in his church at Glasgow he had for two years daily prayer. At King's Weigh House Church on the Sunday evenings in Lent, Dr. Hunter is delivering a course of sermons on "Self-discipline," and he has announced a "class for young persons wishing to be prepared for the Communion of the Lord's Supper," which is presumably on the lines of a confirmation class in the Church of England. The service book in use at King's Weigh House is one compiled by Dr. Hunter, and used by him at Glasgow, and, while based mainly on liturgical lines, it provides for the exercise of extempore prayer.

To Make Colts Shy.

Nearly every colt, when first driven away from home, will shy and scare more or less at objects along the roadside. After he has been driven a few times the common practice is to strike him with the whip every time he does this. It is provoking to feed a horse hay three times a day and then see him scare at a little pile of hay in the road. The first thing that comes into the mind is to give him a cut with the whip.

Nothing worse than this could be done. The next time he will not only be afraid of the object, but of the whip also, and by a little training in this way he will soon be confirmed in the habit of shying and scaring at nearly everything he sees. First the tendency, then the habit, is the law of nature, and when the pile of hay or rock, or whatever startles, is connected with the whip, as it soon will be, the habit is fixed for life. You cannot whip horses into good habits; you can [illegible] them very easily [illegible].

"MANY FALSE PROPHETS SHALL RISE."

BY REV. P. Z. EASTON.

When our Lord was asked what would be the signs by which His people might know that His coming was near at hand, He mentioned, among others, (Matt. 24: 5), that many would come in His name, saying I am Christ, and would deceive many. If it were possible, He added, "they will deceive the very elect." It is evident that such teachers must be very subtle and have much that is true in their teaching, otherwise sincere people would not be deceived. As the counterfeit coin would not pass if it was all base metal, but is accepted the more readily the more silver it has in it, so the most dangerous teaching is that which contains a leaven of truth.

This fact was brought impressively to my mind by an utterance of one of our ablest scholars. Lecturing to students he stopped suddenly and spoke to them with great earnestness, to the following effect:—"If you forget all that I have taught you, there is one thing which I desire that you should remember. The danger which threatens the church is not what most people suppose it to be. It is a matter concerning which ninety-nine people out of a hundred are ignorant. The faith is being undermined; and in no long time the church will be called to pass through a crisis more severe than anything in her past history." He then went on to point out that the wicked Haman, who was plotting the destruction of the church, was the insidious Pantheistic teaching of the day. Nine years have passed since this utterance, and it is evident to-day not only that the same condition exists, but that we are rapidly hastening toward the crisis then spoken of. It is not the church alone, it is the State and the family also, whose very foundations are being undermined.

One of the essential characteristics of Pantheism is its esoteric character—one thing to the outside world, and another to those who are initiated into the system; one thing again to the catechumen who is yet in the initial stage, and another to the adept who has gone through all the degrees. If it be asked how can we know anything about a system which is thus wrapped up in mystery, the answer is, the system is old, its sects many, and by comparing these sects and studying their literary remains we have very valuable literary and historical data upon which to base a judgment.

One of the amazing things about all these sects is the extraordinary fascination and seductive influence which they exert upon their followers. It is the story of the pied piper of Hamelin, with this difference, that it is not children, nor even women, but strong men also, who are borne along by the current. It is, in fact, a sort of spiritual intoxication, not to say delirium, which seizes upon them in which the senses are drowned and the voice of reason is not heard. It is impossible to argue with them, because there is no common ground on which to stand. That which the common sense of mankind declares to be black is to them white; that which is manifest folly is to them the highest wisdom. Talk not to them of a future heaven; they are in heaven now; nor of the beatific vision, for they have heard, and seen, and handled. Not all, it is true, are thus crazy. We are speaking here more particularly of Oriental Pantheists; but something of this same character is seen in all forms of the delusion.

How shall we account for the fact? We must bear in mind that the Pantheistic tempter is not the devil in horns and hoofs, but the devil transformed into an angel of light, who comes to mankind to-day as he did to the Saviour in the wilderness, with the offer of the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them, on the one sole condition of accepting him as Lord and master. This is all he asks. No change of religion and no change of life. All things to all men in a sense somewhat different from that of the apostle. He is an exceedingly obliging and courteous individual. He is also a very pious individual and a very self-sacrificing one, ready in many cases even to lay down his life for the cause. Is it any wonder that he has deceived many, and that many have been moved to inveigh with righteous indignation against the hard-heartedness of those who would impugn the motives of such an excellent person. What grace, they cry; what goodness, what heavenly language! Would that his uncharitable accusers were half as good as he! Nevertheless, let us listen to the great Persian writer when he cries: "O how much sugar-like sweetness, within which poison was concealed." In the story of the wily vizier that master mind has drawn just such a character, a strange combination of saint and devil, a character by no means uncommon in Persian history. Let the reader ponder these and other like words of Scripture: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." (I. Tim. 4:1).

He Was Better Off Without It.

"That is a finished painting, miss. It is entitled, 'The Snow Storm.'"

Must be There Early.

The chosen few who will find seats in the Abbey on Coronation Day are planning their arrangements for this day far ahead of time, and with the greatest precision. One lady, according to The Daily Mail, has already given orders to her hairdresser to be with her at 6 o'clock on the morning of the eventful day. When Queen Victoria was crowned many of those in attendance at the Abbey were compelled to leave their homes at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. London is more than twice as large now as it was 65 years ago, and the difficulties of locomotion on such an occasion will be proportionately greater. Moreover, there are few now who will remember witnessing a previous coronation, none who are well past the three score and ten mark, while in 1838 middle-aged people would easily recollect the coronations of Victoria's two immediate predecessors, Wm. IV. and George IV. The King himself is said to be paying great attention to the details of the coronation procession, and it will doubtless prove a pageant worthy of comparison with the gorgeous scenes that have marked the most notable coronations of the past. One of the most famous of these was the coronation procession of Elizabeth, when England dared once more to breathe freely after the horrors of Mary's reign, and the young and charming Queen—charming at least by comparison—was received by her people with a spontaneity of enthusiasm that had been absent at the costly pageantry that attended her melancholy middle-aged sister. Elizabeth herself had been present at Mary's coronation procession, and had sat in her litter, clad in "a goune of purple velvet, furred with powdered ermins, having on her head a kale of cloth of tinsell beset with pearl and stone, and above the same upon her head a round circle of gold beset so richly with pretius stones that the value thereof was inestimable, the same kale and circle being so massie and ponderous that she was fain to beare up her head with her hand." Five years later, at her own coronation in 1558, Elizabeth made her progress from the Tower to Westminster "richly furnished and most honourably accompanied, as well, with the nobilitie of the realme as also with a notable trayne of goodly and bewtifull ladies richly appoynted." On her entry into the city she was "of the people received marveylous entirely, as appeared by the assemblie, prayers, wishes, welcomings, cryes, tender woordes, and all other signs which argue a wonderfull earnest love"; to all of which tokens of good-will Elizabeth responded "by holding up her handes and merie countenance to such as stoode farre off, and most tender and gentle language to those that stoode nigh to her Grace did declare herself no lesse thankfullye to receive her people's good wyll than they lovingly offered it unto her." Her graciousness was extended to the humblest of the people. "If the baser personages had offered her Grace any flowers or such like as a signification of their good wyll, or moved to her any suit, she most gently, to the common rejoysing of all the lookers on, staid her chariot and heard theyr requests." Thus she passed on amid pageants innumerable through the city, "whiche withoute any forreyne persone of itself beautifyed itself."

The Soldier's Paper.

I was handed the other day some copies of a queer little South African paper, "The Northern Post and Border News," printed at Aliwal North, in Cape Colony. It is printed chiefly for circulation among the soldiers, and Tommy Atkins is only too glad, they say, to buy them at the rate of sixpence each. They are somewhat high at the price, for there is very little news in them. The papers are printed only on one side, and the whole of the matter is contained in one or two columns, and in large type at that. The only news printed, apart from rigidly censored Reuter's despatches relating either to military operations in South Africa or to proceedings in England immediately associated with the war, are the latest prices of Rand shares, and the result of the English-Australian cricket matches in England. So are the three incongruous elements of war, commerce and sport brought under the soldier's eye in the same column. Yet the first place and the biggest type are given to the statement that "when stumps were drawn for the day only four wickets were disposed of, and the score stood at 650 runs. Evidently Kipling's attack on cricketers finds little sympathy in the army, in whose behalf it was in a sense written. "The Islanders" are still islanders, and Kipling will hardly succeed in changing their nature. In the biggest type in the little paper of Feb. 6 last the words, "Bad News! Bad News!" in letters an inch and a half high, catch the eye, and give a momentary impression that the censorship cannot be so rigid after all, when headlines like this are put over British reverses. The second line, "Slaughter of the Innocents," suggests a somewhat flippant view of a presumably serious situation, but that is only what we have been taught to expect of Tommy. Reading on, however, we find the old, familiar phrases: "We must evacuate our present premises. Now's your chance," etc., etc. "Come early and do not miss this last and only opportunity." It is only a dry goods merchants' slaughter, after all. But the name at the foot of the advertisement is instructive. It is not Saxon or Celtic, but good sound Dutch, two of them, in fact, viz., Rascher, Keast & Co. These burghers are not so slow after all at improving their opportunities or copying our own most advanced business methods. One of the advertisements, printed in both English and Dutch, is signed by S. R. French, Postmaster-General of Cape Colony, and calls for tenders for posts between Aliwal North and Jamestown. Apparently there is no great rush for the work, the advertisement starting, "No satisfactory tender having been received," etc. Driving a mail cart in this region just now is probably a line of work that presents unusually favorable opportunities for being potted by some odd member of a stray commando.

A Matter of Spelling.

Those who love to study human nature often derive as much pleasure from watching the people who visit picture-galleries as they receive from the pictures themselves. It is not every day, however, which produces so amusing an incident as one which an English paper reports:

Two ladies were looking at a picture by Mr. Faed, in the Royal Academy, entitled, "His Only Pair." The artist has depicted a poor boy sitting up in bed while his hard-working mother mends his only pair of trousers. The boy, although obliged to stay in bed while the repairs are under way, is contentedly eating an orange.

One of the visitors looked at the picture with searching gaze, and then remarked to her companion: "'His Only Pair!' I don't call that a pear at all! It's an orange that he is eating."

For the Farmer.

Sheep are the only animals which do not really exhaust the land on which they feed. They distribute manure evenly on the field and tramp it into the soil, feeding upon plants that other animals will not consume.

It is claimed that if tobacco stems or refuse be placed around the base of a peach tree the borer will not attack the tree. The mode of applying is to get the stems around the trees, on the ground, and fasten them to the trees higher up. It is worthy of a trial.

Another remedy suggested for the curculio is to spray just before the trees blossom with a mixture of a pound of Paris green in sixty gallons of water. Two weeks later use kerosene emulsion, giving a third spraying about June 1st. This method, it is said, will destroy the curculio, leaf lice and other enemies of the plum.

Heat, moisture and occasionally cooling are the factors at work in the production of chickens. Heat is of course supplied by the hen, who, also, if she be a good setter, will see to the cooling, though as a rule it is better not to trust entirely to her for this. But moisture is beyond her control if the place of setting is allotted to her. In some districts there is no trouble whatever on this score, as the atmosphere is charged with sufficient for the needs of the eggs. But in others very great care has to be taken or dryness of the atmosphere will be fatal to successful hatching. Seasons also differ.

How to Spray.

The agricultural station of the University of Illinois has issued bulletin No. 68, prepared by Professor Arnold V. Stubenrauch, on "Important Details of Spraying." In the chapter describing the proper method of spraying, we read:

Having the mixtures properly prepared and thoroughly agitated cannot alone insure success. Unless the spray is properly applied, all preliminary effort is lost. To spray properly is more difficult than is usually supposed, especially where materials in suspension are used. It will not do to go out with a determination "to do a thorough job and give them an everlasting soaking" until everything is dripping. If this is done there will be less material on the trees in the end than if less were applied in a proper manner. This to some may seem paradoxical. Nevertheless, it is a fact, and an attempt will be made to show just how it takes place. In order to do this it will be necessary to consider the globules of water as they come from the nozzle, carrying with them suspended particles of Paris green or Bordeaux mixture, or both, as the case may be. The settling which takes place. The only way this can be avoided is the globules of water after they become fixed to the fruit and leaves. Hence the larger the globule, the more settling will take place, and consequently the more material will be deposited at one place in the spray tank goes on without is to have the globules very small and fine as they leave the nozzle, and to keep them intact as separate, fine globules after they become attached to the fruit or leaf. Hence the importance of the injunction: "Use only a fine nozzle; use force enough to keep the liquid issuing as a fine mist, and spray only until the foliage and fruit are completely bedewed."

It requires considerable skill to do this properly and cover the surface fully. If it cannot be done with one spraying it would pay better to go over the trees twice, allowing the first application to dry before giving the second, than to try to accomplish it all at one time, and thus run the risk of going further than the simple bedewing of the fruit or leaves. If the spray is continued too long the fine globules will "run together" to form one or several large ones, which, instead of remaining fixed and drying just where they strike, will run down to the lowest place and drip. Of course, the suspended material settles to the lowest point of the globule, which is, in that case, spread over a considerable surface of the fruit. Some of the upper portions are then left completely bare. At the lower edge the material will drip off with the water, or often accumulate in sufficient quantity to cause injury.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The advance in the price of live stock is bothering the local butchers just now.

—The country roads are in fine condition for driving, notwithstanding recent rains.

—Mr. H. D. Burnett will deliver an address before the Fortnightly Club on Tuesday night of next week, on "The Ether and its Disturbing Agents."

—Mr. Ed. Brown has just purchased a very handsome buggy. It has all the latest improvements, including pneumatic tires, ball bearings &c.

—When you want the best quality of photos taken go to Whiten's, you get the best there. If you want the best quality in crayon work, take your small pictures to Whiten, 158 Hunter St. west.

—Mr. John C. Strickland, one of the South African recruits, from Lakefield, was presented, on the eve of his departure to the veldt, with a handsome pipe, by the members of the Hockey Club, of that village.

—Through a misprint in our report of St. Luke's church vestry meeting in Saturday's issue, we stated that the liabilities were $31,000. It should have read $1250. The finances of the church are in a prosperous condition, the assets being $32,000.

—Guelph Board of Trade has a membership of 132. The business men of that town believe in pushing things. Peterborough people, if we may judge from the small membership and slight interest displayed in our Board of Trade, are either satisfied with the present rate of progress or despair of their ability to induce a better state of things.

—On Sunday last thieves entered the house of Mr. Nelson Rusaw, who lives in the Township of Douro, just above Auburn, and stole a silver watch, a gold chain, a new suit of clothes and a pair of boots. Mr. Rusaw and his family were away at the time, and the doors of the house were left locked. The doors had evidently been unlocked by another key. There is as yet no clue.

—Bobcaygeon Independent.—Managers promoters, or proprietors of Shows, whether local or foreign, should make a note of the fact that if they wish their business reported, it is necessary to leave a Pass at this office for the reporter. While noticing professional shows in so much advertising, and reporting amateur affairs is merely giving a pleasurable gratification to the performers this journal is ready to give freely a moderate amount of its time, labor and space to such matters. It does not however, intend to pay for the thankless task of serving others for nothing.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Miss Armstrong, of the Golden Lion, is in Toronto, attending the millinery openings.

—Miss Gertie Wallace, of Lakefield, is in town, the guest of Miss Fitzgerald, Ashburnham.

—Toronto Globe.—"Mrs. Young of Peterborough, has been staying in town with Judge and Mrs. McDougall of Carleton Lodge."

—Miss K. Campbell and Miss Margaret Chambers returned yesterday from a brief visit to Miss Chamber's parents in Manvers.

—The many friends of Mr. Macfarlane Wilson will be pleased to know that at a late hour last night he was resting well, and was likely to recover.

—Mr. Alex. Gillies, of Paterson & Gillies, wholesale stationers, Montreal, was in town yesterday, and favored The Times with a call.

—The many friends of ex-Warden Fitzgerald, of Smith, will be pleased to learn that he is recovering from his recent accident, and that pneumonia, from which he has been suffering, is disappearing.

—Mr J. J. Turner returned yesterday from a three months' visit to England, Where he was called to attend his mother, who quietly passed away soon after his arrival. Mr. Turner arrived on the Bohemian, and on the same vessel came as jolly a party as ever crossed the Atlantic together. Nightly concerts were the order of the day, which were highly enjoyed. On the arrival of the steamer Mr. Turner was presented by the party with a "medal" which was suitably 'engraved," as a recognition of his efforts to entertain and amuse the passengers The aforesaid medal consisted of a huge circular malt water soda biscuit, on which was neatly inscribed the particulars. Mr Turner was kept busy all day yesterday shaking hands with his many friends all of whom were glad to see him safely back again, and looking remarkably well

Three Centuries of Plowing

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in this issue of the Wonder Plow Company, of London Ontario. We believe that nothing to equal it has ever been invented. As a labor-saver it is a marvel, and no farmer should be without one. When the plow is adjusted there is no need of holding the plow handles. Read the advertisement, and write the company for prices.

Two Cathedral Weddings

Yesterday morning at St. Peter's Cathedral, Michael Joseph Brady, of town, was married to Miss Fredolene Lagrandeur, daughter of Mr. Joseph Lagrandeur, also of town. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Dr. O'Brien. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Laura, and the groom was supported by Mr. Benj; Poquette.

Another wedding at the Cathedral yesterday morning was that of Mr. Harry B. Spencer to Miss Anna Traynor. The bride's maid was Miss May Laurence and groomsman Mr. J. H. Paulson. Rev Father McColl officiated.

A PETERBOROUGH MAN ILL

Mr. Blanchard, of Peterborough, Very Ill in South Africa

The many friends of Corporal W. H Blanchard, will regret to learn that he is dangerously ill at Bloemfontein. The above information was cabled to Lord Minto, from Cape Town, and also reports that W. H. Hunter is also very ill, suffering from a gunshot wound. Both men belong to the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles.

Forest Stream and Seashore

Advertised in our columns is a book entitled Forest Stream and Seashore, a copy of which has just reached us. The book is issued by the Intercolonial Railway, and contains one hundred and seventy-five pages of a well illustrated and well written description of the country traversed by the Government railways—the route of the Maritime Express and Prince Edward Island, the Garden of the Gulf. Indeed it is far superior to the ordinary railway publication, for it contains much matter of an historical nature, that portion of the Dominion being particularly rich in historic incident, while a whole chapter is devoted to Sydney, now so prominently before the country, that a careful perusal is assured, and it will undoubtedly be kept for future reference by those desiring a more intimate knowledge of Quebec and the provinces by the sea. A copy of this book was presented to each member of the Canadian Press Association, who toured the Maritime Provinces last year, and the encomiums passed upon it by them were of the highest. It is with much pleasure, therefore, that we recommend it to our readers, and we understand that Forest Stream and Seashore can be obtained from the Toronto representative, Mr. Robinson, 10 King street, west, the Montreal representative, Mr. H. A. Price, 143 St. James street, or the General Passenger agent, Mr. John M. Lyons at Moncton, N.B. It has been intimated to us that an early application is necessary, as the issue of so expensive a publication is necessarily limited, while the demand has been very heavy.

Dying by Slow Degrees

Although not always aware of it, yet thousands die by slow degrees of catarrh. It first attacks the nose or throat, then the lungs, and finally spreads all through the system. Catarrhozone is the only remedy that will immediately prevent the spread of this awful disease. Every breath from the Inhaler kills thousands of germs, clears the throat and nose, aids expectoration and relieves the pain across the eyes. Catarrhozone eradicates every vestige of Catarrh from the system, and is highly recommended also for bronchitis, asthma, deafness and lung trouble. Price $1. trial size 25c., all druggists. AROUND THE WHARVES

What is Going on Amongst our Local Steamboat Men

—The City of Peterborough is being put in first class shape for the season's work. Already a large number of excursions are booked. Manager Drain is determined to boom Rice lake, and make it the popular route for tourists and pleasure-seekers.

—The Alert is now on duty, and is engaged in desultory work previous to opening of navigation. The steamer is in better shape than ever.

—The Government dredge is now at Hastings, and will be used to clear out the channel.

—The popular steamer Majestic is out of winter quarters, looking spik and span, having been thoroughly overhauled this spring. Capt. Scollard, who is always popular, is again on the bridge.

—The Empress has made several trips this year, and is in fine shape. She went up Saturday, spending Sunday at McCracken's.

—The Sunbeam is still in drydock at Lakefield. She will not be in shape to leave for her new home, before a week or ten days.

—The Bobcaygeon Independent says: Capt. Lane, tempted by a very flattering and very satisfactory offer from Peterborough, will sever his connection with the T.V.N. Co'y boats this season and take command of the City of Peterborough on the Otonabee waters and Rice lake. The City is a twin propeller and is being put in first class order. About the 1st of May she will be placed in commission and the Captain will then once more don the brass buttons and gold braid, for the officers of the City have some regard for the proprieties of their positions and there is no danger of mistaking the Captain for a deck hand. It is likely that a number of the Captain's friends on the lakes will take a day off this summer for a trip with him on his picturesque run.

BERT BEACH'S FAREWELL

Presented with a Valuable Ring and a Well Filled Purse

Pte. Beach, who left on Sunday night with the recruits from Peterborough, was given a royal farewell by his fellow-employees, of the Peterborough Steam Laundry and Dye Works, on Saturday evening last. During Bert's two years connection with Mr. Parker's establishments, he has made many friends, and has become a general favorite. His obliging disposition and courteous manner, with his kindly regard for those around him, made him generally beloved. When it was learned that he had answered to his country's call to arms, and was to leave for far-off Africa, his fellow-employees mustered in the press room of the establishment where the following address was read:—

Peterborough, April 19th, 1902.

Dear Bert,—On account of our long friendship as a fellow workman, we are all very sorry the time has come to part and we present you with this small gift as a slight token of our friendship and love towards you.

We trust that many times when lonesome moments come, that a glance at this gift will be a comfort to you, and be the cause of our cause of our remembrance in your long absence. We also wish you a pleasant voyage and a safe return.

Signed on behalf of the employees,
ROBERT PARKER.

At the conclusion of the address Mr Beach was handed a valuable gold ring and a well-filled purse by Miss Susi Green, of the laundry department.

Mr. Beach was taken completely by surprise, and was visibly affected. He replied in feeling terms, thanking the employees for their kindness and assuring them that he would always remember his Peterborough friends.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE.

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.

WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the decoration scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end. Our wall papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are enrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD
WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

AN UNEASY FEELING IN PEKIN--CHINESE TROOPS SAID TO BE READY TO REVOLT

A Widespread Feeling of Uneasiness Prevailes Through Out the Empire

A General Uprising Said to be Expected at Almost Any Time.

Special to The Times.

Pekin, April 23 — All sorts of conflicting rumors are in circulation. City people say the Chinese intend to make an attack on foreigners, while the countrymen say the foreigners are taking possession of the city of Pekin with the intention of making further demands. The condition is such that it will probably lead to outbreaks in other parts of the country.

The legation officials are advising women to avoid going to the interior of the province, but scout the idea of any danger. The legation guard commanders are taking precautionary measures.

Notwithstanding the widespread feeling of uneasiness foreigners do not appear to be alarmed. The missionaries report there have been fewer applications for medicines at the various dispensaries during the past week and there has also been a decrease in the number of persons who made religious inquiries in the country districts. This was because the natives were afraid of being accused of being in open connection with the foreigners.

It is expected here that the court will return from the visit to the eastern tombs by Tuesday.

The Emperor announced some time ago that he would review 20,000 troops at Hunting Park on April 25. An edict just issued which cancels this order is of additional importance because of the rumors that there is dissatisfaction among the Chinese regular troops.

A SCENE IN CHINA

SIX DEATHS CAUSED BY LIGHTNING FLASH

Hull Livery Keeper, His Wife, Three Children and a Hired Man Lose Their Lives

Ottawa, April 22.—Six people lost their lives as the result of a flash of lightning which struck the house of Thomas Hill, liveryman, Hull, this morning. The dead are:—

Thomas Hill, aged 35.
Mrs. Hill, his wife.
Pearl Hill, aged 11.
Robbie Hill, aged 9.
Maggie Hill, aged 5.
John Watson, hired man, aged 50.

At four o'clock this morning the house which is at the corner of Bridge and Wellington streets was struck by lightning, and was quickly a mass of flames. By the time the police and fire brigade had reached the house it was found impossible to effect an entrance. When the fire had been got somewhat under control an entrance was effected, the dead bodies being discovered all more or less blackened by smoke. It is believed that death was caused by lightning in each case.

WHERE THE FIRE STARTED.

Later investigations show that the hired man was in the stable when the flash came and started the fire. The stable was destroyed with the house. Watson's body was badly burned, as were those of all the others. Another family lived in the house, Harry Boyce and wife, with a young man named Renaud, who ran a pool-room for Boyace. They were awakened by the fire, and finding flames breaking out everywhere jumped from two side windows on the second story in their night-clothes and escaped without injury. The Hills were in the back part of the house, from which there was no escape. The Boyce people were too dazed to ask for the Hills when they first escaped. The positions in which the remains of the Hill family were found indicated that they were all in bed when the fire broke out, and if they were not first killed by the lightning, which is probable, they were choked to death by the smoke, and then burned. Some of them presented a shocking spectacle, being horribly charred. The house was one of two tenements, and in the other tenement were two Chinamen running Sing Long's laundry. These men were on the ground floor, and escaped. Nothing is left but the shell of the building, a few charred rafters and the blackened debris. The loss is between $7,000 and $8,000. The remains of the six dead were gathered together and removed to an adjoining shed, where an inquest is now being held.

EAST PETERBORO CAMPAIGN

Mr. William Anderson Busily Engaged in Holding Meetings

Mr. William Anderson, the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough, is not allowing the grass to grow under his feet. He is now engaged in holding meetings in various parts of the riding. On Monday night he held a very successful meeting in Ounnawang school house, in Ashgudel, every seat being filled, and many having to stand.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Robert Harrison, of town, who filled the position most acceptably, and who called on the Liberal candidate as the first speaker.

Mr. Anderson was heartily received, and outlined the position of the government in respect to farmers. He spoke well and to the point.

Mr. T. Blezard, ex-M.P.P., gave an account of the Liberal administration during the quarter of a century that he had been in the Legislature. He warmly endorsed the candidature of Mr. Anderson.

Mr. R. F. McWilliams dealt particularly with the Prohibition issue, and also with the satisfactory manner in which the government had handled the problems arising out of the development of new Ontario.

At the conclusion of Mr. McWilliams' address, an opportunity was given the Conservative candidate, or any one on his behalf, to speak, but no one responded to the invitation. The meeting closed with cheers for the king, the candidate and the chairman.

Mr. Anderson will hold a meeting at Cottesloe, in Dummer, this evening, and at Havelock the following night, when Hon. G. W. Ross will be present and address the electors.

Dr. Ford, the Conservative candidate, is preparing to hold a series of meetings. The Doctor told a Times representative a few days ago he is very much encouraged, and expects to head the poll by a large majority.

THE WEST INDIES NOW

Sir Neville Lubbock Says They are Ready to Join the United States

Special to The Times.

London, April 23—In an interview yesterday Sir Neville Lubbock, chairman of the West India Committee, said it was doubtful whether the subsidy of £250,000 would benefit the West Indies greatly. He doubted if the late repentance of the Imperial Government would be able to eradicate the recollection years of neglect.

He added that he felt confident that if the whites were polled a majority in the British West Indies and Demerara would be in favor of joining the United States owing to their gratitude for the American countervailing duty on bounty-fed sugar. The blacks, however, were more loyal. Their disinclination to be under the Stars and Stripes is probably the chief cause that would prevent the British West Indies from joining the United States.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

The Matter Forcing Itself to the Front in Ottawa

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, April 23—The first incident in the language war has taken place, strange to say, at Ottawa, where the French language is nearly as much in evidence as English. The testimony of a witness in a police court there was refused by the presiding magistrate, although the witness knew no other language than French. The matter was further aggravated in the estimation of the French Canadian papers, who have taken the matter up warmly, by the magistrate fining the witness $2 for persisting on the right to use the French language. The action of the magistrate is justified by an article in the consolidated statutes of the Province of Ontario which declares that all proceedings in the law courts of Ontario shall be in the English language only. The French contend that no provincial law can abrogate the right guaranteed to the French of Canada by the Act of Capitulation.

RUSSIAN SCARE FOR BRITISH

SHIPS CROWDED WITH TROOPS ENTER SINGAPORE HARBOR

On a Peaceful Mission, as it Happened, But Their Presence Showed the Possibility of a Treacherous Seizure of the Port—Garrisons Much Weakened

Special to the Times.

London, April 23 — One of the many incidental effects of the war in South Africa has been the general weakening of the British garrisons in oversea stations. At one time this gave the War Office very serious thought, but with the disappearance of all danger of intervention by foreign powers officialdom here again became indifferent.

Now it is learned from the Indian mail, which arrived to-day, that there has been a scare in the British East Indies over the possibilities of a treacherous seizure—say by Russia—of Singapore, the most vital position in the event of hostilities with a first-rate power. It seems that the vessels of a so-called Russian volunteer fleet, which are really warships in disguise with their holds full of guns and ammunition are in the habit of calling at Singapore on voyages to and from Russian military stations in the Far East. On these journeys they are regularly used as transports.

Quite recently there were two of these ships in Singapore harbor, each crowded with Russian troops—in all about 4,000 of them—largely in excess of the strength of the local garrison. At the present moment that garrison is without its customary stiffening of regular British troops, and is composed entirely of natives. The scare was obviously not without its justification, in spite of the fact that in modern days the powers do not declare war without warning.

What could be done by an unscrupulous power is well illustrated by an incident that occurred a few years ago, which was the subject of a somewhat heated diplomatic correspondence between Russia and England. The Admiral commanding the British China squadron, desiring to test the accuracy of charts which he had surreptitiously obtained, and to nerve his navigating officers, sailed into Vladivostock with his entire squadron under cover of fog.

Every officer in every one of the numerous forts which were supposed to render Vladivostock impregnable was punished for negligence, and ultimately all the powers were informed of new port regulations, by which not more than two foreign warships would be permitted to enter Vladivostock at any one time. England made similar regulations at all her eastern fortified ports, and these remain in force to this day.

Russia, however, denies that the steamships of her volunteer fleet are warships and in spite of the provisions of the Treaty of Paris these vessels regularly pass up and down the Dardanelles on their way to and from the Black Sea and the far east.

Little George would go to war
If they would let him go,
They said he could not see enough
Now that's where they are slow;
I have heard it said he saw too much
When a joke is played,
Now England is the loser
When home George Dawson stayed,

If with him you went fishing
You always got a haul
You need not get a single bite
Dinkey had the gall,
His winning way was quite a bait
And was never known to fail,

So good-bye Dinkey Dawson
We see you're bound to go
The best of luck you'll always have

Inflamed Nose and Throat

And such diseases of the respiratory organs as bronchitis, weak lungs, cold in the head, and nasal catarrh, are treated with marvellous success on strictly scientific principles by Catarrhozone. The medicated vapor of Catarrhozone quickly traverses every air passage possible to be reached by any treatment. All soreness, pain, congestion and inflammation are at once dispelled, and by means of the healing powers of Catarrhozone the vitiated tissues are quickly restored. Where Catarrhozone is used, colds last only ten minutes, coughs only half an hour, and catarrh, consumption, asthma and bronchitis flee as from fire. A trial will convince anyone of the startling merit of Catarrhozone. Costs $1, small size 25c. At druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

FROG FARMING GROWING

The Industry Officially Reported to be Rapidly Increasing

Frog farming as an industry is assuming large proportions in many parts of Canada. Not only are large shipments of frogs' legs made from this country to the United States, but there is a growing demand for the luxury in many of the large centres of the Dominion.

Some of the most successful frog farms are on the Ottonabee river. Last year they are said to have produced 5,000 pounds of dressed frogs legs and 7,000 living frogs for scientific purposes and for stocking other waters.

The Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries reports that in the past year a number of applications were made to the government for leases of lands suitable for this industry. No licenses were, however, granted, as it was found that the territory concerned was already being farmed by a number of people.

It is safe to assume that in the very near future much land now idle will be stocked with frogs. All that is necessary for this purpose is to place a few paired breeders in the water. Natural food is almost always present in sufficient amount for successful growth.

The species considered here to be most profitable, on account of its size, is the Eastern bullfrog, Rana catesbiana, which reaches a length of more than eight inches. It begins to breed at the end of three years, is very productive and reaches a marketable size in four or five years.

Only the hind legs are marketed, and they average half a pound a pair in weight. They are worth 50c. a pound, at times, to the producer, and American dealers take as many as Canada can supply.

The Brantford Murder

Brantford, April 22.—The doctors have disagreed in the Quirk case. Last night at the inquest, Dr. Digby, one of the oldest practitioners in Brantford, gave it as his opinion that the hotel-keeper's death was accidental; on the other hand, Dr. H. R. Frank, who performed the autopsy, stoutly maintained that the wounds had been made by a murderer.

The first evidence taken at the inquest was offered by Dr. Digby, Quirk's family physician. When he reached the barn on the night of the tragedy, he was told by John Toole, Quirk's partner, that Quirk had fallen down and killed himself.

Asked for an opinion as to what might have caused the wounds, Dr. Digby testified a fall on such things as the corn cutter and sleigh runners which were represented as lying on the floor.

Dr. Frank was positive that the wounds could not have been caused by a fall. He said that the wounds were probably caused by a heavy triangular, not a sharp, instrument. A square bar with an angular edge would have caused the wounds. The first blow was that on the top of the head, and it was impossible for a man to have received that blow and fallen in such a way on anything that would have caused the other wounds.

George Taylor, a boarder in the hotel, said that in conversation with Toole since the night of the tragedy Quirk's partner had expressed the opinion that death was not the result of an accident.

The last witness called was Andrew Doyle, a mechanic and chicken fancier. He had often visited the loft to see Quirk's birds. While he was there after the murder, Mr. Fred Westbrook, of Toronto, a brother-in-law of the dead man came into the loft with a lantern, and pointed out some stains of blood in the loft to the left of the ladder. The witness had also noticed finger marks of blood on the bottom of the ladder and on the corn cutter.

The inquest was adjourned to May 6th.

BE WISE TO-DAY

'TIS MADNESS TO DEFER

THE USE OF
Paine's Celery Compound
IN SPRINGTIME
Means Banishment of Disease and the Establishment of Strength, Vigor and Permanent Health

Well meaning and really worthy people often err when sickness and disease come to them. Too often they are content to follow blindly the advice of second-rate physicians, who in nine cases out of every ten fail to properly diagnose the ills they are called upon to cure. Too frequently our sick people put their trust and confidence in common advertised pills, nervines, sarsaparillas and other liquid concoctions. Terrible disappointments and results come to the users of such medicines; sickness and disease is aggravated—their dangers vastly increased.

Happy are the people who, when disease has laid its hand upon them, use Dr. Phelps' life-giving prescription, Paine's Celery Compound, a medicine that stands without an equal for feeding exhausted nerves, purifying the blood and building up the weakened and rundown system.

Weakly, sickly and disease-laden mortal, it is madness to defer the use of that health giving medicine that has rescued and saved its tens of thousands in every land.

Paine's Celery Compound is the one true specific recognised and prescribed to-day by our most eminent and our most honest practitioners for diseases arising from a debilitated nervous system. You need its use this very day; your condition demands it; common sense and a knowledge of what Paine's Celery Compound has done for others, should be your guide at this critical time of your life. PAINE'S is the kind that makes sick people well! See that the name is on both bottle and wrapper. Do not be induced to take a substitute or any imitation; you need the kind that has cured others.

THE PEACE OUTLOOK IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The British Government to Assist the Boers in Rebuilding Their Homesteads and Restocking Their Farms

London, April 23.—The Daily Mail publishes the following as the basis of peace, which is almost sure to be accepted by the Boers: The Boers renounce their former demand for political independence, and accept the provincial administration of the former twin republics as Crown Colonies, or, rather, as one Crown Colony, on condition that their territories shall eventually be made self-governing, the date of the change to be fixed by the British Government. As spokesmen for their wishes and defender of their interests, one or two representatives of the Boers are to be appointed members of the Governor's Council during the provincial regime. This is perhaps as much in the way of political privilege as could be wrung from Mr. Chamberlain and his agent in South Africa, Lord Milner.

A considerably sum of money will be granted by the British Government for the purpose of rebuilding farm-houses and restocking farms belonging to the Boers. This concession involves the virtual annulment of the proclamation issued by Lord Kitchener in August, 1901, whereby all the Boers who should remain in the field after Sept. 15 were declared outlaws, and their property was confiscated. We scarcely need point out that, since the date when that absurd proclamation became nominally operative, the Boers have been successful in several engagements. It is obvious that the Boers were well advised in treating Lord Kitchener's manifesto with disdain. Had they not persisted in resistance, they would never have obtained terms more acceptable than the unconditional surrender which has been hitherto demanded.

There was at one time a rumor that after peace had been effected, the Rand would be segregated from the rest of the Transvaal, and organized as a separate administrative district. It is hard to see what would be gained by such a proceeding. It would be easy so to frame the conditions of the franchise as to assure preponderance to the Uitlanders over the Boers, in the Transvaal at all events, where the former class of residents is the more numerous, although in the Orange River country, which is almost exclusively agricultural, the burghers of Hollander descent are likely long to remain numerically preponderant.

A question concerning which it was feared that the negotiations might be unable to agree was the treatment of those citizens of Cape Colony who have co-operated with the Boers. Hitherto such men have been dealt with as rebels, and the loyalists in Cape Colony and Natal demand that the British Government shall make no concession on this point. The Boers with equal firmness have insisted that in honor and decency they can accept no favors which are withheld from their Afrikander brethren in arms. What decision has been arrived at in this matter we do not know, but it is unlikely that the interests of the British Government will be sacrificed to the rancor of colonial loyalists. Had Lord Durham listened to the protests of Canadian loyalists after Papineau's Rebellion, he would never have recommended the propitiatory measures which were to have such fortunate results. As for the repatriation of the Boer exiles, we take for granted that no opposition will be offered to the plea on their behalf.

The admiration which Sir Michael Hicks-Beach expressed for the valor of the Boer combatants, viewed in conjunction with other incidents, seems to warrant the assumption that Mr. Chamberlain was overruled by those members of the Salisbury Government who are disposed to meet the Boers half way, and to forego the previous demand for unconditional surrender. There is also reason to believe that, in their new and conciliatory attitude, the majority of the Ministers have been warmly supported, if not actually prompted, by King Edward VII., who naturally desires that the British Empire should be everywhere at peace on the occasion of his coronation.

Items of News

Guatemala City, Guatemala, April 22.—The details which are being received of the result of the earthquake shocks which were general throughout Guatemala Friday, Saturday and Sunday, show that Solola, Nahuala, Amatitlan, Santa Lucia, and San Juan were badly damaged, and that Quezaltenango was partly obliterated. Fire added to the horrors there. Two hundred persons were killed, mostly women, and many people were injured. At the capital three churches were slightly damaged. The Government is relieving the sufferers.

Hong Kong, April 22.—Chinese officials yesterday raided a house at Canton and captured six men who were known to have been sent to Canton for the purpose of spreading the rebel propaganda, and for the purchase of arms and supplies. The prisoners carried orders from Kwok, the rebel leader, commanding the assassination of the Manchu officials of Canton. Five hundred armed braves left Canton yesterday for Wu Chow.

OVERWEIGHTED BY ICE

London April 22.—The Norwegian steamer Egil, which arrived at Lerwick from Iceland after being icebound for three months at Hakkafjord, had a remarkable experience on the outward voyage from Scotland in January.

Heavy seas continually broke on board and froze, causing so much extra weight on the ship that it was feared she would sink before reaching Iceland.

NOVEL CHURCH DEPARTURE.

London, April 22.—The Rev. E. Winter, the rector of Elland, in Yorkshire, has hit upon a novel means for raising money with which to complete the building of the new parish church.

Addressing his parishioners, the rector—who for many years has devoted much of his stipend to the furtherance of the spiritual needs of his flock—intimated his intention of trying to raise another £3,000 by the issue of debentures.

An appeal is to be made for loans of £10 each, and each lender will receive in return a "certificate of a subscription of £10" in approved commercial style, entitling him to 4 per cent. interest, the eventual repayment of the principal.

The security for the investment, the rector explained, was his own stipend.

Afterwards the interest and repayment of principal would be a charge upon the collections of the church. Should the collections be insufficient, he undertook to pay the balance so long as he held the incumbency.

SURPRISE ATTACK FAILS.

London, April 22.—For the purpose of testing the vigilance of the garrison of the forts guarding the approach to Portsmouth, two torpedo-boats were told off to make a surprise attack about midnight recently.

The attempt completely failed. As the boats were trying to steal past the forts the searchlights on shore were unmasked, and the presence of the torpedo-boats was revealed.

Simultaneously the big guns of the forts were fired, greatly to the alarm of the residents of Southsea and the Lower Solent. So heavy was the firing that the houses near the forts were shaken.

To prevent a surprise the garrison used lighted torches as floating [illegible].

MOST GLORIOUS LITTLE AFFAIR

Lieut. Bruce Carruthers the Only Officer That Escaped

Special to The Times.

London, April 23—The fuller report of the Hart River fight shows that Lieut Bruce Carruthers and 23 men of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles and 45 British Mounted Infantry held an isolated post on the flank. They stood off 600 Boers until 21 out of the 24 Canadians, and 30 out of the 45 British Mounted Infantry were killed or wounded. Carruthers was the only surviving officer. When the Boers had reduced the little band from 69 to 18 men they charged into and rode over the survivors, capturing them. It was a glorious little affair and Canadians will place the record of it among the most cherished incidents of their military annals. In addition to this particular part of the engagement another detachment of the Second Canadian M. R. were holding a portion of the main position and suffered 34 casualties, including four officers. A portion of the British force was compelled to retire at this point, but the Canadians held on, covering them, and stopped the Boer advance at 200 yards. The Boers were eventually driven off and are reported to have suffered 250 casualties.

Cramps are Like Burglars

They come unexpected and when least welcome. Be armed with a one-minute cure in a bottle of Nerviline, which relieves cramp and stomach pains in five minutes. In colic, summer complaint, diarrhoea, indigestion and nausea, Nerviline is a remedy of remarkable potency, and acts promptly and satisfactorily at all times. The composition of Polson's Nerviline expresses the highest medical progress of the age, which accounts for its superior merit. Price 25c.

REPRESENTED AT THE CORONATION

London, April 22.—It is announced in The Gazette that the King has approved of Mr. Arthur Serena as Consul-General of San Marino at London.

The statement draws attention to the fact that the interest Sovereign State in the world to be represented at the King's coronation will be this little Republic in Central Italy. The dominion of San Marino measures just thirty-three square miles. The smallest Sovereign State in the world will thus participate in the ceremony of the crowning of the head of the largest State.

FACTS ABOUT MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

The discussion of municipal ownership of public utilities in the public press is attracting considerable attention in the United States to this so-called reform. Kansas City, Cleveland and Hartford, Conn., at the late elections gave favorable expression to the municipal ownership issue, and Chicago has given evidence of strong sympathy with the idea.

The Engineering News has gathered some facts about this debatable question which are interesting in showing the progress made in the growth of the sentiment up to the present time. The following data is condensed from the article referred to:

Of the 1524 American cities and towns having a population of 3,000 or more, 768 own their own waterworks, 1045 their own sewers, 193 their electric lighting plants, 29 their gas works and one its street railway. There are 61 cases of privately owned waterworks, 1199 of privately owned electric light plants, 938 of privately owned gas works, and 927 of privately owned street railways. Eight of the ten and forty of the fifty largest cities of the country own their own water works plants. In the largest cities public ownership of electric light plants is very rare, and with one exception public ownership of gas plants is not known at all in the cities the size of Charleston, S.C.

The most surprising statement of the article is that the sewers of forty-two cities and towns—among them Atlantic City, Wilmington, N.C., and Austin, Tex., are owned by private companies. Why not the ownership of streets as well as sewers, is a natural question. Undoubtedly if a private company owned the streets and they were allowed to get in the condition which the Buffalo streets get into at times there would be such a tremendous fuss raised that the officials of the company would hide themselves in the manholes until the clouds rolled by.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It will strike people as curious that the Transvaal and Orange Free State did not take any referendum before they declared war, but it is now stated that under their forms of government the division of the burghers must be taken before the governments can stop the war.

• • • •

Even if the Boer peace negotiations were only a ruse to gain time the Boers will not have got any advantage by it through Lord Kitchener's wise decision to allow no armistice.

• • • •

It is announced that the introduction of the air-brake and automatic couplers on freight cars will enable railway companies to practically cut the train crews in two. The men may not like this, but it is certainly preferable to cutting the men themselves in two.

There Was One.

"Is there a man in all this audience," fiercely exclaimed a female lecturer, "that has ever done anything to lighten the burden resting on his wife's shoulders? What do you know of woman's work?"

"Is there a man here," she continued, folding her arms and looking over her audience with superb scorn, "that has ever got up in the morning, leaving his tired, worn-out wife to enjoy her slumbers, gone quietly downstairs, made the fire, cooked his own breakfast, sewed the missing buttons on the children's clothes, darned the family stockings, scoured the pots and kettles, cleaned and filled the lamps, swept the kitchen, and done all this, if necessary, day after day, uncomplainingly? If there is such a man in this audience, let him stand up! I should like to see him!"

And in the rear of the hall a mild-looking man in spectacles, in obedience to the summons, timidly arose. He was the husband of the eloquent speaker. It was the first time he had ever had a chance to assert himself.

Ping-Pong in Society.

We have no idea on this side of the Atlantic of the extent to which "ping-pong" has affected English society, but the following from a London paper of late date gives an inkling of the popularity—absurd popularity, one is tempted to say—which it has attained:—

"The nice conduct of the celluloid has become a cult. 'Professors' we have already, and now comes the 'school,' where beginners are coached in the subtleties of our latest form of amusement.

"As befits the high rank of 'ping-pong,' the teaching class is an academy, and its location is the balcony at Niagara Hall. There half a dozen tables (9 feet by 5 feet) are open to students. They absorb the rudiments and go forward to excellence under the skilful tuition of Mr. P. Fleming, son of Tom Fleming, known as the father of lawn tennis.

"Around these tables stand, day by day, scores of men, young and middle-aged, maidens and matrons, eager to qualify for proficiency in the dining-room. Half a crown is the fee per lesson, and when the 'ping-pongers' have picked up some mastery of the game a shilling secures the table for a set.

"Frequently a really good player strolls in and takes a turn. It is as if Stevenson descended on a pool-room and casually 'took a cue,' or MacLaren played as 'Mr. A. N. Other' on a village cricket ground.

"Thursday brings its special diversion. Men and women from the ice rink below come up and play 'ping-pong' on skates.

"Of course, there are no sofas nor cosy corners in this academy, and hence no easy hiding-place for the errant ball. Players do not grovel on dusty floors. Ingenuity has evolved a 'scoop' with a long handle to entrap the wanderer in meshes of elastic.

"The game prospers all round. Mr. Fleming has always plenty of calls on his teaching ability from private houses.

"On Thursday week his Majesty is to visit Niagara and watch the skating champions on the ice. It is not beyond the dreams of 'ping-pongers' that the King may ascend the balcony and look on at a game.

"Nay, the fluttering hope is that Edward VII. will himself take a racquet and his first (public) essay in what somebody in 'Measure for Measure' long ago foretold as 'the game of tick-tack.'"

The same paper, The Express, in another issue raises the point as to whether the craze for "ping-pong" is not a sign of national decay, and really, after reading the above, the suggestion does not seem unreasonable. Mr. Kipling might have done his country a real service if he had attacked "ping-pong" instead of cricket and football. Or can it be that the craze is partly due to his bitter lines, for in yet another reference to the new game it is stated that "suburban athletes have forsaken football and golf to foregather in a stuffy club room on Saturday afternoons and trifle with a celluloid ball"; and again "The National Sporting Club has invested in a championship 'ping-pong' table, and amateur boxers have been seen glaring at each other, not across the ring, but over a miniature net." Surely the "flannelled fools," etc., have gone from bad to worse, and the Imperial bard should shortly be heard from again.

Misfortunes of Some Welshmen.

The following extract from an article by Mr. W. L. Griffith, Canadian Government agent for Wales, in The Western Daily News, Cardiff, gives a picturesque sketch of the misfortunes of the Patagonian Welshmen who are likely to come to Canada shortly:—When the idea of a Welsh colony in Patagonia was first mooted Wales was seething with political discontent. But, strong as this feeling undoubtedly was, it required much effort on the part of Professor Michael Jones of Bala and the Rev. Lewis Jones of Festiniog to prevail upon the small band of people which eventually made the venture. The motives of the self-deceived leaders in the movement will always remain open to debate. The attraction to the rank and file was the vision of free land, immunity from taxes, and the self-government so dear to the heart of the Welshman. Fired with these ideas, the imaginative Cymry saw visions of a Cymric Utopia. They not only cherished these ideals, but they were prepared to do all in their power to compass their realization. They were brave, earnest, laborious, ready and willing to sacrifice self. It is pathetic to think of the shock these brave men and women encountered when they finally landed on the desert shores of New Bay, and discovered that the country they had fondly pictured as one of illimitable resource was nothing but a barren desert, and that their leaders, whom they implicitly trusted, had been guilty of carelessness, which was, perhaps, worse than inexcusable. In fairness it must here be stated that Professor Michael Jones squandered a private fortune on what had become his pet project. As they were without means the Welsh people were face to face with starvation. There was nothing to do but, to use an Americanism, "scratch for a living." The history of these people during the first years of the settlement entitles them to the greatest credit.

A Story of Prince Henry.

Prince Henry of Prussia, according to a story told by a diplomat who was once attached to the British Embassy in Berlin, was one day chatting with an English friend in a cafe in Bonn, when he became an object of suspicion to one of those meddling minor officials who flourish in such numbers in Germany. The Prince is too discreet a man to discuss affairs of State in a public place, but on this occasion some subject arose which, while not of general interest, related to the Imperial family. The conversation was in English, and the spying official was acquainted with that language. At length Prince Henry remarked:—"Why, my dear fellow, don't you see that the Emperor would be even crazier than some people seem to believe he is if he did anything like that?"

The official leaned toward his Royal Highness and said: "Sir, are you aware that there is a lese majeste law in this country? Let me hear another remark of that kind, and I make a complaint against you."

The Englishman took in the situation, and a moment afterward remarked: "As I was saying to your Royal Highness before we were interrupted——"

The meddler gasped, rose hastily and withdrew.

On a Dog.

"They're thinking now of reversing the usual process, and first trying plays in New York before taking them out on the road." "What's the idea?" "Well, if a play succeeds in New York, the rest of the country will know it's rotten."—"Life."

A Matter of Contrast.

"Give an example of how heat expands and cold contracts." "In the summer the days are long; in the winter they are short."—"Judge."

Light Hogs.

A good many farmers in eastern Ontario are still adhering to the very foolish policy of marketing hogs that are too light in weight, and quite unsuitable for packing purposes. The Geo. Matthews Co., Limited, report that during the month of January their receipts of hogs graded as follows:—Selects, 1,398; light, 1,840; light fats, 690; heavy fats, 27; sows, 40; stags, 6; cripples, 21; stores, 123; a total of 4,154 hogs, of which only 1,398, or about 33 per cent., were suitable for the manufacture of first-class export bacon. If the trade in Canadian bacon is to be increased or even maintained, at its present volume, it is absolutely necessary that only hogs of proper weight and quality be sent to the packing houses. F. W. Hodson, Live Stock Commissioner.

A Test For Good Butter.

The good housewife who said, "The way to test good butter is to smell it," was surely an expert judge of butter. The fact is that a really good judge of butter seldom tastes it but depends rather upon the senses of smell and sight. The dealer who really knows and deals in good butter can at any time when he is testing a crock or roll of butter, be seen to very carefully pass it in review before his olfactory nerve, and to break it and note the appearance of the broken surface.

The true flavor of butter can be quickly tested in the entirety of a package in this manner, while, if the sense of taste alone were depended upon and the package was not of even quality, the fact might go unnoticed. The quantity of salt in the butter can, of course, only be determined by tasting it. The surface exposed when a package or sample of butter is broken should exhibit what is known as a good grain. That means that it should have a clearly defined granular surface, similar to that found on the broken surface of cast iron of good quality. Do not fail to apply these tests when passing judgment on the quality of butter. Their careful observance and a little practice will make you an expert.—Michigan Farmer.

Clover For Egg Producing.

Experience has demonstrated the value of clover for egg producing time and again. Clover has just the material in it to form egg shell, and hence it becomes an essential part of every ration fed to the chickens. It may not be generally understood that there are nearly thirty pounds of lime contained in each thousand pounds of clover. The chickens fed daily with clover will consequently prove better egg layers than those denied it. The clover hay should be given to chickens in winter in quantities sufficient to satisfy them, and to make them eat more it is desirable sometimes to prepare it in various ways. Cook and chop it up, and mix it with meal or other articles. This will sometimes induce the hens to consume a great amount of clover each day. Cut up into short lengths and mixed with warm mash, and then fed only as fast as the chickens will clean it up each day, is probably the most economical way to feed the clover. Some cut the second crop of clover and place it in the poultry yard for the chickens to eat and scratch over at pleasure. This of itself is all right, but it is rather wasteful. More than half the clover will be lost, and the chickens do not actually eat much more than the leaves. The stalks contain most of the lime, and these should be prepared so the chickens will consume them. Of all foods that can be raised on a farm for poultry, clover is not only the best, but probably the cheapest, and a field of it is as essential to success as a pasture field is necessary to the success of dairying.—Annie C. Webster, in Massachusetts Ploughman.

Just What You Ask For.

Outside the drug store—the store of J. Milhau's Son, at No. 183 Broadway—you may read the announcement at the head of this column, "We give you just what you ask for."

We are glad to seize upon this occasion to pay a tribute to this motto, and, incidentally, to point out a dishonest and very common practice among merchants—that of substituting one article for another.

One business man devotes all his energy, his money and his time to building up the reputation of a certain article. He enables the retailer to make a large profit, and he spends his money that customers may be plentiful.

When a customer asks for the article in question it is dishonest to say to him, as many do:—

"Don't buy that. We have something else just as good and much cheaper."

If the merchant has something good and cheap of his own, let him sell it to his customers by all means. But let him not steal the trade of a man whose energy helps to build up his business. Let him not divert to his own pocket all of the profit which he ought to in honesty share with another.

There are wares that are made enormously profitable to the retailer simply because men push their business with intelligence and perseverance. It is ungrateful as well as dishonest for the sake of a little extra profit to cut into the legitimate business of the advertising manufacturer.

Incidentally, the public, as well as the storekeeper and the manufacturer, are interested in this question of substituting one article for another.

That which is represented as "just as good" is usually not just as good, but very far from it.

If a man has spent a million dollars building up the reputation of a certain article, it is to his advantage to keep up the quality of the material which enters into the manufacture of that article. His profit is large if he is honestly treated, and it would be suicide for him to use inferior material for the sake of a little extra money.

The man who makes up an imitation article and announces it as "just as good" has no such sum at stake. He has invested nothing. He has no valuable name to ruin, and it is to his interest to make the "just as good" article just as cheap as he can make it.

The buyer should remember these facts and put his confidence in that retailer who, like the man quoted at the head of this article, gives to the customer just what he asks for, treats the wholesaler honestly, and shows gratitude for the energy which builds up a successful business and makes the retailer prosperous.—From The New York Journal. Issued by the Association of American Advertisers.

A Smart Salesman.

Jeweler (to new boy)—Did you sell anything while I was out, Johnny?

"Yes, sir. I sold six plain gold rings."

"Good, my boy," said the jeweler, highly pleased. "We'll make a first-class salesman of you one of these days. You got the regular price, of course?"

"Oh, yes, sir. The price was marked on the inside, 18c., and the gentleman took all that was left, sir."—N.Y. "Life."

"I lingered between life and death."

"I think Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' the best medicines in the world," writes Mrs. Amelia Dougherty, of Kerrigan, Wayne Co., Mo. "I gave birth to a baby last summer. After confinement I became very ill, had the best physician that could be got, and he diagnosed my case as uterine trouble tending to dropsy. Medicine seemed to do me no good. I lingered between life and death for quite a while, every day growing weaker until I could not walk across the room. My friends were looking for my death every minute. A friend wrote and told me about Dr. R. V. Pierce, and I at once wrote to him for medical advice. He replied immediately, giving me full instructions as to what to do. I at once followed his advice, and when I had taken his medicine about a week I felt a good deal stronger. When I had taken it about one month I felt as strong as I do to-day. I took four bottles of each kind and two vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.' Many thanks for the medicine, It has permanently cured me."

Huxley and the Reporters.

On his arrival in Baltimore, Professor Huxley was driven to the country seat of Mr. Garrett, who had offered him hospitality and had invited a large company to meet him in an afternoon party. There was but one intervening day between his arrival, tired out by a long journey in the interior, and his delivery of the address. He had hardly reached the residence of his host before the reporters discovered him and asked for the manuscript of his speech. "Manuscript?" he said. "I have none. I shall speak freely on a theme with which I am quite familiar." "Well, professor," said the interlocutor, "that is all right, but our instructions are to send the speech to the papers in New York, and if you cannot give us the copy we must take it down as well as we can and telegraph it, for the Associated Press is bound to print it the morning after it is spoken." This was appalling, for in view of the possible inaccuracy of the shorthand, and the possible condensation of the wirehand, the lecturer was afraid that technical and scientific terms might not be rightly reproduced. "You can have your choice, professor," said the urbane reporter, "to give us the copy or to let us do the best we can, for report the speech we shall." The professor yielded, and the next day he walked up and down his room at Mr. Garrett's dictating to a stenographer, in cold and irresponsive seclusion, the speech which he expected to make before a receptive and hospitable assembly.

I sat very near the orator as he delivered the address in the Academy of Music, and noticed that, although he kept looking at the pile of manuscript on the desk before him, he did not turn the pages over. The speech was appropriate and well received, but it had no glow, and the orator did not equal his reputation for charm and persuasiveness. When the applause was over I said to Mr. Huxley: "I noticed that you did not read your address; I am afraid the light was insufficient." "Oh," said he, "that was not the matter. I have been in distress. The reporters brought me, according to their promise, the copy of their notes. It was on this translucent paper, and to make it legible they put clean white sheets between the leaves. That made such bulk that I removed the intermediate leaves, and when I stood up at the desk I found I could not read a sentence. So I have been in a dilemma—not daring to speak freely, and trying to recall what I dictated yesterday and allowed the reporters to send to New York." If he used an epithet before the word "reporters" I am sure he was justified, but I forget what it was.—Dr. D. C. Gilman in "Scribner's Magazine."

McKeesport, Pennsylvania, has a bookless library. The fine stone building was erected with the $50,000 Andrew Carnegie donated, but the entire donation was used to build the library, as the directors expected Mr. Carnegie would give more. He has declined to do this, and the board has no money to buy books.

The mountains end a greater number of lives every year than is generally supposed. An official report states that in 1901, in Switzerland alone, accidents to mountain-climbers amounted to 119, and that death occurred in all of these. This figure is double that of 1900, and represents the highest total that has hitherto been recorded.

At Uelzen, in Luneberg, the authorities have passed a by-law which is more popular with the fair than the sterner sex. Husbands must be home by eleven o'clock. A fine equal to ten shillings is the penalty for infringing this regulation, half of which goes to the person—presumably the wife—who brings and proves the accusation.

One of the eccentricities of the late Duke of Portland was to subscribe for all the ordinary newspapers and magazines of the day and have them wholebound in beautiful crushed morocco coats of many colors. Each of these volumes he put in a perfectly fitting oak box lined with white velvet and fitted with a patent Bramah lock and duplicate keys. The cost of each volume worked out at about £40.

As the result of studies on New Jersey mosquitoes last summer, Professor John B. Smith of Rutgers College says that not only will the insects travel long distances from their breeding-place, but on favorable evenings large swarms rise and are carried during the night by winds. The direction in which they go is often seaward. Swarms have been met fifteen miles from the shore, and they are common five miles from shore. Migration of mosquitoes with the aid of the winds Professor Smith regards as of much importance, and as rendering the control of the mosquito nuisance much more difficult than has been supposed.

Miss Florence K. Jewell, a wealthy young Jewess, who attained notoriety in August, 1899, by marrying Lobengula's son, while he was on exhibition at the Kaffir Kraal at Earl's Court, London, has applied for a divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty and misconduct. She testified that he had given her black eyes, and stabbed her with an assegai, when the judge, Sir Francis Jeune, broke in with: "That was what you expected in marrying a savage, was it not?" The judge reserved judgment, as he doubted whether it could be shown that Lobengula's domicile was in England. He said, too, that he only behaved like a savage, and that the petitioner had insisted on marrying him, and now saw the result of it.

The old proverb about honor among thieves has had a staggering blow in St. Louis. The thieves were certain members of the city council and a number of street railway men, and it was because neither side had any confidence in the honor of the other that a remarkable case of bribery was most amusingly disclosed. The railway men desired certain franchises, and put up one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars as a corruption fund. They were afraid, however, to pay it to the councilmen until the council had voted as they wished. The corrupt councilmen, on their part, would not vote until they had the money. By a compromise, therefore, the fund was placed in a safety-deposit box which had two keys, one of which was held by each party. Neither could open the box without the cooperation of the other. The councilmen voted as they had agreed, and it was through the quarrel over their attempt to get the funds that the whole matter became public.

The traveler fell on his knees and begged for mercy; but the customs inspector was adamant.

to bring out another book? I should like to have the reviewing of it."

Miss Garnitum blushed and smiled, and fell to twisting her diamond and sapphire ring on her finger.

"Not for some little time, I think," she answered. "I made him promise that he wouldn't do any more writing till—till after we are married."

"Oh!" said George Akerside.

A certain pompous and officious judge in a western town had just fined a young lawyer $10 for contempt of court. After it had been paid a grave old attorney walked up to the bench and laid down a $10 gold piece.

"What is that for?" asked the Judge.

"For contempt, your Honor," was the reply.

"But I didn't fine you for contempt," answered the Judge. "There must be some mistake."

"Oh, no, there isn't," replied the old man. "I have cherished a secret contempt for this court for a long time, and I'm willing to pay for it."—Chicago News.

loudly; "who presented him to you?"

He saw her put out her hands gropingly, and reel forward; she would have fallen in a faint at his feet if he had not stretched out his hand quickly and caught her.

"You are ill, my darling," he said, in great fright; "your face is perfectly ghastly. I will order the carriage at once, and you shall be taken home."

"No, no," moaned Daisy; "I must brave it out. This is but the beginning of the end."

"What are you saying about braving it out, dear?" said Aleck, anxiously. "You must not think of doing anything of the kind—you shall go home at once."

"I will go to Mrs. Dillingham's room and rest a little," she replied; "indeed, Aleck, I shall be all right then."

The hostess took Daisy to her boudoir.

"Rest here a good hour, my dear," she said, placing her on a velvet divan, "and then I shall come for you—you will feel greatly refreshed. I will dismiss my maid from the adjoining room that you may enjoy perfect quiet, and leave to your care in her place the family jewels. I hold to the good old plan that no hostess should outshine her guests in the way of gems, so I have laid them all aside for tonight. Good-bye for a short time, my dear," she said, kissing the lovely face.

Then turning the gas-jet low she quitted the room, bidding Daisy fasten the door after her.

"Alone with my own thoughts," moaned Daisy, as she turned the key in the lock. "I cannot live through it—the torture of it will drive me mad—yes, mad."

She closed her eyes, but all attempt to sleep was useless.

Ah, what a grave sea of trouble that one thoughtless act of folly had caused her—never more was she to know one hour of peace such as other women enjoyed, ah, never more.

A new difficulty was staring her in the face—Olive, her sister, seemed to be deeply infatuated with the French count, despite her warning; she could not look on calmly and see it, yet she dared not expose her enemy, for that would mean ruin to herself—Aleck's love turned to hatred, and deepest scorn—and death.

No, no; she could not betray her enemy, yet she must save Olive. But how?

She had been lying back on the velvet divan—her eyes closed—her hands pressed in agony over them. Suddenly she became dimly conscious of another's presence in the room.

She raised her head, and glanced furtively about her in the dim, uncertain light, and beyond through the open doorway into the inner apartment.

One glance, then a wild cry of horror broke from Daisy's lips.

With a terrible oath he sprung toward her, and Daisy saw that he wore a heavy black-crepe mask over his face.

In an instant he had caught Daisy by the arm as she was flying headlong toward the door.

"Cry out again at your peril!" he hissed. "Make no noise, and you are safe. I am a desperate man; you must do as I say."

"I saw you put those diamonds in your pocket," panted Daisy. "Give them up, or I will cry out for help until some one comes—even though you should kill me for it."

A muttered curse fell from the man's lips.

Daisy was about to put her threat into execution, when he forced her back into a chair.

A moment of awful intense silence ensued.

"You would know me, it seems, my dear lady," he said mockingly. "I had no very good reputation in your eyes before; your discovery of what I am before the world makes no material difference, I fancy. I am a French count, a poet, a gentleman, a robber—anything you like; anything to suit the time.

"Make no outcry; I am going through that window with the diamonds in my pocket."

Before he had time to reach it, Mrs. Dillingham and a party of ladies came hurrying into the boudoir through another door which Daisy had forgotten to lock, and, quick as a flash, with a daring coolness worthy of a better cause, the French count darted behind the heavy draperies of the window.

"Did you cry out, my dear?" asked Mrs. Dillingham, anxiously. "These ladies were passing through the corridor, and heard distinctly a loud piercing cry from this room, they say. Did you cry out?"

It almost killed poor Daisy to shield the wretch who stood so near her that she could have put out her hand and touched him—with the stolen diamonds in his pocket, her friend valued so highly.

She was tempted to denounce him—to drag him forth. To point to him, crying out:

"Call help—there is a robber behind these velvet hangings! Capture him—let justice be done!"

Looking through the small space between the hangings, the count saw her face, and knew the struggle that was going on in her mind.

Would she dare denounce him?

"If she does, it will be my turn next," he muttered, grimly.

CHAPTER XX.

Suspected.

The struggle in Daisy's heart lasted but an instant.

"No, come what may I must shield this villain for my own sake," she told herself bitterly.

White as death she turned to Mrs. Dillingham.

"It was only your fancy," she said in a very steady voice. "I did not cry out, indeed I did not."

The ladies all looked exceedingly puzzled; they had been so sure they had heard a piercing scream in Daisy's voice, and from that room. Of course they must have been mistaken.

With many apologies for disturbing her, they took their leave, advising her to rest quite an hour before venturing down to the ballroom again, she was looking so pale.

Trembling in every limb, Daisy sunk into the nearest chair as the door closed behind them; and at

A Good Salve For Horses.

A salve valuable to horsemen may be made of equal quantities by measure of pine tar, sulphur and lard. Mix the sulphur with the tar and stir it well; then add the lard and stir again. Set it on the stove and simmer for six hours, occasionally stirring it. It will cure the scratches on horses, and galls from the harness.

For scratches, thoroughly wash and clean the parts with castile or some other good kind of soap, and then rub in the salve. I have tried it and recommend it to others. I never knew it to fail. It is simple and cheap, and the formula easy to remember. It is not patented; anyone can use it.

It will also relieve sores, ringworm and most skin troubles on men.—J. W.

Ayrshires at St. Louis in 1903.

The breeders of dairy cattle in the United States are already beginning to prepare for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, to be held in St. Louis in 1903. At the recent meeting of the American Ayrshire Breeders' Association, held at Providence, R.I., it was voted to appropriate money from the treasury to pay the expense of placing a herd of Ayrshire cows in the breed test at that Exposition, and a committee was appointed to take charge of the same. Canadian breeders who intend to exhibit at St. Louis should at once begin to prepare their stock, so that they will not be taken at a disadvantage, when the time for this great international contest arrives.

Canadian Cattle in Aberdeenshire.

The removal of the British embargo on Canadian cattle is evidently still a live question in Scotland, as shown by the following item from a recent issue of The North British Agriculturist, a paper which has strongly opposed the free admission of Canadian "stores":—"A rather curious debate for a literary society, 'Should the restrictions on Canadian cattle be removed?' was held in the Public Hall, New Deer, under the auspices of the local Literary Society. The local papers state that there was a large attendance, and considerable interest was taken in the debate. Mr. Milne, coach-builder, supported the negative, and Mr. Godsman of Mains of Fedderate the affirmative. Mr. Milne made an able speech in favor of his side, pointing out the injury that would be done to small farmers and crofters, who depended mainly on their stock for a living, were Canadians admitted; but Mr. Godsman, who argued mainly on free trade theories, was one too many for him, and in the end carried the affirmative by a considerable majority. The great majority of those present were not farmers at all, but the vote shows how opinion may go even in this large cattle-breeding country."

How to Secure Good Lambs.

Begin with the ewes before the breeding season. For two or three weeks put them on better feed. The best I have found for this is rape pasture. Let the ewes run on the rape for an hour twice a day for the first few days until they get accustomed to it. This will put them in good flesh and in shape to raise strong lambs.

I always raise a few acres of turnips and these I feed regularly twice a day during the winter in connection with ground oats and bran. About a quart for each sheep with as much hay as they will eat up clean is sufficient. This care of the ewes during the winter gives to the lambs when they are dropped a large amount of milk. When the lambs are less than a week old they will begin to eat a little grain. The ewes must then be fed more liberally. I generally have a place where the lambs can be fed by themselves, and then give them ground oats and a little bran in the morning with cornmeal and bran at night. I always give a feed of roots during the day. By this method I have raised lambs which have dressed 78 pounds at thirteen weeks old. I always keep the following points in mind:—Give plenty of clean water, dip in late summer, keep clean and in a good dry barn, give regular attendance and feed.—J. Withers, in American Agriculturist.

Pigs and Cows.

The dairyman of to-day is of necessity a breeder of swine. The two go together so thoroughly that it would be a waste of good material and opportunity to neglect either. There can be no doubt that nature intended that the pigs should be the companion of the cows in the clover fields. But more than that, the swine should be fed on the skim milk that comes from the dairy. Pigs and shoats will thrive on this skim milk as on nothing else. The milk fed in this way will yield a larger profit than if sold in the ordinary market, where only a few cents a quart can be obtained, and often not that. The waste of time and material in trying to find a good market for skim milk is the most discouraging feature of the dairy business. Many a man has been induced to leave the business entirely on account of this. After settling up his accounts for the year he has found that he was actually no gainer for the year's work.

The only actually sure way of making money is to have a well organized dairy and pig farm. Enough of the latter should be kept at all times to consume the skim milk. By rapid growing and selling, turning the money over quickly, a good profit can be made for every quart of skim milk fed. Some keep their pigs too long. It is better to sell them as young pigs than to wait until they are so fat that few want them. A good healthy pig, with plenty of lean and fat on his sides, will usually sell better than the excessively fat hogs. The clover and grass will always help to make the pigs grow, and on a diet of good clover and plenty of skim milk there is no danger of hog cholera or other swine diseases in the hottest of weather. Corn and dry grain are the breeders of disease and illness in hogs during the summer. The hog cholera is undoubtedly the produce of overheated blood, superinduced by heavy corn and grain feeding. We cannot stamp out the disease until we change the diet. Let that be skim milk and green clover and grass from June 1 until the end of September, and any man can raise as fine a flock of clean, healthy swine as any market man could ask for. And the market for such animals —A. B. Barrett, in Indiana Farmer. is always ready, with prices for [illegible]

Late Sidney Cooper, R.A.

An interesting figure in the art world passed away a few days ago in England, when Sidney Cooper, R. A., died at the age of 99. He worked at his profession until almost the last, and had a picture in the Royal Academy last year, as he had had each year since 1845, when he became A. R. A. His record in this respect is without a precedent, nor is it likely to be equalled for many a generation. Mr. Cooper was born September 28, 1803. A few years ago he was so repeatedly asked the question to what he attributed his long life and splendid vigor that he jotted down the following salient points of his life and habits:

"I was born at Canterbury in 1803 during the great Imperial war, which lasted till I was twelve years of age. All provisions were very dear and my early life was spent on very plain food. So soon as I was able I got to hard work for little pay.

"I took every opportunity to draw and sketch from Nature; but as I could not get instruction this caused me to walk much daily. I have been a great walker. At twenty years of age I was able to learn drawing at county schools, which gave me a great number of miles to walk.

"I was never ill, except with infant maladies. At thirty I commenced to try to paint. After I came to settle in London my living was of a very careful kind. I soon became known and received many commissions for my work, which became very popular.

"Then came a period of bad health from the overstrain of London life, and I feared I should become a poor invalid. So I went back to the country, bought some land and built this house (Vernon Holme, near Canterbury) in 1848. I soon felt the change for the better.

"I bought a farm, which required much looking after, and I commenced to walk again. This I continued to do; and now, in my ninety-sixth year, I can paint four or five hours a day and walk slowly a mile daily in fine weather or take a carriage drive if not fine.

"I rise at 7 o'clock, go into my study, set my palette, take my breakfast at 8, then my Bible, then I paint till 12.30. Then lunch and Bible and paint till 3 o'clock. This is my day's work and then I take my walk, write letters and dine at 6 o'clock.

"I take no wine, but a very little whiskey and cold water. Of course I have the infirmities of old age, but now enjoy the cheerful effects of a temperate life.

"I think moderate smoking conducive to sleep, if in the evening; but to smoke all day, as I know some do, is not wise.

"I must tell you that I attribute my long life to the merciful care of God's Providence, for He was the Father of the fatherless boy and has preserved him through all his trials and difficulties, prosperities, sunshine and shadow."

Mr. Cooper was no doubt the oldest member of his profession in the world at the time of his death, but he was even then junior to a Devonshire preacher, who is in his hundredth year. This is Mr. Robert C. Chapman of Barnstaple, and from the excellent health he enjoys at present there is every prospect of his going well into the second century.

Primarily a barrister, he gave up his profession when still in the twenties, in order to devote himself to religious work. For over seventy years he has worked in Barnstaple, and the older he gets the more popular he becomes with the members of the Plymouth Brethren community, to which he belongs. A man of scholarly attainments, he is master of half a dozen languages and author of many Biblical works. Mr. Chapman is known among the Nonconformist churches the world over. He still preaches, though only occasionally, as he finds it takes rather too much out of him, but whenever he does occupy the pulpit there is always a large congregation.

Advertising Canada.

Certainly, if Canada is not well advertised now in Great Britain, it is no longer the fault of the British press. It is difficult to pick up an English newspaper to-day without finding it containing somewhere or other a reference to Canada's resources or to some phase or other of life in the Dominion. Moreover, there need no longer be any feeling that the attention of the British is directed by their newspapers to Australia or New Zealand rather than to Canada; all that has changed during the last few years. South Africa necessarily occupies a sad prominence, but from a point of view altogether different from that from which Canada is seen. The London press has been paying much attention to the Deputy Minister of the Interior, Mr. Smart, during his visit to Great Britain, and numerous interviews and articles that must prove of great value to this country have appeared in the columns of the big metropolitan dailies. In the provincial press Canada is almost equally to the front. In the shape of letters from correspondents, who are sometimes residents of Canada, sometimes Englishmen who have visited Canada, or by means of articles based on the excellent literature emanating from the Immigration Department, Canada is being continually kept in the minds of the people of Great Britain.

Temperance Work in London.

In connection with the efforts to increase the growth of temperance in the Province of Ontario it is interesting to notice the expensive temperance work that the London County Council is at present carrying out, but it is not designated as such, nor is the general public aware of the fact. Yet within the last three years the London County Council has devoted more than $1,250,000 to the practical work of temperance. It is one of the consequences of the extensive improvements being made in London at present. When acquiring property for the necessary widening of different streets, many public houses, with licenses and good will, come into the possession of the Council. These properties are very valuable, but the Council, instead of renewing them for premises in the neighborhood, is deliberately giving them up, seeing, at the same time, that no new licenses for these localities are issued. In this way the number of public houses in London has been diminished by 103, which were valued at $4,673,755.

A Classification.

Henry Thomas Buckle's thoughts and conversation were always on a high level. Once he remarked: "Men and women range themselves into three classes, or orders, of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons; the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things; the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

A Feat of Memory.

DURING a debate in the House, between Gladstone and Disraeli, when the latter in the course of his remarks had occasion to quote from a recent speech made by his rival upon some platform in the country, a dramatic scene was enacted, and is described by Harry Furniss in his recent book, "Confessions of a Caricaturist."

Suddenly Mr. Gladstone started up and exclaimed: "I never said that in my life!"

Disraeli was silent, and putting his hands behind his back, gazed apparently in blank astonishment at the box in front of him. Several seconds went by, but he never moved. The members in the crowded House looked from one to the other, and many imagined that Disraeli was merely waiting for his opponent to apologise. But Mr. Gladstone, who had a habit, which he developed in later years, of chatting volubly to his neighbor during any interruption of this kind in which he was concerned, made no sign. A minute passed, but the sphinx did not move.

A minute and a quarter, but he was still motionless.

A minute and a half of this silence seemed as if it was an hour.

When the second minute was completed the excitement in the House began to grow intense. Disraeli seemed to be transfixed. Was he ill? Was the great man sulking? What could this strange silence portend?

Two minutes and a half!

Some members rose and approached him, but Disraeli raised his hands as if to deprecate their interference, and they stole back to their places, conscious that they were forbidden to interrupt. Then at last, when the minute-hand of the clock had passed three times round its course, the most remarkable silence which the House had ever experienced within living memory was broken as the Tory leader slowly began once more to speak.

"Mr. Chairman," he said, "and gentlemen," and then word for word he repeated the whole speech of Mr. Gladstone from which he had made his quotation, duly introducing the particular passage which the Liberal leader had denied. Then he paused and looked across at his rival. The challenge was not to be avoided, and Mr. Gladstone bowed—he would have raised his hat did he wear one in the House, which, in the phraseology of the ring, was equivalent to throwing up the sponge. Mr. Disraeli afterward informed a friend that, working backward, he had recalled the whole of Mr. Gladstone's speech to his mind. Beginning at the disputed quotation, he recovered the context which led up to it, and so, step by step, the entire oration. Then he was enabled to repeat it from the outset exactly as he had read it.

No Breach of Discipline.

THE colonel was entertaining some of his friends with stories of army life, and the talk turned to the inflexibility of orders. That reminded the colonel of Tim Murphy's case.

Murphy had enlisted in the cavalry service, although he had never been on a horse in his life. He was taken out for drill with other raw recruits under command of a sergeant, and, as luck would have it, secured one of the worst buckers in the whole troop.

"Now, my men," said the sergeant in addressing them, "no one is allowed to dismount without orders from a superior officer. Remember that."

Tim was no sooner in the saddle than he was buried head over heels through the air, and came down so hard that the breath was almost knocked out of him.

"Murphy," shouted the sergeant, when he discovered the man spread out on the ground, "you dismounted!"

"I did."

"Did you have orders?"

"I did."

"From headquarters, I suppose?" with a sneer.

"No, from hindquarters."

"Take him to the guard-house!" ordered the sergeant.—Detroit "Free Press."

Winter Uplands.

The frost that stings like fire upon my cheek,
The loneliness of this forsaken ground,
The long white drift upon whose powdered peak
I sit in the great silence as one bound;
The rippled sheet of snow where the wind blew
Across the open fields for miles ahead;
The far-off city towered and roofed in blue,
A tender line upon the western red;
The stars that singly, then in flocks appear,
Like jets of silver from a violet dome,
So wonderful, so many, and so near,
And then the golden moon to light me home;
The crunching snowshoes and the stinging air,
And silence, frost, and beauty everywhere.

—Lampman.

A man who was bicycling in southern France was pushing his machine up a steep hill, when he overtook a peasant with a donkey cart. The patient beast was making but little progress, although it was doing its best.

The benevolent cyclist, putting his left hand against the back of the cart and guiding his machine with the other hand, pushed so hard that the donkey, taking fresh courage, pulled his load successfully up to the top.

When the summit was reached the peasant burst into thanks to his benefactor.

"It was good of you, indeed, monsieur!" he protested. "I should never in the world have got up the hill with only one donkey."—Youth's Companion.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

A Tribute to Father Pat.

WRITING from Rossland, B. C., in reference to a recent paragraph in "Saturday Night" on the career of the late "Father Pat," the Rev. Charles W. Hedley says that the main point of his remarkable ministry was not eccentricity, but a quite unique self-sacrifice in the service of any who needed him. "Unconventional he certainly was to a degree which might indeed, as you suggest, shock some strait-laced people in Toronto, but in an age of worldliness and self-seeking he sought neither the world nor self, but gave freely and utterly his time, comfort, strength, means, even at times the clothes off his back, to those in need. The best proof of the man is to be found in the warm regard with which his memory is treasured over the wide area in which he labored as a pioneer missionary. He did adapt himself as few could have done to the tone of the men among whom chiefly his work lay; but while seemingly indifferent to conventional details, he stood for the main elements of religion — faith in God the Father, the redemption, and the practical brotherhood of man—and he lived out his creed. The vices which Christ most sweepingly condemned were as far as possible removed from his character, while on the other hand the pre-eminently Christian virtues were his to a remarkable degree. It is due to no mere eccentricity on his part that a memorial church is to be erected in Rossland, and that immediately on receipt of the news of his death a spontaneous movement was made to erect a public memorial, a movement which has been widely supported by hundreds of contributors of all classes and creeds."

"Daring" Books.

It is women who write "daring" books, and it is women who read them. When once the fair do take their bonnets off they are not content with that; they throw them over the windmills, as the French say. Men do not like this kind of thing. It not only disgusts but bores them. It is a particular kind of woman, usually earnest and very stupid, who enjoys these excesses. Our sex, if all this goes on, must provide itself with fans to blush behind. We must leave the ladies before the coffee and cigarettes begin to circulate.—Andrew Lang in "Longman's Magazine."

Correct to the Last.

"Anyhow," chuckled the somewhat fastidious horse-thief as the regulators adjusted the noose about his neck, "it isn't a ready-made tie."—Chicago "Tribune."

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means farther exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

Burning Bunions

Foot Elm soothes a Bunion, takes out the inflammation and gives ease and rest to the poor sore foot. It is the best foot doctor you ever knew. Price 25c. a box, all druggists, or by mail, Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

(NOTE.—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.)

—Mount Hebron Encampment, No 64, met last night.

—The Chief has a pocket book for which he would like an owner.

—The Board of Works met last night and transacted some routine business.

—The suckers are now in evidence, and the small boy's heart is glad.

—The Fire Brigade was called over to Ashburnham yesterday. Some grass on the roadside had taken fire.

—Dog tags are now in evidence. The Chief requests all who have not yet procured tags to do so at once.

—The vocal pupils of Mrs. W. J. Morrow attended the concert in the opera house last night in a body.

—On Saturday evening Pte. Eastland who left for South Africa on Sunday night, was banquetted by his fellow-employees at the Snowden House and presented with a purse of $25.

—When you want the best quality of photos taken go to Whiten's, you get the best there. If you want the best quality in crayon work, take your small pictures to Whiten, 154 Hunter St. west.

—Lindsay Post.—Mr. H. Gould, expert machinist with the Canadian General Electric Co., Peterborough, is spending a few days in town making repairs to the electrical machinery in the Flavelle Milling Co's mill.

—Mayor Denne dispensed evenhanded justice at the Police Court yesterday morning, in the absence of Magistrate Dumble. James Hanlon was up pursuant to remand on a charge of vagrancy. His Worship further remanded him until Thursday next, when the Police Magistrate will have returned home.

—The Senior Girl's Guild of All Saint's church intend holding a "Rummage Sale" in Bradburn's new store in the Arcade from May 7th to 10th inclusive. Contributions of furniture, pictures, books, bric-abrac, toys, china, curios, clothing, etc, will be asked for from those kindly disposed.

—Mr. James Doland, our enterprising new dry goods man, advertised in The Times for a couple of clerks. The result was that over 40 persons applied during the first day after the ad. appeared. This great family journal is a cracker-jack when it comes to getting "results."

—Mr. Harry Long, with his usual enterprise, has added a splendid new soda water fountain to his splendid newly furnished store. The fountain is a marvel of beauty and usefulness. It weighs over a ton, stands 12 feet in height, is six feet in width, and is covered with incandescent lights. Drop in and see it.

—Here is a pointer for church workers who are looking for novelty:—There were doings at the Hannah Street Methodist Church social Hamilton Ont., given last evening by the men of the congregation. A special feature was a chorus of bald-headed men, who sang "There'll Be No Parting There." It was a shining success. A repast of hard-boiled eggs and pork and beans preceded the concert.

Commercial Printing

Everything in the shape of spring announcement cards, folders, and fancy circulars can be obtained at the Times job rooms. Also a complete line of commercial stationery, visiting cards, etc., at the lowest prices. Workmanship unequalled.

Three Centuries of Plowing

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in this issue of the Wonder Plow Company, of London Ontario. We believe that nothing to equal it has ever been invented. As a labor-saver it is a marvel, and no farmer should be without one. When the plow is adjusted there is no need of holding the plow handles. Read the advertisement, and write the company for prices.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE.—The Times solicits its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.

—It will be pleasing news for Mr. Macfarlane Wilson's many friends to learn that he is slowly improving.

—Miss Emma Morrow has returned from a trip to Florida, having accompanied Mrs. Ames south for the spring.

—Miss Warren, of Whitby, who has been the guest of Mrs. (Dr.) Eastwood, Brock street, for the last few weeks has returned home.

—Our respected townsman, Mr. F. M. Cobb, is entertaining his brother, Mr. Wellington Cobb, of Evanston, Ill., who is on his wedding trip, going east to Kingston.

—Port Hope Guide.—Mr. R. Armstrong left on Saturday on a visit among his old friends in Peterborough. The grocery business will be in charge of Miss Merrifield during his absence.

—The many friends of Mr. Chester Lang will be pleased to learn that he has so far recovered from his attack of typhoid fever as to be able to return home where he arrived on Monday. Mr. Lang was stricken on 18th of last month and on that day was taken to the hospital in Pittsburg, where he remained until a few days ago.

The Miss MacLachlan Concert

The Opera House last night was well filled on the occasion of the first appearance in Peterborough of the Celebrated Scottish prima donna, Miss Jessie N. MacLachlan and Mr. Donald C. McGregor, baritone. Those who went were well repaid for doing so, as the high reputation of the artists was found not to have been overdrawn.

Drowned in the Gull River

Lindsay Post.—Mr. J. Armour, brother of Mr. Sam Armour, of the Central School staff, was accidentally drowned in the Gull River, north of Norland, early this morning. He had been visiting his son-in-law, who operates a saw-mill in that locality, and it is supposed that while helping to move some logs he slipped into the river and was carried away by the swift current. The body was found shortly afterwards.

The deceased is the eldest brother of the family, and was about 60 years of age. Interment will take place in the Union cemetery, Oshawa, on Wednesday. Mr. Armour's many friends in Lindsay will sympathize with him in his bereavement.

Orillia's Light and Power Rates

Peterborough citizens will be interested in the following schedule of rates adopted by Orillia Council in connection with the town's new power system, now in successful operation: Incandescent Light.—Each 16 c.p. lamp in stores or hotels, 25c per month; in dwellings, 15c, per month. Twenty per cent discount for prompt payment, making store lights 20c net, and dwellings 12c. for twentyfour hour service. The present rate is 40c. stores 30c residence, 20 off Power—$16 per h.p. net. 24-hour service. Ten horse power and under will be based on the capacity of the motor over 10 h.p. computed on the maximum power used.

Completely Fagged Out

The world is full of sickly, despondent, tired, enervated people, all hoping to be well some day. The surest road to health is along the way of taking Ferrozone after meals. Ferrozone is a great appetizer and enables one to eat plenty of wholesome food without fear of indigestion or dyspepsia. This results in the rapid formation of an abundance of red, vitalizing blood, which will restore the nerves, increase flesh and vigor, and nourish and feed every organ of the body. Ferrozone is an ideal restorative and invigorant, is a tonic of unequalled merit that all can use with benefit. Price 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50, at druggists, or Ormond & Walsh.

BANQUETTED AT McCALLUMS

Pte. Hudson and Pogue Given a Farewell Supper by the W. E. A. C.

The members of the West End Baseball Club gathered at McCallum's Restaurant to say Farewell to Pte. Pogue and Walter Hodgson and give the boys a banquet before their departure for South Africa. A very pleasant evening was spent in singing and speechmaking alternately.

The West End Club will be well represented in South Africa, five of their number having enlisted, namely,—

Pte. Crossland.
Pte. Clinkscale.
Pte. Kemp.
Pte. Judd.
Pte. Hudson.

SERIOUSLY WOUNDED

A Peterborough Man Very Dangerously Wounded in South Africa

"Dangerously ill, 20th April Johannesburg, 2nd C.M.R. J. Millen, Michael Murphy both gunshot wounds."

Millen, who comes from Wyndham Centre Ont., was wounded in the jaw and leg in the Hart's River engagement. Murphy hailed from Peterborough. His was a scalp wound.

A CHINA HEAD

Comes From Tea Drinking

A lady writes from Shanghai, China: "In the summer of '98, husband and I were travelling through southern Europe and I was finally laid up in Rome with a slow fever. An American lady gave me Postum Food Coffee which I began using at once. It was my sole breakfast and supper. In a short time the change in my physical condition was wonderful to see. I will never travel again without Postum.

When we arrived in Shanghai we were in an English community and found ourselves in the midst of the four o'clock tea custom. Before long we began to have sleepless nights and nervous days as a result of our endeavors to be amiable and conform to custom.

As soon as it could arrive from San Francisco we had a large supply of Postum Food Coffee and began its use at the four o'clock tea table. I cannot tell how popular the coffee table became for afternoon callers. In fact a number of the business men, as well as missionaries, use Postum now wholly in place of tea and the value of the change from coffee and tea cannot be estimated." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Another Batch of Recruits Secured Yesterday for the Contingent

Recruiting still continues at the Drill Shed, over 60 men all told having been secured in Peterborough. The following additional men have been taken on the strength:—

J. POGUE.
W. H. HARTLEY.
F. PLUMMER.
H. SCULLY.
R. H. Wm. PAYNE.
C. E. GOW.

The following men will leave Peterborough to-night for Halifax to join the others of the local contingent: Walter Eastland, Frank Plummer, Walter Hodgson, Wm. Hartley, Bert Thompson, R. H. W. Payne, C. E. Gow and Harold Scully.

All enlisted men will report at the drill shed this morning at 10 o'clock.

Took the Wrong Wheel

Our genial friend, Chief Rutherford of the Fire Department, recently alighted from his wheel in front of the Peterborough Hardware Company's store and entered the building. Just then another rider landed a few feet in front of where Tom's wheel stood. The latter took the precaution to lock his wheel to the hitching on the curb, and also entered the store. In a few moments Tom came out and sauntered up to No. 2 wheel and prepared to mount. He noticed that it was chained to the pavement. Thinking that some smart Alick had played a trick on him, he tore the wheel from its fastening and after mounting, proceeded down street. He hadn't gone far till he found his mistake, and hurriedly returned and secured his own wheel. He lost no time in getting away from the unlucky spot. When No. 2 rider appeared, he was naturally indignant to find that his lock had been broken. Now it is up to Tom to square himself, which no doubt he will speedily do by inviting his victim down to the Palace one of those days for a glass of buttermilk.

WEDDED IN OTONABEE

Nuptials of Wm. L. Welch to Miss Eliza J. McAllister

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday last, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. McAllister, Otonabee, when their charming daughter, Miss Eliza J. was united in marriage to Mr. Wm. W. Welch, of the same township, Rev. J. G. Potter, of St. Andrew's Church, town, officiated. The bride was tastely attired in a dress of white lustre, trimmed with satin ribbon and lace, wearing the conventional veil, caught up with Lily of the Valley, carrying a boquet of white bride roses. She entered the parlor on the arm of her father, to the strains of the wedding march, rendered by Mr. John Tapson, of Bowmanville. The bride was assisted by Miss Catherine Robinson, of Peterboro, who was very prettily attired in pink Organdie, trimmed with lace and silk. The groom was ably assisted by his brother, Mr. Ernest A. Welsh.

After hearty congratulations had been extended, the party, numbering about seventy-five sat down to a sumptuous wedding dejeuner. The presents were very valuable and exceedingly handsome. The young couple took up their residence in Peterborough at 305 Perry street, where they carry with them the hearty good wishes of their many friends, in which The Times cordially joins.

TRENT CANAL

NOTICE TO MANUFACTURERS OF AND DEALERS IN PORTLAND CEMENT

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for Portland Cement" will be received at this office up to sixteen o'clock on Monday, 28th April, 1902, for the supply and delivery of 60,000 barrels, or any portion thereof of Portland Cement on the Trent Canal as per specification.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the same, and further, an accepted bank check for 10 per cent. of the total amount tendered for must accompany the tender. This accepted check must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The accepted check thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By Order,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 15th April, 1902.

Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the Department will not be paid for it.

ELECTED OFFICERS

The Annual Business Meeting of George St. Epworth League

The annual business meeting and election of officers of George street Epworth League took place Monday evening. Preceding the business meeting an excellent paper on the topic, "The Secret of Endurance," was read by Miss Crafts.

Although the League has not increased to any extent in membership during the year, yet the term that has just closed has been one of the most successful in the history of the Society, as was shown by the excellent character of the reports of work accomplished by the different departments during the year.

The officers for the coming term are as follows:—

President—Mr. G. Robertson.

2nd Vice-President, Missionary Department—Miss Kidd.

3rd Vice-President, Literary Department—Mr. E. Doidge.

4th. Vice-President, Social Department—Miss Metheral.

Recording Secretary—Miss Maude Detlor.

Corresponding Secretary Miss Ethel Miller.

Treasurer—Miss Janet Wilson.

Pianists—Mrs. R. Cunningham, Miss Edith McClennan.

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

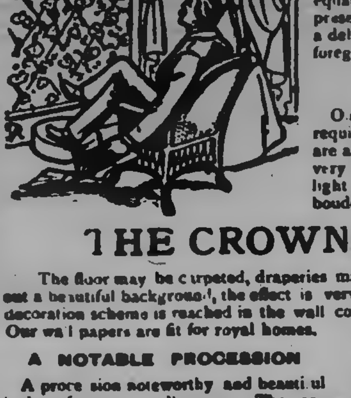
PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE.

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of vision than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them



WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They present the new schools of design and a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the decoration scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end. Our wall papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

THREE BROTHERS TO DIE IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

One of the Boys Quailed when the Sentence was Pronounced

TO BE EXECUTED AT AUBURN

Heartless Conduct of the Elder Brother—Their Crime a Most Atrocious One

Special to The Times.

Hudson, N.Y., April 23

"What the devil are you so white about?"

"You are not any too red yourself, you ex-lobster!"

These words were the first exchanged by the Van Wormer brothers after sentence of death had been passed on them to-day. Burton, the mastermind in the brothers' career of crime, heard the sentence sullenly. Fred, the baby of the family, brown-eyed and youthful, had quailed. As they were led in silence to the jail Burton taunted the youngest for his pallid, frightened face. The youth flushed and flung back the taunt.

As if repeating his words Burton shouted with attempted cheerfulness as his brothers were led to separate cells and the bolts snapped into place: "Good night, boys! I'll see you on the train."

Fred caught the greeting, pressed his face against the bars and then drew back into the gloomy cell.

The Van Wormer boys, Willis, Burton and Frederick, were found guilty of murder in the first degree to-day for the killing of their aged uncle, Peter A. Hallenbeck, on Christmas eve last. Jaunty indifference marked their demeanor from the beginning to the end of the trial until they listened to their death sentence.

Then the nerve of the youngest deserted him an instant, to be lashed back into a spirit of bravado by the imperturbable Burton. Willis, the eldest, was apparently unconcerned. He and Fred have been pliant tools of their brother.

Only once before in the history of the State have three brothers been condemned to death. That was in 1825, when the three Thayers were hanged at Buffalo.

SENTENCED TO DEATH CHAIR!

Justice Chester sentenced the three brothers to be executed at Clinton Prison, Dannemora, during the week beginning May 30, 1902. They showed no signs of breaking down, no surprise.

"This is the saddest moment of my career on the bench," Justice Chester began, in passing judgment required by the verdict.

"I never imagined that such an awful duty as sentencing three young men, brothers, to die by the hand of the law would ever fall to my lot."

The brothers were ordered to stand up. Fred braced himself on the chair of his counsel as he arose. The clerk put to them the usual legal questions, and the answers were unfaltering. After sentence had been passed Alonzo H. Farrar, their counsel, leaned back and put his arm around Fred, assuring him that the verdict would not stand, and that a new trial would be the result of an appeal which will be taken.

Sheriff Best's first plan was to hurry the prisoners off to Dannemora prison to-night, but Fred asked to see his step-mother, and Pearl Van Buren, Willis's former sweetheart, telephoned to the jail asking for permission to bid him good-bye. It was then decided to keep the brothers in jail until Sunday, when they will be escorted to Dannemora under a strong guard.

CALLED IT A LARK

The details of the crime, the purchase of masks, the turning of their coats to aid their disguise, the hiring of a fast team, the roundabout course to the house where the aged couple were spending their lonely Christmas eve, the summons at the door, and when the white-haired man appeared a hail of bullets which dropped him bleeding and lifeless on the threshold, while his wife, pleading for mercy—fell across her husband's body—all this the Van Wormer brothers said was a "lark to frighten the old man," they didn't plan to shoot him down in cold blood.

When all else failed they sought to shift responsibility on their cousin, Harvey Bruce, who accompanied them, and on whose confession the prosecution founded its case. Bruce will be tried later.

AN ALL NIGHT FIGHT IN PANAMA ISTHMUS

Columbian Rebels Capture Town of Boas, North of Colon

FEDERAL TROOPS BADLY BEATEN

The War Feeling Spreading—The Captured Town a Prominent Port

Special to The Times.

Colon, Columbia, April 24 — A German steamer from Bocas del Toro brings news that the Liberals (rebels) effected a landing in open boats and barges near Bocas at 6 p.m. Thursday, when fighting began. The Liberal troops outnumbered the Government force, which was compelled to surrender the town at 11 a.m. yesterday.

One hundred and fifty men on both sides were killed, but the Government loss was insignificant as compared with that of the Liberals.

The United States gunboat Machias has landed 100 marines at Bocas.

Gen. Gomez, the Military Governor of Colon, left here yesterday on the Government gunboat Gen. Pinzon for Bocas del Toro, with 700 men and four guns, one a long range three pounder.

It is believed here that the Pinzon is now bombarding the town, and will quickly dislodge the insurgents, who are under command of Gen. Buendia.

Bocas del Toro is an important fruit shipping port on the isthmus of Panama, north of Colon (or Aspinwall). The fruit trade is almost exclusively with the United States and is practically controlled by Americans, who have extensive interests there.

A few days ago the Colombian rebels in that neighborhood seized an American steam launch used in the fruit trade in order to use it to tow barges laden with troops to a convenient point for landing to attack the town. When the seizure was reported in Colon the United States gunboat Machias, which was stationed there, went immediately to Bocas del Toro to protect American interests.

The Navy Department at Washington received yesterday from Commander McCrea, of the Machias, this cable despatch:

"Bocas del Toro, Columbia, has surrendered. No injury to American citizens or interests. Making arrangements to withdraw forces this evening. Will sail for Aspinwall Sunday."

LAKEHURST

—Miss Edna Shearer came home from Peterborough on Friday last. Her mother has been suffering from a severe cold.

—The Sunday school in connection with the Methodist church here started its summer work last Sunday. Mr. Jas. Cooms has been appointed superintendent, with Mrs. Purser, Miss Cooms and Mr. David Weir as teachers.

—On Tuesday a meeting was held in the Presbyterian church to arrange for a week-night meeting and to reorganize the Sunday school for the summer.

—Mr. Jas. Cooms has been suffering from a very severe cold for some time back. We hope to see him around as usual soon.

—Mrs. Clarkson still improves in health after her recent illness.

BEEF IS HIGH

Prices have been Increased by all the Local Butchers.

Prices for meat have been increased during the past few days. Twenty cents per pound is now being charged for the best cuts.

Mr. H. P. Kennedy was interviewed by The Times, and stated that prices might even go higher than at present. We will get no relief for the next six months at least. Prices are high in the United States from some cause or other. He didn't exactly know what is the cause. Corn and feed generally are high apparently and there is a shortage of fat cattle. The Americans have, therefore, been coming over here for some time past getting all the cattle they could get hold of, then, of course, the large shipments of very young cattle to the other side for the past year or two has had an effect, so that it has come now that ordinary butcher cattle, if they are any good at all, sell at 6 and 6 1-2 cents a pound, and that means 9 and 9 1-2 cents in the beef. Then the wholesale dealer and the retailer have to handle and must make a profit somewhere, so he did not see much less than 20c. a pound to the consumer. It is very likely the hotel and restaurant men will shortly raise the price of meals in sympathy with the increased cost of meat.

Another prominent meat merchant took a more hopeful view of the situation. He thought that a reduction might be expected when grass cattle are slaughtered. All cattle now being slaughtered were stall fed and consequently come higher. When the gamboling steer, who has fed on the straw stack all winter, gets a month's feeding on new pasturage meat will be plentiful and cheaper.

THE BOYS IN HALIFAX

The Progress of the First Detachment of the Fourth Contingent

Word has been received from some of the boys who left Peterborough for South Africa on last Thursday night, giving particulars of their trip to the coast.

From all reports they had a comparatively pleasant journey, being allowed all reasonable liberty to see the principal places of interest on the route. They were in Montreal on Friday morning from about 9 a.m. until noon, leaving there for Halifax at that time. The latter place was reached on Saturday evening, and an encampment made on the exhibition grounds. They were dismissed shortly afterwards, until Monday morning, and most of the boys took advantage of the free bath and writing equipment kindly accorded by Mr. James P. Fairbanks, proprietor of the Queen's Hotel, who did everything possible to give them a pleasant welcome to the city. They expect to remain for some time.

HORRIBLE BRUTALITY OF AMERICAN ARMY.

SOAP ADDED TO WATER CURE

Uncle Sam has a Heap of Trouble of His Own Without Looking to South Africa

Buffalo, April 24.—"The soldiers are not at all squeamish about administering the "water cure to the Filipinos.

This statement was made by John J. Barnett, a young man of this city who has just returned from the Philippines. He served as a corporal in Company H, Twenty-eight Infantry, on the island of Panay, province of Iloilo from October, 1899, to May, 1901, and later as sergeant of a mounted command.

"On the evening of Sept. 14, 1900" he said, "I saw the 'cure' administered to the President, or Mayor, of Trust, a town of 1,200 inhabitants. He was taken to a bamboo shack and there questioned by the United States officers. They knew the insurgents were in force somewhere in the vicinity, and they wanted the President to tell them where they were, but he refused. He was told that if he did not give the information other means would be employed, but still he persisted in his refusal.

WATER WAS MADE SOAPY.

"A detail of soldiers then tied him up to the wall of the shack in such a manner that his head was forced backwards. A small bamboo stick was passed between his teeth so as to hold his mouth partly open. Then a stream of water was allowed to run from above the man's head so as to strike his forehead and flowed down over his nostrils and into his mouth. If he breathed through his nose he would choke, and so he had to keep swallowing the water or drown.

"After the man had swallowed a large amount of water and was almost totally exhausted he was laid down and his stomach kneaded until the water he had swallowed was forced out of his mouth. The interpreter then said, 'Alba!' which means 'Speak!'

"'I don't know anything about any insurgent forces in this vicinity,' the man persisted. Then the dose was repeated, only it was worse, inasmuch as soap was mixed with the water this time. At last, when he was almost suffocated, the man said he would tell what he knew, and he was released. He fell down in collapse, and was restored in the same manner as before.

HAD TO SWALLOW WATER OR DROWN

"Another form of the 'water cure' I saw administered to a Filipino civilian of the town of Dingle. He was laid flat on the bamboo floor of a shack and tied securely. A short piece of hollow bamboo was placed in his mouth and kept there. Then a stream of water was poured steadily on his face. As in the other instance, he had to swallow to keep from drowning. Mixed with the water was soap.

"After this had been continued for about five minutes the soldiers let up to see if he would reveal anything. The man was totally exhausted, being almost drowned. The water was forced out of his stomach and then he gave up what he knew.

"From sixteen to twenty cases of the "water cure" came within my personal observation, but I never knew of a man dying under the treatment."

San Francisco, April 24.—J. Mercuz, a coal dealer of this city, was formerly a sergeant of Company B, Thirty-fifth Volunteers, in the Philippines. This was the company of Lieut. Hughes, accused of torturing natives. Mercuz said to-day:

"I spent eighteen months in northern Luzon, and almost daily I saw Filipinos tortured into revealing the hiding places of arms and ammunition. I have seen the native police use black mud, where they could not get water, to inflict the "water cure" on Filipinos who were supposed to have rifles hidden. The sight was so sickening that the Major in command ordered the men to stop and turned away. But as soon as the Major was gone the torture was resumed.

"Although the Thirty-fifth was in the Philippines less than two years, I believe the records will show that they captured more rifles than any regiment of regulars stationed there. The "water cure" was the only way to get them, and the "water cure" was invariably used by the boys of the Thirty-fifth. One-fifth of the rifles captured in the Philippines were taken by means of torture.

"'Water curing' was not generally used until after Gen. Lawton's death. No orders to inflict torture ever came from any officer higher than a captain, though the other officers all know of the practice. They did not forbid it. The higher officers of the Thirty-fifth were all regulars, and I understand they did not like the method. But it was the only way to get rifles. Col. Plummer, stationed at Baliuan, was not in favor of it.

400 STUDENTS TO BE SENT TO SIBERIA

Forty-eight Persons were Held in One Prison for Nearly a Year

HORRIBLE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS

Russian Famine in Its Worst Form—Revolution Likely to Follow

Special to The Times

St. Petersburg, April 23 — Student reports give the total number of arrests in Moscow during the last two or three weeks as 1,800. They anticipate the exile to Siberia of the greater part of the 400 students who offered the Government armed resistance in the University of Moscow.

From many towns it is reported that many political prisoners are generally resorting to starvation tactics in order to force their release or obtain a hearing. Forty-eight prisoners thus secured their release a short time ago from a detention prison in this city, where they had been held without an inquiry for nearly a year.

Many students are preparing to go abroad for study, and this has led to a proposition to increase the fee for the issue of a passport to go abroad from $7.50 to $150 for the first six months, and $100 for each additional half year.

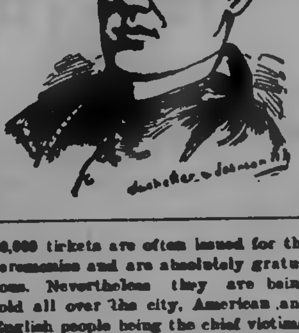
Scurvy and typhoid fever are devastating the peasantry throughout the whole of the Altai (highlands of Siberia) region, formerly the chief granary of Siberia. The starving people there have consumed even the last remnants of their seed-grain, and no spring crops have been sown.

At Menzolinsk, Government of Oufa, there have been upward of 4,000 cases of typhus, hunger and scurvy; at Belibelaki 682 cases have been reported, and at Akmolinsk over 1,000 cases have occurred. Similar reports come from Voronej, Kasan and Saratoff.

A SUCCESSOR TO LEO XIII

There is Active Competition For the High Position of Holy Pontiff

Cardinal Rampolla Will Probably Succeed on the Death of Leo. XIII.



Special to The Times

Rome, April 23 — The recent alarming reports regarding the pope's health have caused a great revival of activity among the cardinal aspirants to the pontificate. The campaign goes on continually preparatory to the next conclave. The sacred college is divided into two distinct forces. One is headed by Cardinal Rampolla, the papal secretary of state, and the other by Cardinal Vannutelli. The latter and Cardinal Gotti are regarded as Pope Leo's probable successors.

Other candidates who are not considered so important point out that nearly 150 cardinals have been buried during the pontificate of Leo XIII. They declare that the pope may live to see many more ambitious cardinals removed by the hand of death.

The traffic in tickets to the ceremonies in honor of the twenty-fourth anniversary of the pope's coronation, to be held at St. Peter's and the Sistine chapel, has increased so as to amount to a scandal. Some 50,000 to 60,000 tickets are often issued for the ceremonies and are absolutely gratuitous. Nevertheless they are being sold all over the city, American and English people being the chief victims. Steps have been taken to stop the sale.

Archbishop Falconi, papal delegate to Canada, has been selected to succeed Cardinal Martinelli as papal delegate to the United States. It is felt that he is eminently fitted for his new position by his diplomatic abilities, his learning, his command of the English language, and his previous experience in Canada. The appointment will not be announced officially until after the meeting of the consistory next October.

PETERBOROUGH STREET RAILWAY SOLD YESTERDAY

The Property Purchased by a Wealthy American Company of Detroit

The Times is authorized to state that the Peterborough Street Railway has been sold to a syndicate of American capitalists, who have their headquarters in Detroit. Negotiations have been going on for some time, and about four o'clock yesterday an agreement was reached.

Mr. Bene, President of the National Construction Company, of Detroit, has been in town for some days carrying on the negotiations for the purchase of the property. The company which he represents is said to be very strong financially, and will at once put the road in first class shape. It is understood that six miles are to be completed this year, which will give connection with the river below the locks and Jackson Park.

The matter of the transfer of the franchise to the new owners will be taken up by the Council in a few days. The Times interviewed Ald. Best in regard to this matter. Mr. Best stated that the present franchise was extended until July 1st only, and it was not the purpose of the Council to renew it without special provisions being made (which is not in the present agreement) to protect the town. The Company will have to keep its roadbed in good shape.

IRISH LEAGUE ORGANIZER ASKS FOR COERCION

O'Sullivan Calls Upon the People of Leinster to Behave so as to Invite Coercion

Special to The Times.

London, April 24.—Speaking at Shannonbridge, King's County, says a telegram from Dublin to the Times, O'Sullivan, the official organizer of the United Irish League, declared that as fighting in the Counties of Munster and Connaught was being proclaimed, Leinster would have to take up the burden of the work. The people of Leinster, said O'Sullivan, would be forever disgraced if in a few months they did not compel the exercise of coercion in that Province.

READY TO SERVE

The 30th Regiment, Guelph, Offer to Go to South Africa

Special to The Times.

Guelph, April 23 — The 30th Wellington rifles, of which Lieut. Colonel Mutrie, M.P.P., is in command, are fired with a desire to go to South Africa. Colonel Mutrie, with the consent of the officers and men, a few days ago forwarded notice to District Commanding Officer Peters, of London, to the effect that he was prepared to muster a regiment comprising 600 officers and men to go to South Africa for active service on short notice. Col. Peters replied promptly stating that he had forwarded the application to the Adjutant General at Ottawa, strongly recommending its acceptance should any more troops be required. The Adjutant General's reply was to the effect that it was possible such an offer might be accepted, and the result would be made known in a few days.

An official of the militia department speaking in reference to the offer said it would not be accepted. No such offer would be accepted for service outside of Canada.

Remodelling Digestive Vigor

Malt Breakfast Food

DOES THE GOOD WORK

A breakfast grain food that can remodel impaired digestion is surely worth trying.

Malt Breakfast Food does this good work in a way that cannot be accomplished by any other breakfast food seeking public recognition.

A noted city physician, an authority on scientific dietetics, recently asserted that the majority of prepared grain foods tended to indigestion and stomach derangements, for the reason that these foods contained too great a quantity of insoluble starch and other elements difficult to digest.

Malt Breakfast Food, partially cooked and digested, is free from insoluble starch and other ingredients that hamper digestion. It has given new digestive vigor to thousands of dyspeptics and banished their troubles. No other grain food is so delicious, appetizing, satisfying and healthful for young and old. Ask your grocer for it.

A RICH FIND

Twelve Thousand Dollars Found in a Buried Box

Brantford, April 24.—A story has reached the city of a remarkable discovery made by a farm hand in the vicinity of Ayr. Omar Beamer, a young man in the employ of A. B. Chisholm, whose farm is about three miles north of Ayr, accidentally unearthed a box while ploughing last Thursday. On being opened the box was found to contain coins to the value of $12,000. The coins are of an English issue. It is stated that the boy received $6,000 as his portion of the discovery. The Courier telegraphed to Ayr but could get no confirmation of the story, which is given for what it is worth.

Winnipeg, April 24. — A private letter, received in the city from South Africa yesterday, says that recently several Canadians, who refused to walk in South Africa, were courtmartialed and sentenced to terms ranging from two to five years' imprisonment. The men were mounted men and declined to become infantry men.

London, April 24.—Belgian papers, says the Brussels correspondent of the Times, no longer accept Leyds as a South African oracle. The statement made by him that the Boer chiefs know that the British terms will not be accepted by the commandoes is regarded as untrustworthy.

The Hague, April 24. — The following bulletin was issued this morning from Castle Loo—

"Queen Wilhelmina had a quiet night. The fall in the morning temperature continues, and the feeling of illness has lessened. The patient is taking sufficient nourishment."

INSURGENTS HAVE CAPITULATED.

Colon, Colombia, April 24.— The German steamer Hercynia, which left this port for Bocas Del Toro several days ago, with reinforcements of Government troops on board, returned here this morning, and announced that Bocas Del Toro, which was captured by the insurgents April 18, was again in possession of the Government. Owing to the timely arrival of the reinforcements on the Hercynia, and a threat of bombardment on the part of the Government gunboat, Gen. Pinzon, the insurgents at Bocas Del Toro capitulated to the Government forces.

FIGHTING THE MOSQUITO.

London, April 24.—The Colonial Office has been approached by the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine with a view of securing increased support for the malaria expedition which is now working in Freetown, Sierra Leone.

Mr. Chamberlain has replied (a Reuter's message says) to the effect that a first expenditure of £400 has been sanctioned for the immediate surface drainage of those parts of Freetown which are most infested by mosquitos.

The leader of the expedition approves of this course, and Mr. Chamberlain's letter is greatly appreciated.

FIRST SHOT AT SEBASTAPOL.

London, April 24. — Another Crimean hero has passed away in the person of Alfred Mathews, of 3 Portland Villas, Southend, who died on Saturday at the age of seventy-eight. He served with the naval brigade throughout the Crimean war, and was captain of the gun which fired the first shot into Sebastopol. Five years ago he was knocked down by a vicious dog and sustained a fractured thigh, from which he never quite recovered. A naval funeral is to be accorded to him on Thursday, next. Mathews was granted a pension in 1869, but his death leaves his widow quite unprovided for.

THIEVES AND THE CORONATION

London, April 24.—In defending a man named Alfred Williams, aged thirty, of no fixed address, who pleaded guilty to a charge of attempting to pick ladies' pockets on omnibuses in Regent street, Mr. Arthur Newton urged that as the prisoner only attempted to steal, but did not obtain anything, a term of three month's imprisonment would meet the justice of the case.

That would be a serious punishment for a thief, added the solicitor, as he would be in prison during the coronation festivities, to which all thieves were eagerly looking forward.

The magistrate, however, sent Williams to the Sessions to be dealt with as an incorrigible rogue.

London, April 24.—The magnitude and intricacy of the work which has had to be done in fitting up the Central Post Office Telephone Exchange in the city, now open, is indicated by the fact that in the switch room 4,720 miles of wire have been used, and two and a half million soldered joints have been made.

In an exhaustive description of the system given in The Times, it is mentioned that the area to be covered by the system is 640 square miles extending from Chipping Barnet and Enfield on the north to Croydon and Redhill on the south, and from Romford, Erith, and Crayford on the east to Harrow, Hanwell and Hounslow on the west.

The Central Exchange in Carter-lane near St. Paul's is nearly the largest in the world, being designed for the use of 14,400 subscribers, as against [illegible] in the Government exchange in Post

LOOK WELL AT THE TONGUE

If Furred and Coated, the Liver Needs Attention

Paine's Celery Compound

THE POPULAR SPRING MEDICINE CURES EVERY FORM OF LIVER TROUBLE

A Victory Over an Insidious Disease After the Failures of Physicians

The liver is the great housekeeper of our health. On its right and proper action depends our enjoyment of life.

One of the commonest indications of a disordered and diseased liver is a nasty tongue—furred and coated. Such a condition is positive proof that the liver is not working well. Other symptoms are as follows: nauseous taste in the mouth, pains under the shoulder blades and in the region of the kidneys. Frequently the mental symptoms of liver troubles are more dangerous than the bodily ills. Sufferers experience mental anguish, gloomy forebodings, melancholy, and a general feeling of disgust with life.

When these bodily and mental troubles are experienced, your liver tells you it needs immediate help. If the proper medicine is not used at once, sickness and death follow.

Paine's Celery Compound is the one great specific for the cure of liver troubles. It always acts gently and effectively on the root of the evils, driving from the system accumulations of morbid poisons that give rise to your suffering. Soon every organ is infused with new life, the skin is fresh and clear, and you enjoy perfect health.

Mrs. G. Durant, of Elma, Ont., cured by Paine's Celery Compound after suffering for years from severe liver troubles, writes thus:

"For many years I have been a sufferer from liver troubles, and have doctored with several physicians, but only found relief for a very short time. My husband advised me to try your Paine's Celery Compound. I did so, and found so much relief from the first bottle that I continued, and am now using the third bottle. Your Compound has done more for me than any physician. For months before using the Compound I never had one night of sound sleep, but now I can go to bed and sleep soundly and naturally, and feel like a new creature in the morning."

The Bobcaygeon Independent says: It is pleasant to find every opinion that has been expressed by this journal on the British military system, stoutly confirmed by Col. Sam Hughes, a gentleman who had an unusual opportunity of sizing up the system in actual service, in Africa, and who is a perfect representative of the Canadian soldier. The Canadian military volunteer, being unfettered by old ideas or regulations, being thoroughly in touch with the conditions of to-day, if given his own officers, is the best soldier in the war, bar none. If Canada acted wisely it would wipe out all connection with the British system and give Col. Sam charge of its militia.

LOCAL NEWS-LETTERS.

APSLEY.

—Seeding is well advanced, some of the farmers being nearly through.

—There is a movement on foot among the villagers to have a survey and plan of this place. It is much needed.

—The main question here at present is not "What's going to be elected?" but "Are you going sucker fishing?" The election must take a back seat until suckers are done running.

—Every available team is pressed into service drawing goods from Lakefield station for the stores, and lumber, stone, etc., for new buildings in course of erection. Tommy is busy at the foundation of his house. Now while so many improvements are going on why not do something towards cleaning up and repairing our cemetery and show a little respect for the dead.

—The ratepayers of S.S. No. 2, Anstruther, want to build a new school in a more central part of the section, but as yet cannot find the centre nor who really belong to the section. The municipal fathers tried to decide the question at a council meeting in South Burleigh, the only result of which was a very heated discussion between two of the parties as to their respective knowledge of school laws and the legality of a private haul on a public document. The other business of the meeting was appointing pathmasters.

—One of our young men went to a dance up north a week or two ago and had the misfortune to lose his hat, but the host kindly loaned him one to wear home, and his own turned up the next week. He has sold out his livery outfit and intended going to Dakota with the view of purchasing some Indian ponies, got as far as Lakefield Tuesday, and arrived in Apsley Wednesday, saying that Lakefield was far enough and did not think those ponies were much, anyway.

Turning Smoke Into Gold.

QUEEN ELIZABETH of England was not a thoroughgoing spinster, for she had so little prejudice against the practice of smoking that she permitted Sir Walter Raleigh his pipe in the royal presence. She was sufficiently a woman, however, to twit him openly on his devotion to the weed, and it was on one of these occasions—so the author of "The Sovereign Herbe" shrewdly surmises—that the knight replied:

"I can assure Your Majesty that I have so well experienced the nature of it that I can tell even the weight of the smoke in any quantity I consume."

"I doubt it much, Sir Walter," replied Elizabeth, holding it was impossible to weigh smoke, and mayhap scenting a joke, "and I will wager you twenty gold angels that you do not solve my doubt."

Gallantly accepting the wager, Raleigh filled his pipe with a weighed quantity of tobacco, smoked it out, and then, weighing the resultant ashes, announced the weight he had smoked away.

"Your Majesty cannot deny that the difference has disappeared in smoke."

"Truly, I cannot," answered the Queen. Ordering the wager to be paid, she turned on the courtiers around her and said: "Many alchemists have I heard of who turned gold into smoke, but Raleigh is the first who has turned smoke into gold."

Selecting Layers.

While in every flock of poultry there are good, bad and indifferent layers, not all poultry-keepers take the trouble to discriminate and set the eggs of only the good layers. The points that distinguish a good from an indifferent layer are the increased activity of the former, and she usually has a small head and extra bright eye, but these latter points want a trained eye to detect. Good layers can be found not only among pure breeds and first crosses, but among the so-called mongrels, but in every case they are the most active in the flock and the hungriest, which is easily explained by the fact that they are often laying when the others are not, and a laying hen is always more eager for food, or at least wants more food, than one not laying. A very good layer seldom, if ever, lays a large egg; it is of medium size only, and for this reason often gets overlooked when eggs are chosen for setting. Some poultry-keepers choose the biggest eggs for this purpose, but the medium sized ones will hatch just as fine chickens as a rule. The eggs of a good layer should always be set, for her progeny are very likely to take after her; a cockerel descended from a good layer is of more value in the breeding-pen than one from a moderate layer only.—C. D. L., in Farm and Home.

Unfertile Eggs.

It is generally best to set several hens at the same time, so that unfertile or addled eggs can be thrown out on the sixth or seventh day, and a redistribution made of the remainder, giving a full supply to each hen as far as they will go, and leaving perhaps one or two birds with none at all. These can be reset again with fresh eggs, and they will be little or none the worse of the extra week's work.

It is always advisable to throw out the useless eggs as soon as their presence can be detected. They are simply taking up space in the nest, and perhaps preventing full justice being done to the others. It is often possible to pick them out on the fifth day, but they can generally be detected with certainty on the seventh. The procedure is extremely simple. Encircle the egg to be tested between the thumb and forefinger, lengthways, and hold up between the eye and a gas jet or candle flame. If it is fertile it will appear to be quite opaque, the air space at the thick end showing clearly against the dark centre; while, if the egg is unfertile, it will show quite clear all over. Such eggs as the latter may at once be thrown out. If the contents seem muddy, and appear to shift as the egg is moved in the hand, very likely it is addled, and may be thrown out also. If there is any doubt as to such an egg, it may be replaced in the nest, and retested a day or two after. Its true condition can then be ascertained with certainty. If such an egg rattles when slightly shaken, it is going rotten fast.—Farmer and Stock Breeder.

Brown Eggs and White Eggs.

Among the many popular fallacies which are prevalent at the present day there is none more common (even to a large extent among educated people) than the belief in the superiority of a brown egg over a white one. It is certainly true that a rich-colored brown egg looks more tempting on the breakfast table than does one of the cream-colored eggs which are most frequently seen. A cream-colored egg in most cases is a stale egg—it is a brown egg that has lost its color to a greater or less extent, and with its color, too, has gone the bloom of freshness which is so characteristic of a new-laid egg. Although, as a rule, the richly-colored brown eggs are first selected at the morning breakfast table, yet at the same time if the white eggs were of that pure white color which is characteristic of the Minorca and Leghorn and the Andalusian—that is to say, if they were always of a pure white color, not a creamy color—I fancy they would be taken up more rapidly. The hotelkeeper who has to display on his breakfast tables a number of eggs would make them look more attractive if he would only place before his guests eggs which are either absolutely white or rich dark-brown intermingled.

But now what is the difference between a brown egg and a white one? Experiments have been tried from time to time with a view to comparing the composition of brown eggs and white eggs, and these experiments have revealed the fact that there is absolutely no difference whatever between a brown egg and a white egg so far as their chemical composition is concerned. It is six of one and half a dozen of the other, and the notion that, because an egg is brown in color, therefore it is richer than one which is white in color, is an absurdity. The same thing applies to the color of the yolk; a dark yolk is no better than a pale yolk so far as nutritive properties are concerned. It is perfectly true that the flavor of yolks varies considerably, but that depends upon the manner in which fowls are fed, and also upon the conditions under which they are kept, and it has no bearing whatever upon the richness or otherwise of the yolks from a dietetic point of view. The reason why some eggs are brown in color while others are white is simply this, that in certain breeds—generally speaking, those which are known as the Asiatic breeds—the carbonate of lime which is deposited through their blood to form the egg shell is pink-colored, whereas in other breeds it is white, and wherever Asiatic blood is present the egg color is dark proportionately—that is to say, that a fowl with only a tincture of Asiatic blood in its veins will lay a slightly tinted egg, whereas one that has more Asiatic blood in her veins will lay a darker egg, and so on. That is not an absolutely fixed rule, but that is the drift of it. The color of the eggs a hen lays depends really upon her pedigree. The same principle applies to the color of the yolk. The color of the yolk is due to a pigment, and is dependent, as I have already said, upon the feeding and general conditions of living, and to some extent upon the hereditary tendency also.

Farmers would find it advantageous (as I have several times previously said in these columns) to aim at producing very white and very dark brown eggs—in preference to the indefinite assortment of colors we usually see in an egg basket. The appearance is so much better.—W. M. Freeman, in Farm and Home.

A Smart Salesman.

Jeweler (to new boy)—Did you sell anything while I was out, Johnny?

"Yes, sir. I sold six plain gold rings."

"Good, my boy," said the jeweler, highly pleased. "We'll make a first-class salesman of you one of these days. You got the regular price, of course?"

"Oh, yes, sir. The price was marked on the inside, 18k., and the gentleman took all that was left, sir."—N.Y. "Life."

Lord Chas. Beresford

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, who has been on duty in the Mediterranean for some time, is without doubt the most popular man in the British navy. He has recently returned to England, and the newspapers are conjecturing whether he will re-enter Parliament or accept a higher post in the navy. His ability is not estimated to be inferior to his popularity, and there is probably no post associated with the navy for which he would be regarded as unequal. He represents, above all things, the gospel of efficiency, which is being preached just now, and with ample need, judging from the remount scandal, and if in Parliament would do much to insure the maintenance of the navy at the highest practicable standard. The popular sailor celebrated his 56th birthday on February 10th.

A Defence of Canada.

"The title of 'Our Lady of the Snows,'" says the Scottish writer, "bestowed on Canada in a haphazard sort of manner by Rudyard Kipling, is not at all a happy one, as it applies to a season only. I have seen the grapes hanging in luxuriant bunches to the vines in a Quebec garden, and the fields of tomatoes grow crimson in the warm sunshine; I have lingered in the golden wheatfields in the evening, and listened to the myriad sounds of the cricket and grasshopper; I have walked amid the cedar trees in an Ontario swamp when the sunset glow had faded, and watched the fireflies darting to and fro like shooting stars; and I have watched the tiny humming-bird, with plumage that rivalled the gaily-painted butterflies, contesting with the bee for the honey that lay within the sweet-smelling flowers. Scenes like these are not associated with a land of never-ending winter. Consequently there can be no greater mistake than to imagine, as too many pople do, that Canada is a semi-Arctic country out of which little good can come. And yet, what do we find? According to the returns of the Board of Trade fully 65,000 to 75,000 Britishers went to live in the United States during the past year, while only 12,000 or 13,000 went to Canada. There is no reason to doubt that if the resources and natural wealth of the Dominion of Canada were more generally known in this country, we would soon hear the last of the term "American" as applied to Canadian products, and United States producers would no longer receive the credit for Canadian goods, in many cases superior to their own. Those who guide the destinies of the Dominion think that the Stars and Stripes have overshadowed the Maple Leaf long enough. Every true Briton will be of the same opinion."

Where He Belonged.

The visit of Prince Henry of Prussia to the United States is naturally causing the telling over of some of the countless anecdotes of which the aged Kaiser Wilhelm, grandfather of Emperor Wilhelm and his brother, was the central figure. The following is one of the prettiest I have seen:—

In his later years the aged Kaiser took great pleasure in visiting the schools and catechising the children. At one time while in the City of Ems he visited an orphan school that was in the city, and under Government patronage.

After listening for an hour or more to the recitations of several of the classes, the Kaiser called to the front a bright, golden-haired little girl seven or eight years of age, and, lifting her into his lap, said to her:

"Now, then, my little fraulein, let me see if you can answer me three hard questions." And taking an orange out of his pocket he held it up. "To what kingdom does this belong?" he asked.

The little girl hesitated a moment and then said timidly: "To the vegetable kingdom."

"Right, my little fraulein," said the Kaiser. "And, now, to what kingdom does this belong?" The Kaiser drew a gold-piece out of his pocket and placed it beside the orange.

More confident this time, the little girl replied: "To the mineral kingdom."

"Better and better," said the Kaiser. "Now, look at me and tell me to what kingdom do I belong."

The little girl was confused. Dare she say "the animal kingdom"? All the teachers and pupils looked at her with breathless expectancy. But in a moment she glanced up brightly into the face of the kind old Kaiser, and said: "To the kingdom of heaven."

This unexpected answer drew tears from the eyes of the Kaiser. "Yes, yes, my child," said he, "I trust that I do belong to the kingdom of heaven; and the day is not far distant when I shall go there, my little fraulein."

Then, kissing the little girl, he presented her with the gold piece and the orange, and brought his visit to a close.

A Slanderer of the British.

The Berlin correspondent of The Standard says that further evidence has come to light of the methods employed to stir up anti-British feeling in Germany. The history of the man Kaulitz or Farlow, who at the outbreak of the Boer war founded the "London cable correspondence" for supplying the continental press with alleged war news, which was "made in London," has been traced by The Kolnische Zeitung. The Kolnische quotes from a provincial paper a list of this man's misdeeds. He was born at Brunswick, became a Social Democrat at Leipsic in the seventies, and was afterwards, it is said, sentenced to two and a half years' imprisonment for inciting the workmen in the Saar district by articles in his paper. Later on he became Johann Most's partner in London and was on the staff of his paper. After giving a few further facts about the man's career The Kolnische says:—"This honorable gentleman has now been unmasked, but, unfortunately, too late, for the lies about the atrocities of English Lancers at Elandslaagte, outrages on helpless Boer women and girls, etc., continue to be freely circulated, and whoever attempts to disprove them is suspected and insulted for being an English hireling."

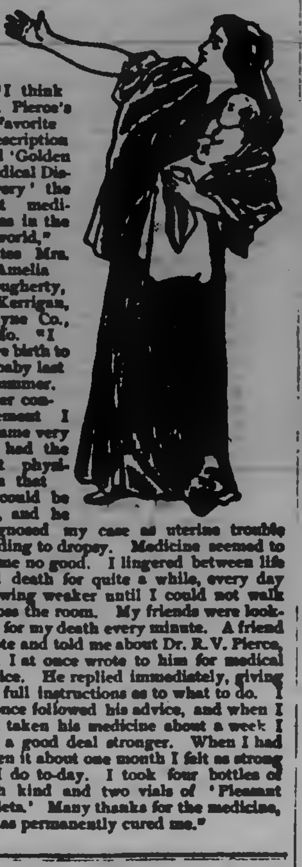
On a Dog.

"They're thinking now of reversing the usual process, and first trying plays in New York before taking them out on the road." "What's the idea?" "Well, if a play succeeds in New York, the rest of the country will know it's rotten."—"Life."

A Matter of Contrast.

"Give an example of how heat expands and cold contracts." "In the summer the days are long; in the winter they are short."—"Judge."

"I lingered between life and death."



"I think Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' the best medicines in the world," writes Mrs. Amelia Dougherty, of Kerrigan, Wayne Co., Mo. "I gave birth to a baby last summer. After confinement I became very ill, had the best physician that could be got, and he diagnosed my case as uterine trouble tending to dropsy. Medicine seemed to do me no good. I lingered between life and death for quite a while, every day growing weaker until I could not walk across the room. My friends were looking for my death every minute. A friend wrote and told me about Dr. R. V. Pierce, and I at once wrote to him for medical advice. He replied immediately, giving me full instructions as to what to do. I at once followed his advice, and when I had taken his medicine about a week I felt a good deal stronger. When I had taken it about one month I felt as strong as I do to-day. I took four bottles of each kind and two vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.' Many thanks for the medicine, It has permanently cured me."

A Prophecy Fulfilled.

ON no less authority than that of Mr. Justin McCarthy it is stated that, with the exception of the King of Sweden, a descendant of Bernadotte, whom Napoleon raised from the ranks and later made king, there is not a single important ruler in Europe who is not descended from Mary, Queen of Scots. In "Macbeth," which was evidently written with the idea of courting the favor of James I., the first Stuart ruler of England, Shakespeare puts into the mouth of the witches this prophecy to Banquo, from whom the Stuarts are by legend descended: "Your children shall be kings." Even the most obsequious of courtiers could not have anticipated how literally true this compliment to the Stuarts through King James was to prove. It is certainly a curious historical fact that the dynasty of the Stuarts, "in many ways the worst dynasty," as Mr. McCarthy says, "that ever ruled over England," should have left so many descendants among the reigning houses of Europe.

Meantime there is for the student of medical anthropology the spectacle of a series of inbreeding intermarriages that demonstrates the dangers and effects of marital consanguinity. Perhaps the lesson of the necessity for exercising more care as regards the relationship and other qualities of marital partners may thus be taught by example, if it cannot be enforced by the legal measures that are now so commonly suggested. In a word, the history of the present reigning families of Europe is an open book in which he who runs may read the evils of marriage where new blood is not constantly introduced to modify the degenerative tendencies of the original stock. The lesson may be learned better from a "horrible example" than from the cold logic of statistics on the subject.

Faith and Works.

A piece of bright class-room repartee comes from a Western college. The professor had been annoyed by the tardy entrance of a student into the lecture-room, and pointedly stopped talking until the man took his seat.

After class the student went to the desk and apologized.

"My watch was fifteen minutes out of the way, sir. It's bothered me a good deal lately, but after this I shall put no more faith in it."

"It's not faith you want in it," replied the professor; "it's works."

Proof Positive.

A convict at a French penal settlement, who was undergoing a life sentence, desired to marry a female convict, such marriages being of common occurrence. The governor of the colony offered no objection, but the priest proceeded to cross-examine the prisoner.

"Did you not marry in France?" he asked.

"Yes."

"And your wife is dead?"

"She is."

"Have you any document to show that she is dead?"

"No."

"Then I must decline to marry you. You must produce some proof that your wife is dead."

There was a pause, and the bride prospective looked at the would-be groom.

Finally he said: "I can prove that my former wife is dead."

"How will you do so?"

"I was sent here for killing her."

The bride accepted him notwithstanding.—"Tougner."

Mrs. or Miss?

JUST as a sort of New Year's card, the Woman's Suffrage Society of Paris have issued a manifesto contending that, as woman in her maiden name accomplishes all the duties of a citizen, she does prejudice to her interests by sinking her identity and towing her individuality in adopting the name of her husband when she marries. Consequently, it seems on the tapis that in future, when Miss Smith marries Mr. Brown, she will still retain her maiden patronymic of Smith. Being married, she must of necessity be Mrs.; therefore, if she retains her maiden name of Smith, we shall have the weird anomaly of Mr. Brown and Mrs. Smith as man and wife. Now, supposing Mrs. Smith, otherwise Mrs. Brown, should, by any unforeseen event, meet with a Mr. Smith in the absence of her husband, and it should go forth to the world—in a hotel visitors' book, for instance—that they were actually Mr. and Mrs. Smith, where the dickens, in the event of trouble, would Mr. Brown come in? Mr. Brown might swear by all that was holy that Mrs. Smith was Mrs. Brown, but if Mr. Smith swore that she was Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Smith did not stoop to deny it, what jury outside a lunatic asylum could convict Mrs. Smith of playing fast and loose with Mr. Brown? It is a complex problem, to say the least of it; but if the Woman's Suffrage Society of gay Paree are not content to let well alone, I suppose they must put up with the consequences.

A Girl's Daring Feat.

IT seems hardly possible that a girl of sixteen should save nearly fifty people from a terrible death. Yet that is what Grace Bassell did, who may well be called the Grace Darling of Australia. It happened one day in December that a vessel was wrecked off the coast of Australia, a few miles from the Bassell home. The lifeboat on board the steamer was lowered, but it capsized and the eight people in it were drowned. So the rest of the crew clung to the sinking steamer. The surf ran so wildly that no one could dare swim through it, and there was not a house or person in sight. The girl, who was a splendid horsewoman, was riding along with a native servant. She caught sight of the vessel in distress; turning her horse's head toward the coast, she started him on a quick gallop. When she reached the sea she urged her horse into the angry surf. She rode boldly on till she reached the vessel. With great difficulty she took some of the children in her arms and put them before her on the saddle; then, with bigger children and women clinging to her dress, she started for the shore, gave those she had rescued to the care of her servant, and returned again to the wreck. So she went backward and forward for four hours, till all were safe on land, the servant having ridden to bring out the last man.—"Leslie's Weekly."

Humor of the Hour.

"Night falls, but it doesn't break," observed the Simple Mug.

"What of it?" queried the Wise Guy.

"At Plevna, Kan.," says The Kansas City Journal, "A 'joint' keeper cornered the Rev. W. H. 'All right,' responded the parson, cheerfully, and two minutes later the friends of the 'joint' keeper were taking him down to the butcher shop for the application of beefsteak to a pair of beautiful black eyes. There was a mass meeting the other day of the residents of Cleator Moor, a district of London, in favor of a Sunday delivery of letters for the district. One of the speakers opposed to the measure was the vicar of the parish, who said: "I am here in the name of God Almighty, and those who oppose me oppose Him." This statement seemed to settle the question, for a resolution in favor of Sunday delivery was at once carried by an overwhelming majority.

The World Lost for Love's Sake

that instant the count stepped forth from his place of concealment.

"Are we alone?" he whispered, glancing furtively about him.

Alone! Yes, she was alone with him, heaven help her. She realized that fact all too bitterly, but she dared make no outcry.

"I am glad of the opportunity to speak with you upon a very important subject," he went on with a little mellow laugh. "I hope I have your full attention, madame?"

"Say what you have to say quickly," cried Daisy, springing to her feet, fairly trembling with scorn and loathing. "You pollute the air I breathe, I—— Oh, I could kill you, I hate you so!"

"It is not the first sin that would be laid at madame's door," he declared with another laugh, for which Daisy could have annihilated him.

"Time is valuable. It is necessary that I should humor madame by speaking quickly, and I will do so. I am much in love with madame's charming sister, Miss Olive. In love for the first time in my life, and for the first time in life the thought of marriage has entered my heart. Olive must be mine, and I shall depend upon madame to use her influence in my behalf."

White with passion, Daisy sprung to her feet.

"How dare you insult me so!" she cried. "How dare you mention my beautiful sister in the same breath with yourself! You aspire to her hand— you, a villain, a scoundrel, a robber!"

"I do indeed do myself that honor," returned the count, complacently.

"I would rather see her lying dead in her coffin, declared Daisy. "No, never dare to speak to her again!"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"Madame does not frighten me by her anger," he said. "I expected it. If you would be happy in your love, you must help me to be happy with mine. Olive must be my wife, and that, too, within a month; for I shall be a hasty wooer, or—— Ah, well, you can imagine what would happen if she should refuse me. I would cut her pride down, level to the very dust through you."

"Are you human, or are you a monster?" gasped Daisy, in agony too deep for words. "Ah, heaven, you must be a fiend incarnate to torture me so."

"I am only very human, I assure madame; giving myself up to a love dream after seeing as much of the world as I have seen, proves it," he replied. "It is quite unnecessary to argue the point with you; we understand each other, I hope."

No answer fell from Daisy's stiff, cold lips —she had endured so much she quite believed no more trouble could come to her.

It was over an hour after the grand ball broke up that Mrs. Dillingham discovered the loss of her diamonds, then in a single instant the mansion was in a state of the greatest confusion.

Messengers were dispatched to police headquarters without delay, asking that the most expert detectives that could be procured be sent them at once.

This was done. Mr. Lane listened attentively to every minute detail which might have the least bearing on the case, even to the hostess describing how she had left her friend, young Mrs. Hamilton, alone in her boudoir, dismissing her maid that her friend might be induced to rest—she looked so strangely pale — and how she had laughingly told her she would leave her to guard her diamonds, which were in an adjoining room.

Mr. Lane made note of this point particularly, examined the premises minutely, took a list of the guests who had been at the ball, then left the mansion.

"Well," said the chief, when Mr. Lane walked into his private office, "you've been carefully over the ground, I suppose; what luck? Did you find any clew?"

"The best kind of a clew," returned Mr. Lane.

"Is it a man or a woman whom you suspect?" inquired the chief.

"A woman," returned Mr. Lane, "and a young and beautiful one, who moves in the best society."

"I hope you are on the right track," remarked the chief; "mistakes are unpleasant in such cases."

"It is not this little beauty's first attempt," continued Mr. Lane, "she was brought to my notice a few days since, and in a peculiar manner. I was strolling down the avenue one afternoon when a coupe, drawn by a pair of prancing horses, dashed suddenly up the street, halting within a few feet of me, and from the vehicle descended a woman heavily veiled and all alone.

"'Wait here for me until I return,' she said to the driver, and hurried rapidly around the nearest corner. Of course I followed, believing there was something wrong.

"After glancing furtively about I saw her enter Levy's pawnshop.

"Here is something to trail, I said to myself, quickening my pace and hurrying after her. Well, the result was, the beauty— for she was beautiful as a poet's dream — my keen eyes discerned that even through the thickness of the dark veil— left with the pawnbroker a quantity of valuable diamonds on which she raised a thousand dollars, and she had the real stones replaced with pastes. I followed her home and found out who she was. The knowledge shocked me a little I must confess. I have been quietly watching to hear from that affair, but nothing has come to light."

"This woman's name?" said the chief.

Mr. Lane leaned forward and whispered a name in his ear that startled him —shocked him.

"You must be mistaken, Lane!" he cried. "The thing is impossible. Why she is as innocent a creature as the sun ever shone on. She couldn't do such a thing."

"With all due respect to your opinion, chief, I insist that the clew is the right one. You know as well as I do myself it is always these young, innocent-appearing ones that are the greatest sinners. Why, look closely in her face and you will see a story written there. The hurried sound of a strange footstep startles her. Peer keenly in her face, and her eyes will fall before your gaze, and you can read terror and guilt there."

The chief looked really distressed.

Farm Butter Making.

At the recent convention of the Illinois Dairy Association W. R. Hostetter, one of the leading dairymen of Illinois, discussed butter making on the farm, and pointed out that the comparatively low grade of farm butter was due to the lack of conveniences and to the small quantity made. He is convinced, however, that good butter can be made on the farm, and in order to do this the dairy house and the surroundings must have excellent drainage and must be so constructed as to get the maximum amount of sunshine. He advises getting the very best tinware for dairy purposes, as it is so much easier to keep good utensils clean. Never buy cheap cans, pails or strainers.

Get a good separator, and use some kind of power for running it, as it is exceedingly difficult to maintain a uniform speed when turning by hand. He has no set temperature for cooling cream and churning, as so much depends on weather, the dairy house, etc. As a general rule, he likes to ripen his cream at a high temperature and to churn at as low a temperature as possible. He usually churns at 55 degrees in winter and 40 to 45 degrees in summer. The churn must be stopped at just the right time, or when the butter granules are about the size of a grain of wheat. He adds a little salt just before washing. The amount of salt to be used depends upon the taste of the customers. He believes it is advisable to try to get customers to use fresh butter, so that it can be delivered once or twice a week. Formerly he had customers who wanted him to pack butter in the winter for next summer's use. Gradually they have all abandoned the practice. He advises putting up butter in neat packages, as this will do much toward making sales.—Dairy World.

Profit in Pigs.

One cannot hope to make swine a profitable farm product unless he goes permanently into the business. Too many who try to make money from swine find it unprofitable one year, and abandon it, or because after two years of fair success the third season proves unsatisfactory, they conclude that the best days for the business have passed, and they try their hand at something else. My experience has always been that swine breeding requires more persistent and continuous work than most other lines of farming. As a continuous business, carried on, not one or two or three years, but ten, fifteen and twenty years, it has no superior, and the man who pursues it thus will get his sure reward. Each succeeding year we learn more about the work, and find out where we made mistakes, and where we could have made improvements. We become so familiar with the whole subject that we are competent judges as to whether we should raise this or that breed. We also grow accustomed to anticipating the markets, which is a great thing in these days of fluctuations. Then, too, we learn how best to feed the animals—how to get the most from every ton of feed, grass or hay.

If one is going into swine breeding for a continuous industry, he can then well afford to start out with the best bred animals he can afford, and by an intelligent system of selections and breeding, he will in time grade up his flock to a standard of excellence which his neighbor cannot equal except at great cost. When a man starts in each year or two to purchase new breeds and high-bred swine, it is a costly experience, and he hardly reaps much reward from it. There is quite a difference, however, when he deliberately adds each year a little new blood to his stock, increasing the quality as well as the quantity. The outlay is thus small each season for pure-bred animals, and the returns correspondingly good.

Likewise in regard to food, it requires a policy of continuous farming along certain lines which will enable one to look years ahead. The grass, forage and grain crops that can be planned for an intelligent rotation system will all help toward the same general end. The cost of feeding will thus up to a certain point be steadily reduced. One finds good pasture fields established in the course of time, land made rich and fertile for corn and grain through a rotation of crops, and hay and forage crops prepared ahead of time for each winter. In the course of time the work becomes almost automatic, and the swine produce profits on the average from year to year that must prove satisfactory.—E. P. Smith, in American Cultivator.

Medium Horses for the Farm.

What would a pair of these 1,800 to 2,200 pound horses do on a plough or harrow in the spring, when their feet sank in the mud almost as deep as the plough? They might not feel the weight of the plough, but they would feel their own weight before night. With a pair of the little Vermont Morgans, the two of them not as heavy as one of those big fellows, we could draw a heavier load through a miry place or a snowdrift than we ever saw a pair of those big ones draw in a bad place.

And when on the road they could trot eight or ten miles an hour or walk four or five miles on a dirt road, not for one hour only, but for five or six hours a day for as many days as there are in the week, and that not in a rubbed-tired sulky, but a good, honestly made farm waggon with from two to four persons in it.

That is the kind of horses that used to be bred in Vermont, and some of them, not quite as compactly built, in Maine, and some of them, a little coarser built, came here from Canada, with legs about as large and hairy as the Clydes. None of them ever got spavins or crooked knees or tender feet, if they had decent usage, for they did not go down the street, as if they had taken a contract to pound down the paving stones.

The breed of these horses cannot be entirely exhausted. There must be some farmers who have good brood mares yet, and there may be a few stallions that have the Morgan blood in them. If such can be bred, we venture a prediction that in five years they will be in demand, and in ten years more popular on our New England farms and hilly roads than the heaviest western-bred horse that may be offered at the sale stables in the city. Do not make the mistake of trying to put too much weight into them by trying to breed from the heavy stallions, nor too long legs on them in the hope to get the two-minute horse; but try to get a good, honest, well-built horse of 1,000 to 1,100 pounds, with the disposition of a lamb, the willingness of the ox and the endurance of the mule.

To Detect Bad Notes.

There will be no doubt an unusually large number of visitors in England this summer in connection with the coronation festivities. The recent announcement that several hundred £5 notes have been lately stopped by the Bank of England and other London banks will be specially interesting to them, and may cause some feelings of apprehension, for the visitor, unused to handling the English money, is naturally more easily victimized than those accustomed to it. The Daily Express gives some interesting information as to how you may tell whether your £5 notes are genuine or forged.

Chief cashiers in banks can tell at a glance, for in the freemasonry of the profession they have learned some of the secret marks by which the Bank of England absolutely safeguards itself against deception.

The whole of the secret marks, some dozen in all, are only known to the man whose signature appears on each note.

The best test for the average man to apply in the rough and ready one of looking at the water-mark. If that is very plain, when held up to the light or laid down on a table, you may be pretty certain that your fiver is genuine.

The water-mark of the Bank of England is one of those things that no forger has yet been able to imitate successfully.

Now for the forged notes. If you would detect them look out for any of the following defects, which were discovered after long examination by the chief cashier of a West End business house:—

(1) The water-mark is very light, and not made in the note.

(2) The paper is slightly greasy to the touch.

(3) The printing is lighter; the ink not as black as it should be. This is particularly noticeable in the medallion of Britannia in the top left-hand corner.

(4) The top and bottom of the note are very ragged, as if carried in the pocket, and nicked as if torn away, while the sides are quite clean cut.

"I had never handled a forged Bank of England note," said this cashier, "until this came into my possession, and I naturally examined it very carefully.

"I understand that the notes have different dates and numbers, making their detection more difficult, and I should say that the dates were added after the body of the note had been printed."

From the head of a large banking concern in the city The Express representative received an opinion regarding the forged notes closely corresponding with the one given above. He was of opinion that the note might best be detected by three of its features:—

(1) Not quite so crisp as the genuine note.

(2) Faint water-mark.

(3) Faulty engraving and printing of the Britannia medal.

Forgers of bank notes have always two prime difficulties to contend with—to imitate the water-mark, and to get the notes in circulation.

The Duke of Gloucester.

The proposal to revive the old English title of Duke of Gloucester has set newspaper writers at work, hunting up the records of former bearers of the title, which appear to be mournful enough to give it an aspect of ill-omen even in the present materialistic age. The title was last revived by George I., who created his grandson, Frederick Lewis, Duke of Gloucester in 1714. This Prince was not, if his father, George II., may be believed, an ornament to the Peerage. "My dear firstborn," said that unamiable Sovereign, "is the greatest ass and the greatest liar and the greatest canaille and the greatest beast in the whole world, and I heartily wish he was out of it." His unhappy relations with his parents were a public scandal, but a fairer estimate of his character is that given by Horace Walpole. "His best quality was generosity, his worst insincerity, and indifference to truth, which appeared so early that Earl Stanhope wrote to Lord Sunderland what I shall conclude his character with:—'He has his father's head and his mother's heart.' His character with the people is probably best summed up in the lines beginning

 Here lies Fred,
 Who was alive and is dead.

and ending with

 There's no more to be said."

The title became dormant again in 1834, when the second Duke of this creation, third son of "Fred," died without children. If the story of the present revival has any basis, the title is presumably intended for one of the young sons of the Prince of Wales.

Helping Reciprocity Along.

Force of circumstances is compelling us to reckon with western Canada. The Journal has often spoken of the great agricultural resources of that region, and has predicted that within ten years it will be the greatest hard wheat raising region in the world. The enormous crop raised there last year and bound for the export market, almost entirely, has called the attention of Minneapolis grain men and millers to the importance of Canadian competition. Canadian wheat is now selling so cheaply abroad that the Minneapolis export flour trade is in danger of suffering thereby, as foreign millers can buy Canadian wheat and undersell the Minneapolis exporters.

To remedy partially this unfortunate state of affairs the local millers are thinking of buying Canadian wheat and milling it in bond for their export trade. If they do this they will be able to meet the foreign millers on equal terms as to the price of Canadian wheat, since the duty on Canadian wheat will be refunded when the flour made from it is exported. So, then, we are already confronted with the desirability of using Canadian wheat in the manufacture of flour designed for export. The time is approaching when we shall need it for flour intended for domestic consumption. Already, regardless of the tariff, it is competing with American wheat and forcing down the price of the latter. If the tariff on wheat were taken off and Canadian wheat were merged in American wheat in the markets, the chances are that it would affect the price less than now.

Truly, the development of the Canadian west is making the question of reciprocity with Canada a very live one for the people of the American northwest.—Minneapolis Journal.

For Farmers.

The fact that last year some crop did not bring good prices is often an indication that this year prices may be high, for the reason that such a crop is liable to be discarded this season for something else. A successful fruit grower once stated that whenever he found his neighbors discarding a crop he invariably selected it for himself, as he expected a scarcity of the crop in market by reason of less land being devoted to it.

In the Jaws of the Fire.

THE risks that firemen take are an everlasting wonder, even though almost every paper contains stories of their bravery. But the man behind the fire-engine—apparently he has only to keep his machine going, and is as safe as the man who pulls the lever of an upright "donkey." The story of Bill Brown, as told by Mr. Cleveland Moffett in "Careers of Daring and Danger," shows that the engineer's bravery is sometimes put to tests as severe as those which the hoseman or the ladderman even has to endure.

What happened was this: Engine 20, pumping her prettiest, stood at the corner so near the drug house that the driver thought it wasn't safe for the horses, and led them away. That left Brown alone, against the cheek of the fire, watching his boiler and keeping his steam-gage at seventy-five.

As the fire gained, chunks of red-hot sandstone began to smash down on the engine. Brown ran his pressure up to eighty, and watched the door anxiously where the four firemen from his squad had gone into the furnace.

Then an explosion of chemicals in the building sent a flame wide as a house curling across the street, enwrapping engine and man, and setting fire to the elevated railway station overhead. Bill Brown stood by his engine with a sheet of fire above him. He heard footsteps on the pavement and voices that grew fainter, crying, "Run for your lives!" He was alone, and the skin on his hands, face and neck was blistered.

Brown knew why everyone was running. There would be another explosion. It was tolerably certain that he must die if he stayed. But his four chums were in the fire and needed the water. If he quit his engine the water would fail.

He stoked in coal and ran the gage up another notch, easing the running parts with the oiler. He was offering his life for his friends.

In a few minutes the four firemen came out of the building. Then Bill Brown ran for his life with his comrades. A second or two later Engine 20 was crushed by the falling walls.

Afraid to Repeat the Dose.

A local clergyman was engaged in conversation with a number of friends the other day, says the Duluth "News Tribune," when each started telling stories of weddings he had performed. One of the party had this to offer:

Some time ago a great big fellow, roughly dressed, and a wee mite of a young woman came to him. They had no witnesses, and, in fact, did not care to have any. Nevertheless a bridesmaid and groomsman were selected from the household, and the ceremony began. They had promised to love and obey and all the rest of the service, when the preacher announced: "Kiss the bride."

The groom, on bended knee, hesitated a little, tried to say something and couldn't.

"Kiss the bride," said the pastor.

"Why, parson, I did, afore I come here at all," replied the groom, whose face had taken the color of a June rose.

The snow pile is frozen. You slip!

 It has thawed, don't you know.

And you are drowned.

Cover Crops and Fertilizers.

Prof. I. P. Roberts of Cornell University says:—Cover crops may in a measure take the place of fertilizers and manures. They are not, however, a universal panacea for all soil deficiencies, neither are they a full substitute in all cases for fertilizers. There is always a wide field for the profitable use of one or all of the concentrated forms of fertilizers named, and in many cases there is also a special place for the use of fertilizers, therefore the more need of honest goods. Commercial fertilizers furnish available plant food, but no humus. The cover crop furnishes both, but it is only fair to say that the plant foods in the former are more available than in the latter. Cover crops improve the physical condition of the soil, lessening the cost of tillage. Physically, fertilizers benefit the soil little or none. The humus furnished by the cover crops increases the availability of the plant food already in the soil; fertilizers do not. Cover crops shade the land and conserve moisture.

It is impossible to accurately compare the cost of fertilizers with the cost of seeds for the cover crops and the preparation of the soil for them. The cost of increasing productively by extra tillage, by the use of fertilizers, by cover crops or by all three means, can only be determined in each case by the farmer interested. "I give below a single illustration of what a cover crop contains, knowing that another cover crop under other conditions might either be more or less valuable. Second growth of clover, furnished in roots and tops per acre the following:—Nitrogen, 138.86 lbs.; phosphoric acid, 67.36 lbs.; potash, 109.96 lbs. There is removed by 25 bushels of wheat and accompanying straw, nitrogen, 42 lbs.; phosphoric acid, 20 lbs., and potash, 27 lbs. It is believed that most of the nitrogen taken up by legumes is secured from the uncombined nitrogen in the atmosphere. The clover did not add to either the store of phosphoric acid or potash. The plant took them from the soil and made them available.

The hospitality of Scotland is quite as well established as the hospitality of Ireland, but the meanness of the Scot, which has passed into a proverb, is likely to assert itself at any stage. As The Scotsman tells this story, it cannot be suspected of proving false to its own countrymen:—

An Irish friend insisted that a Scotchman should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last cigar.

"Now, look here," said the man from Dunedin, "ye've been keepin' me at yer hoose for a month, an' payin' for a' the amusements and cabs and so on—I tell you I'll not stand it—ye mun let me have a toss for this one!"

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

—The farmers' pic-nic will probably take place down the river this year, and will be under the auspices of the Farmers' Institutes of East and West Peterboro, and East Northumberland.

—The work on the new government dam at the locks, has been entirely discontinued until about the first of July, when the water will have fallen sufficient to allow the work to proceed.

—Lindsay Post,—Mr. Jas. Grace, secretary of the Toronto Street Railway, is spending a few days with his father in town. Mr. Grace was one of the lucky investors in Dominion Steel shares, and cleaned up the snug sum of $10,000.

—When you want the best quality of photos taken go to Whiten's, you get the best there. If you want the best quality in crayon work, take your small pictures to Whiten, 166 Hunter St. west

—Mr. Harvey Hartley, who goes to South Africa with the Fourth Contingent, was given a hearty farewell by the Special Bible Club at the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday evening when he was presented with a neat morocco-bound testament. Mr Hartley suitably acknowledged the gift.

—The Deering Co., of Chicago, who were dickering with our civic authorities for a suitable sight for their Canadian Works which they propose to establish at an early date, are likely to select Hamilton as their Canadian home. A bonus of $50,000 is proposed.

—Mr. Carnegie must have turned down Belleville's request for a library. The Daily Ontario says,—A Toronto preacher complained of the increase of beggars. Why blame individuals for doing what municipalities have done at Mr. Carnegie's door? Begging has become somewhat of a national characteristic.

—A meeting has been called of the representatives of the Farmers Institutes of East and West Peterborough and of East Northumberland, and the local steam boat men, to make arrangements for holding the annual farmers pic-nic at Jubilee Point this year. The meeting will be held on Saturday next.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. J. H. Brandon was in town yesterday on business.

—Miss Staunton, trained nurse, who has been engaged on a case in Lindsay, has returned to town.

—The many friends of Mr. John Borradale, who is confined in the Nicholls Hospital with diptheria, will be pleased to learn that he is improving.

—Our talented local artists, the Misses Hurley, furnished the music on Monday evening for a dance given by the Lindsay Ping Pong Club.

—Dr. Beattie, of Cobourg, formerly of Peterborough, is in town for a few days. He is being greeted by his many friends, who are all pleased to see him looking so well after his serious sickness.

—Dr. Moher has removed to his new quarters, which have been fitted up very conveniently in the old Grand Central block, George-st., opposite the Opera House. Entrance by the main staircase, George street.

—Messrs. Geo. Dawson, Gilbert Scott and J. Girard left last night for Sydney, Cape Breton, to assume positions there. These young men will be greatly missed by their many friends, who, however, will wish them a large share of success.

Presented with a Ring and Purse

Mr. Walter Hudson, was made the recipient of a valuable ring, presented to him by the members of the 57th Band, and a purse of $50 from the C. G. E. works before his departure to South Africa last night.

Commercial Printing

Everything in the shape of spring announcement cards, folders, and fancy circulars can be obtained at the Times job rooms. Also a complete line of commercial stationery, visiting cards, etc. at the lowest prices. Workmanship unexcelled.

Recruiting Yesterday

Two additional men were sworn in yesterday afternoon at the Armories,—

Pte. E. A. Pengelley and Pte. W. C. Inkster.

Orders were received late yesterday afternoon to take no more men as the number required had been received.

Obituary

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Goheen, 234 Rubidge street, deeply sympathize with them in the death of their darling little three-year old daughter, which occurred on Monday night. The little one was an exceedingly bright and clever child, and greatly beloved.

Permanent Cure for Neuralgia

Experienced sufferers state that no remedy relieves neuralgia so quickly as a hot application of Polson's Nerviline, the strongest liniment made. Nerviline is certainly very penetrating and has a powerful influence over neuralgic pains, which it destroys almost at once. Nerviline is highly recommended for rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica and toothache. Better try a 25c. bottle, it's all right.

No Pills like Dr. Hamilton's.

A Vicious Dog

On Tuesday evening a little three year old boy—a nephew of Mr. T. M. Hunter of North Monaghan, was badly bitten by a dog belonging to his uncle. The child's face was terribly lacerated, the nose being almost torn off the child's face, and the head and neck badly bitten. The child was brought to town and had to be chloroformed while the injuries were dressed. The dog was at once shot.

Three Centuries of Plowing

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in this issue of the Wonder Plow Company, of London Ontario. We believe that nothing to equal it has ever been invented. As labor-saver it is a marvel, and no farmer should be without one. When the plow is adjusted there is no need of holding the plow handles. Read the advertisement, and write the company for prices.

A NORTH MONAGHAN WEDDING

Nuptials of Miss Ida Barnard and Mr. John W. Arthur

The Charlotte Street Methodist parsonage was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, 9th instant, when Miss Ida Barnard, youngest daughter of Mr. Joseph Barnard, North Monaghan, was united in marriage to Mr. John W. Arthur, of Haldimand, the ceremony being performed by Rev. D. O. Crossley. The bride looked charming in a costume of a beautiful grey and was assisted by Miss Maggie Arthur sister of the groom, who was prettily gowned. The bride and the bridesmaid carried bouquets of white and pink carnations. The groom was assisted by his cousin, Mr. H. A. Sherwin. After the ceremony the happy couple drove to the residence of the bride's parents where they partook of a sumptuous wedding dinner, after which they left on the early morning train for Galt, Toronto and other western points, and on their return they will take up their residence at No. 146 Park street town. The bride was the recipient of a number of beautiful and costly presents, showing the high esteem in which the young couple were held. Among the presents was a handsome cheque from Mr and Mrs Samuel Ward, Birmington, England. The Times joins in extending its hearty congratulations.

A BURNING BLACKSMITH

Changed Food and Put Out the Fire

Even sturdy blacksmiths sometimes discover that, notwithstanding their daily exercise and resulting good health, if their food is not well selected trouble will follow, but in some cases a change of food to the right sort will quickly relieve the sufferer, for generally such active men have fine constitutions and can, with a little change of diet, easily rid themselves of the disease.

I. E. Overdorf, Vilas, Penn., a blacksmith, says, "Two months ago I got down so bad with stomach troubles that I had to quit my business. About ten o'clock each morning I was attacked by burning pains in the stomach, so bad I was unable to work.

Our groceryman insisted upon my changing breakfasts and using Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food instead of the ordinary breakfast of meat, potatoes, etc., so I tried and at once began to mend. The new food agreed with my stomach perfectly and the pains all ceased. I kept getting better and better every day, and now I am able to follow my business better than before in years. I am a thousand times obliged to the makers of Grape-Nuts for the great benefits the food has given."

EAST PETERBOROUGH

Dr. Ford, the Conservative Candidate, is Holding Meetings

Mr. Anderson, the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough, has already held a number of meetings, all of which have been largely attended. Dr. Ford, his opponent, is now out with a list of meetings, as follows:

Wednesday, April 30th, at the hall, Stewart's, Otonabee, at 7.30 p.m.

Thursday, May 1st, at Forresters' hall, Zion, Otonabee, at 7.30 p.m.

Friday, March 2, at St. Joseph's hall, Douro, at 7.30.

Dr. Ford will address these meetings and will be accompanied by other speakers.

Revolution in Newfoundland

Since the introduction into Newfoundland of the new Inhaler Remedy "Catarrhozone," the treatment of catarrhal diseases has been entirely revolutionized. The old-time snuff and internal medicine has been cast aside, and everyone is inhaling Catarrhozone; it clears the head and throat in two minutes, and is very agreeable and pleasant to use. Catarrhozone is a wonderful cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, lung troubles and deafness. It relieves quickly and cures permanently. We advise our readers to try Catarrhozone. Price $1.00, trial size 25c. Druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

MR. PLUMMER REMEMBERED

Is Presented With a Handsome Gold Watch and Chain

On Tuesday evening the workers in the wire department of the Canadian General Electric works met at Mr. Long's restaurant to pay farewell to Mr. F. Plummer, one of their fellow-employees. After an excellent supper, eulogistic and flattering addresses were delivered, and songs by Mr. Beyette and Mr. E. Pilling punctuated the speeches. Mr. Drew, foreman of the department, made an ideal chairman. The following address was read by A. Fife, and W. Pilling presented Mr. Plummer with a handsome gold watch suitably inscribed:

Mr. F. Plummer;

Dear Sir,—As you have joined the C. M.R., and intend leaving for South Africa to-morrow, we, your fellow-workers, have gathered here to-night to spend a social hour, as it will be the last opportunity we will have for some time. We hope you will have a safe journey, and return home again safe and sound, having upheld the record of the brave Canadians who have gone there before. As a slight token of our regard for you, we ask you to accept this watch, trusting that every time you look at it you will remember the many pleasant times we have spent together.

Signed by all the workers.

Mr. Plummer made a very suitable reply in which he thanked his friends for the honor done him. The gift would always be a reminder of his many friends in Peterborough.

Ashburnham Shade Trees

With commendable enterprise the Ashburnham Civic Association are arranging as they did last year, to furnish a limited number of trees for planting on the streets of the village. They will only be supplied on the understanding that the trees will be carefully planted and cared for. Any person desiring trees on these terms should notify Mr. A. Fitzgerald, or some other member of the committee on or before Monday, 28th inst. Arbour Day on which the trees will be delivered and planted, on Friday, May 2nd.

TRENT CANAL

NOTICE TO MANUFACTURERS OF AND DEALERS IN PORTLAND CEMENT

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for Portland Cement" will be received at this office up to sixteen o'clock on Monday, 28th April, 1902, for the supply and delivery of 60,000 barrels, or any portion thereof of Portland Cement on the Trent Canal as per specification.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the same, and further, an accepted bank check for 10 per cent. of the total amount tendered for must accompany the tender. This accepted check must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The accepted check thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By Order,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.
Department of Railways and Canals.

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE.

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them

WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the decoration scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end Our wall papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

SECRETARY REITZ ACTIVE BUT STILL RETICENT

Boers Leaders Keeping the Progress of Their Negotiations with Burghers Secret.

Special to The Times.

Balmoral, Transvaal, Wednesday April 23.—Secretary of State Reitz, of the Transvaal: Gen Lucas Meyer, Commander-in-Chief of the Orange Free State forces and other members of their party have concluded their conferences with the burghers composing General Meyer's command. Nothing has leaked out regarding the result. Secretary Reitz returned here yesterday evening and proceeded to Pietersburg to meet Commandant Beyers.

A GRIST OF NEWS FROM NEW YORK CITY

Anti-British Sentiment Strong In the Metropolis

THE IRISH AND THE BOER WAR

Interesting Budget of News from America's Commercial Centre

Special to The Times.

New York, April 24.—That there is a strong and growing anti-British feeling in this city is apparent. The attitude of the Irish societies in the Boer war, and later on the strong language used on the platform and in the press regarding the British camp at New Orleans, together with the hostility to England over Irish matters, makes it plain that England's enemies are numerous here. Since the talk of peace has begun, the hostility seems greatly on the increase.

REFUSED FIVE MILLIONS

The most historic church in New York City is St. Paul's Chapel. Here are contained pre-revolutionary relics and here hundreds of visitors go daily to sit in the pew which George Washington once occupied. The church stands almost in the heart of the business district on Lower Broadway. Now, it is said that a syndicate of capitalists have made an offer of $5,000,000 for the edifice and churchyard surrounding for the site of a great office building. The churchmen have refused the offer, greatly to the city's gain, for there are many sky-scrapers but only one St. Paul's Chapel. Most things have to give way to the advance of commerce and the demands of business, but St. Paul's with its historic record is too impressive a memorial to be allowed to disappear.

WILL BE CLOSED

The famous old Broadway Tabernacle, which business recently forced to sell, will not be finally closed tomorrow as originally intended. An agreement has been made to extend the beginning of the demolition until after the 28th, as Miss Ellen M. Stone will give a lecture there, telling the story of her capture by the Bulgarian brigands and treatment while in captivity. Dr. Jefferson, pastor of the Tabernacle, was at one time Miss Stone's pastor, and influential in raising a large part of her ransom, so it is only natural that the members of the Tabernacle should wish to hear her lecture in the church which did so much for her.

NO MORE POLICE PARADES

For years one of the spring features of this city has been the police parade. This May there will be none, and for once Police Commissioner Partridge has the unanimous support of the department in deciding this fact. The reasons given for doing away with the time honored show are that the concentration of 4,000 members of the force for several hours along the route of parade leaves the remainder of the city with insufficient protection; that business is interrupted along busy thoroughfares, that extra preparatory drills are required, which takes away much of the policeman's time at home and that as the parade follows closely upon Decoration Day in order to make use of the reviewing stand without additional expense, it is especially hard on the force whose duties are arduous on Decoration Day

ORGANIZED CHARITY

A movement which is considered the next legitimate step in the evolution of charity organization in this city is the effort now being made to establish an equitable standard of salaries for officials and employees engaged in philanthropic work. It is not so long since that the idea of a paid philanthropist was in itself repugnant. Little by little, however, this field of labor has been mapped out and the effort in it systematized. The old idea of doing good by stealth in seeking to uplift society at odd times and wholly on emotional impulses, has more and more given way to a clearer and broader perception of charity and its possibilities. The executive spirit has come to prevail.

Malt Breakfast Food

Is Their Favorite Dish

One of the strongest and most striking proofs of the popularity of Malt Breakfast Food is the fact that the Ralston Health Club members, numbering over ten millions in Canada and the United States, have made it their favorite breakfast dish.

This king of breakfast cereals possesses all the important virtues for the building of health and bodily strength.

It is partially cooked and predigested, therefore requires no digestive effort; it is readily assimilated and always retained on the most delicate stomach.

Malt Breakfast Food is generally recommended by our ablest physicians as the best diet for the strong and weak, for invalids and convalescents. One package makes from twenty-five to thirty meals. All grocers sell it.

BOGGS RELEASED TO-DAY

A Remarkable Criminal Who Gets His Freedom This Morning

Special to The Times.

Dover, Del., April 25.—William N. Boggs, formerly teller of the First National Bank of this city, and who, in 1898, was convicted of embezzling $167,000 of the funds of that institution, will be released from the Trenton Penitentiary to-day, and residents of Dover are awaiting with interest his return home. The sentence was for five years, but it was commuted to four by President Roosevelt.

Delaware never had a greater scandal than the one which grew out of the defalcations of young Boggs. It involved a United States Senator, Richard R. Kenney, who was twice placed on trial in the United States District Court, charged with improper use of the bank's money; a member of the Delaware State Legislature, Colonel Ezekiel Cooper, who died in prison while serving his sentence, and several other prominent citizens.

Next to Senator Kenney Boggs was the most conspicuous figure in the scandal. Without his aid the Government never could have unraveled the tangled books of the Dover bank. He was a wonder at figures. The fact that he stole more than the whole capital stock of the institution, in a very few years, right under the noses of the Directors and the National Bank Examiner, is proof of his ability. was regarded as one of the most remarkable young men in Delaware. His system of carrying along balances and deficits without ever getting into a tangle, his cool head and quick judgment under the most trying circumstances, and his unerring judgment of human nature were wonderful. Deserted by the men who had profited by his violations of the law and who had helped to place him in the position of a criminal, Boggs fled to South America, June 1, 1897. Then the great defalcation was discovered. A run was started on the bank, but the Richardsons, prominent in the canning industry here, put up money enough to make good the shortage. During of his enforced banishment, Boggs returned in the spring of 1898 and gave himself up to the Federal authorities. With the aid of Boggs the United States District Attorney began a vigorous prosecution of several of the most prominent citizens of the state. The two trials of Senator Kenney, then a member of the United States Senate, were full of sensations and dramatic incidents. Upon each trial the jury in the case of Senator Kenney disagreed.

During the imprisonment of Boggs his wife has resided in this city and most of her time has been devoted to efforts to bring about his release. It was she who visited the President and finally obtained a commutation of the sentence. Mrs. Boggs says that she and her husband have no definite plans for the future, but that there are several positions open to Boggs.

TO ERECT NEW PAPER MILLS

FINE LIMITS AND GOOD HARBOR FOR MILLS

The Atlantic Company Has Splendid Prospects of Success

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, proposes to establish mills for the manufacture of paper from pulp wood at New Richmond, in Quebec, on the Baie des Chaleurs.

The personnel of the corporation is a guarantee of good management, including as it does some of the most prominent business men in Canada. The President is W. C. Edwards, M. P., an experienced lumber king of the Ottawa Valley, and the Vice-President is Mr. R. Y. Ellis, well and favorably known in Toronto. One of the directors is R. H. Thompson, a paper merchant in Buffalo.

The management of the mills will be under the direction of Mr. W. M. McIntyre, lately mechanical superintendent of the Laurentide Pulp Company, whose knowledge will be a strength to the new concern.

The company intends to manufacture chiefly for the export trade, and is unusually well situated for the purpose. It has an ocean port for eight months right at its doors, and for the rest of the year can obtain access to the port of St. John at low rates. Its abundant wood supply is close at hand, the mills being built at the mouth of the little Cascapedia River, which flows through the limits; and the same river, with its clear and rocky bottom, provides a water supply suitable for making the finest grades of paper without filtering. Its stream has also, according to the test of experts, sufficient power to run mills of double the capacity to be built.

It is proposed to erect a paper mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons, a ground wood pulp mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and a sulphite pulp mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons. The wood used will be principally spruce, and it is believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than at any other place in America. The properties and limits acquired by the company contain about 302 square miles.

The company has reports on the property made by five different rangers, whose reports show that there is sufficient wood to afford a perpetual supply of timber. One of the rangers, who has travelled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, says it is the best pulp limit he has ever seen or travelled over.

The trade which the company is entering is a prosperous one. Prices rule high. The special advantages to the site at New Richmond guarantee a low cost of production. And there is every reason to anticipate good results. The preferred stock of the company is being sold by Messrs. Sutherland & Cameron, the Company's brokers, Ottawa.

The subscription books are now open and prospectuses, with full information and application forms, may be obtained from the office of Sutherland & Cameron, or the National Trust Company, Limited, Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg.

TROOPS AT CORONATION

A Sample of the Empire's Troops to go to England in June

Special to The Times.

London, April 24.—Colonial troops to the number of 2,500 will visit London for the coronation, including Australians, Canadians, Cypriots, Dyaks, Malays, Maltese, and South Africans. Their accomodation is a matter of some concern to the authorities, as the barrack-room accomodation in London is barely sufficient for the number of home troops who will be drafted into the metropolis. Negotiations have been entered into with the idea of utilising the grounds of the Alexandra Palace at Muswell hill as as a camping ground.

WILL DIE TO-DAY

A Nebraska Murderer to go to the Scaffold This Morning

Special to The Times.

Lincoln, Nebraska, April 25.—This is the date set for the execution of William Rhea and unless the Governor exercises executive clemency the sentence will be carried out at the state penitentiary some time during the day. The case has attracted unusual attention from the fact that the sentence is the first under the new law, which provides that all legal executions in the state must take place within the walls of the state penitentiary in this city, instead of in the county jails as heretofore. Rhea was convicted of the murder of Herman Zahn, a saloon keeper, at Snyder, Neb., Jan. 4, 1891.

TEACHER MEET IN OTTAWA

Fifteen Hundred Yankee Teachers now at the Capital

Ottawa, Ont., April 24.—Fifteen hundred teachers took possession of Ottawa to-day and the city was patriotically decorated with flags and bunting in honor of the annual convention of the Northern Illinois Teachers' Association. The visitors were met at the trains by members of the reception committee, who escorted them to headquarters, where they were registered, provided with badges and assigned to homes. The convention will be formally opened this evening with a session in the assembly hall of the high school. An attractive program has been arranged for Friday and Saturday, including papers, addresses and discussions covering a wide range of subjects relating to educational work.

THE LAST DRAFT

Five Additional Men to Leave for South Africa

Recruiting has stopped, the full quota of men required for the contingents having been secured. The following are the names of those who make up the last squad from Peterborough.

J. S. Pogue.
R. Carter.
C. A. Pengelley.
W. C. Inkster.
D. Forsythe.

The men will probably not leave until to-morrow evening.

Heart That are Diseased

will never be cured by the false, unnatural stimulation of liquor. First increase your vitality, build up the system, strengthen and purify the blood—then the heart will respond and grow strong.

Ferrozone is precisely what to take, it gives you an appetite and a digestion that will look after everything that is eaten. Ferrozone improves nutrition, makes rich, vitalizing blood, and is positively the most powerful restorative and strengthener known to science; it improves the nerve tone, regulates the heart's action, makes the feeble strong and the sick well. Ferrozone will do you untold good and costs only 50c. at druggists, or Ormond & Walsh.

Items of Interest

Port of Spain, Trinidad, April 24.—On Tuesday morning the Venezuelan Government troops, numbering 2,300 men, under General Ramon Castillo, attacked the revolutionists between San Antonio and Gunanaguana, distant about thirty leagues from Cumana, and situated in a mountainous district, well known to the revolutionists. General Castillo personally led the advance government guard, composed of veteran troops. One hour after the opening of the action General Castillo was wounded, and died later. Immediately after he was wounded all of the recently recruited Venezuelan soldiers disbanded, deserting in all directions. The Government officers tried to rally their troops, but their efforts were vain, and ended in a complete retreat of the Venezuelan soldiers. The whereabouts of Gen. Escalante, who was second in command of the Government army, was unknown when this despatch was forwarded. The situation in Venezuela is again critical.

A REMARKABLE FAMILY

Scarborough, April 25.—The funeral has taken place in Hutton Bushel Churchyard, near Scarborough, of Mrs. Ursula Lightfoot, the widow of a farmer of West Ayton, who was in her ninety-fourth year. The deceased lady had six daughters and three sons, seventy-nine grandchildren, seventy-three great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren, all of whom survive her. The ages of five members of her family totalled no fewer than 328 years.

POISONED ARROWS v. RIFLES

Gambaga, Feb. 24.—On March 4 a punitive expedition leaves Gambaga under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Morris, D.S.O., to operate against the Tianses, an important people inhabiting the country about five days' march to the north-west, who, though nominally under the British flag, was never brought to acknowledge our rule. On their part they boastfully state that they can put 4,000 fighting men into the field armed with guns and the far more deadly poisoned spear and arrow.

VETERAN YACHTMAN'S DEATH

London, April 25.—Captain Bradford, skipper of the famous old racing cutter-yacht Galatea, fell dead yesterday on the deck of the vessel in Dartmouth Harbor, where the Galatea has been laid up for many years past. He had not been ill previously. The Galatea raced for the America Cup in 1886, and was defeated by the Mayflower.

TO REVIVE BRITISH FENCING.

London, April 25.—To enable the English masters of fencing to meet the foreign professors on level ground, it is proposed to hold a competition amongst all the fencing masters of Great Britain, first of all counties, and then bringing these winners together in London and finding out who are the best four, then letting them meet the foreigners in friendly rivalry. The four, it is suggested, should also complete for the title of English champion. A committee is being formed to carry out this scheme.

TWO LIVES — 213 YEARS

London, April 24.—Mrs. Margaret Ann Campbell, one of London's few centenarians, has just died at Sandringham road, Dalston, where she had been living with one of her sister's grandsons.

The old lady was one of a family of ten, but all her brothers and sisters pre-deceased her by nearly half a century.

Married in 1819, she became a widow three years afterwards. She reached her hundredth birthday in August last.

Except that her eyesight partly failed about two years ago, she retained all her faculties to the last, and would talk freely of the many stirring times through out which she had passed.

At the wonderful age of 113 Mrs. Ellen Egan, a widow, of the parish of Ballintubber, Roscommon, has passed away.

A NOVEL DINING ROOM.

Paris, April 24.—Preparations for the voyage of the President of the Republic to Russia are actively proceeding at Brest. An immense diningroom which can be taken to pieces, is being constructed on the Montcalm, and will be put together before Kronstadt is reached, in which port the President will offer a grand luncheon to the Russian sovereigns.

So great is the number of French journalists who wish to accompany M. Loubet to Russia that the Cassini's hospital is being converted into a dormitory for the press men.

NOVELTY IN THE NAVY

London, April 24.—The destroyer Syren has been commissioned at Portsmouth to carry out a series of trials with a self-lubricating apparatus attached to her engines, the invention of Mr. Reed, of Palmer's, Jarrow. Oil from a reservior under the engine room is automatically pumped into the bearings, thus entering avoiding hand lubrication.

FIVE HUNDRED WITHOUT HOMES

Clarion, Pa., April 25.—The fire at Marienville, Forest County, yesterday raged until late last night, consuming 150 buildings and entailing a loss of nearly $300,000, with not over $75,000 insurance. About one-half of the town is in ashes and five hundred people are homeless. The flames spread from the town to a lumber yard, and from there to the woods, and burned for two miles up the railroad. About onehalf mile of track of the Bradford, Bordell & Kinzua Railroad was burned, including eight cars. S. L. Pickens, editor of the Marienville Express, was severely burned about the face, while several others were injured. John Johnson, a tailor, is missing, and it is supposed he was burned in his tailor shop. Among the buildings destroyed were the post office, opera house, three hotels, Marienville Express and Presbyterian church. The only business houses standing in the town are the buildings in which are located the Gold Standard Bank, one store, one hotel, and one restaurant.

COL. IRVING TO COMMAND

Ottawa, April 25.—It is believed that Col. Irving, of Halifax, will be given command of the fifth regiment of the fourth contingent.

Orders went out yesterday to cease recruiting in Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces last night. The total number, enrolled in these provinces is over 1,400, which will be sufficient to form three regiments. About 600 men now remain to be enrolled in the west, where recruiting will begin to-day.

BOYS LONGED FOR FATHER.

Buffalo, April 25.—Leroy and Edward Kaegle, both under 12 years of age, whose home is in Buffalo, escaped from the Susquehanna Valley Orphan Home in Binghampton to come to Buffalo to see their father. The boys were sent there when their mother died. They longed for sight of their father's face, and after their escape they started for Buffalo. Edward injured himself, and when they arrived at Corning they were taken in charge by the authorities, and Edward was sent to a hospital. He escaped from there, and is believed to be on his way to Buffalo.

CARRUTHERS ON DUTY.

Ottawa, April 25.—A cablegram received to-day from Cape Town by his Excellency the Governor-General announces that Lieut. Bruce Carruthers is doing duty with his regiment at Klerksdorp.

THE COSSACKS ARE SLANDERED

London, April 25.—Charlemagne Tower, the United States Ambassador to Russia, has arrived in London on his way to the United States. He will sail for New York May 3, will go to Washington to see President Roosevelt and will return to St. Petersburg after a short stay in Philadelphia, Mr. Tower said to a representative of the Associated Press:

"I cannot discuss the reports of disturbances in Russia and the changes of ministry. However, you can say this that the reports reaching England are generally much garbled and exaggerated.

"One reads here of savage charges of Cossacks upon unprotected mobs, on whom they inflict knoutings and other hardships. How mistaken is that impression I know from personal experience. A short time ago I accidentally got in a crowd on whom Cossacks charged. They came riding down, not very fast, with swords not drawn and with only small riding whips in their hands and shouting: "Please pass on." I saw not a single trace of brutality. No one was hurt. In our country, I have seen police who had not the same consideration for an excited crowd as had these Cossacks."

RUSSIA AND BRITAIN MAY COME TO BLOWS

The Advance of Russia in the East Must be Checked Immediately.

Special to The Times.

London, April 25.—The Mail says.—As there are no absolutely unofficial papers in Russia—for the simple reason that a paper which does not voice the ideas of the Government is not permitted to exist—serious attention is being paid in Paris and London to an elaborate article on Russo-British relations which recently appeared in the Novosti of St. Petersburg. It begins by boldly declaring that it would be permissible for Russia to destroy the independence of Afghanistan and Baluchistan in order to open her way to the Indian Ocean. Russia, it says, has the same rights in the south that Japan and England have prevented her from gaining in the west. And the Novosti continues

"A nest of brigands such as Afghanistan ought not to be suffered to prevent Russia from penetrating to the Indian Ocean, and from becoming India's immediate neighbor. At any rate, the Afghans are not to be feared, for if the English have been able on several occasions to take Kabul, only a few regiments of Cossacks would be needed to conquer Afghanistan and Baluchistan. Russia, indeed, has already done much to live at peace with Great Britain, and English publicists have also been known to advocate an understanding between the two Governments, but the historic prejudices, jealousies and traditional hatreds have always ended by overriding the counsels of reason, and, instead of trying to reconcile their interests and to carry out in common accord their work of civilization in Asia, England and Russia have unceasingly manifested one toward the other their sentiments of distrust, rivalry and honesty. Even in Europe Russia sees the exit by the Black Sea closed to her ships of war by England, a matter which is at once inconvenient and humiliating to her.

"Now, therefore, that she has protected herself by her agreement with France from all possible action on the part of England and Japan in the Far East, Russia ought to consider the question of an outlet in the Indian Ocean for the products of Central Asia, and to convert it into a civilized region. This will be impossible as long as the shores of the Indian Ocean are closed to Russia by the savage Afghans, for the Siberian Railway and the Chinese ports held by her are not sufficient for the attainment of this end, since it would always be possible for others to close those ports."

TO EXPEL ALL RUSSIANS FROM FRENCH DOMAINS

Czar's Government Trying to Induce France to Authorize Expulsion

Special to The Times.

London, April 25.—The Times correspondent at Paris says that certain Russians now in France are likely to be expelled, as the Russian Government is evidently trying to induce France to authorize their expulsion. It is feared that Paris contains a group of agitators in close relations with the Nihilists, who were aware of the recent assassinations. The police made a domiciliary visit to fifteen Russian refugees in Paris and seized an incriminating letter. The correspondent infers that since the Franco-Russian alliance France will no longer harbor suspects

THE UNITED STATES TO ANNEX ENGLAND

The Idea is Taken Seriously by Many American Newspapers

UNCLE SAM HAS THE BIG HEAD.

A Disease That May Yet Get Him Into Serious Trouble

Milwaukee, Wis., April 25.—The Tribune says,—Here's greeting to, say, half a dozen new states which are soon according to the prediction of a man eminent in practical affairs, to seek admission to the American union. These states are not inhabited by primitive savages or dirty half-castes, but by a highly organized, cultivated and wealthy people, speaking the English language and familiar with representative institutions.

The states will be carved out of the British Isles. Ireland will comprise one, Scotland another, Wales another, and England perhaps three. Andrew Carnegie is the seer who foretells this momentous merger. He avers in an interview commenting upon Cecil Rhodes' will, that there is no other destiny possible for the United Kingdom.

The idea of a union of the two countries was unquestionably working in Cecil Rhodes' large brain, but his notion was manifestly an alliance, with Great Britain as the paramount factor. Mr. Carnegie, more familiar with the potencies of our vaster area and resources, believes that the republic will be magnet that will draw the empire to its embraces. With his shrewd practical eye he can perceive the straits to which England is put to carry on the war in South Africa, and to realize its full significance. If 200,000 people, cooped up on the African continent, destitute of a single seaport, can drive Great Britain to taxing the food her people eat, what visions of her vulnerability may the imagination not conjure up As the result of a European coalition against her?

Since "The Battle of Dorking" there have been a number of fanciful speculations as to the manner in which the ruin of the British empire was to come about but none dreamed that the hardest blow she has received in more than half a century would come from such a (comparatively feeble folk as the Boers. The history of the past three years cannot fail to leave its deep impress upon the English mind and heart. It reveals to the Britons, and to us of America, as well, that the uncertainty of human life involves nations as well as individuals, and the importance of the union of kindred races.

If such a union as Mr. Rhodes dimly foresaw and as Mr. Carneige predicts ever come about, the United States must necessarily be the paramount factor, since we surpass all the other English-speaking countries in population, wealth, resources and the elements of power. Our constitution is elastic enough to stretch over outlying territory, it can enfold in the American flag the historic isles from whence our ancestors and our language and many of our institutions sprung, more easily than it can absorb more distant isles sheltering alien races. Our British cousins will be welcome whenever they get ready to knock for admission.

THE GREAT DELIVERER FROM DISEASE AND SUFFERING

Paine's Celery Compound

Full of Life-Giving Power and Virtue Is The Prescription of a Great Physician

It Has No Equal As A Spring Medicine

It should be well-understood by the ailing, physically brokendown and diseased that the ordinary advertised nervines, sarsaparillas, tonics and pills have never accomplished the glorious life-saving work in springtime that has marked the history of that health-giver, Paine's Celery Compound, which has cured such desperate cases of kidney disease, liver complaint, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia and blood diseases.

Paine's Celery Compound is the discovery of one of the ablest physicians that ever lived, and one of the strongest proofs of its worth and value is the fact that able practitioners prescribe and recommend it daily.

It is this Paine's Celery Compound dear sufferer, the great nerve feeder, the marvellous system cleanser and digestive regulator, that we now strongly urge you to make use of at this season if you lack the strength of true manhood or womanhood. The young and old, the rich and poor extol its wondrous effects. Try its curative virtues without delay if you would be free from your ailments and enjoy life. A bottle or two used just now will cause you to bless heaven that such a life-giver was placed before suffering humanity.

A Presentation

On Tuesday evening last the employees of the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Co. assembled in the foundry to say farewell to their fellow-employee, Private J. S. Pogue, who had joined the South African contingent which leaves to-night for Halifax. The affair was of a purely informal character, the presentation being made by the "oldest man in the shop." Short speeches were made by several present.

Private Pogue, although taken completely by surprise, expressed his heartfelt gratitude for the generous gift. He would always cherish an affection for his friends in Peterborough.

Mr. Pogue is a young man much thought of and is very popular with all who know him. He carries with him the hearty good wishes of all his fellow-workmen.

A Capital Cure for Sore Throat

Is to use as a gargle a few drops of Polson's Nerviline in sweetened water, and before retiring rub the throat and chest vigorously with Nerviline. By morning the soreness and inflammation will have disappeared entirely. Nerviline drives away the pain and cures sore throat and hoarseness quickly, simply because that's what it's made for. POPULARIZE TARGET PRACTICE

Col. Hughes and Hon. Dr. Borden agree on the high value of target shooting as a method of getting non-military people prepared to defend themselves against invasion. It would be difficult, with the Boer war in progress, to find anyone with another opinion. A people who know how to handle the modern rifle and the trenching spade, need fear little from a hostile force.

The trouble seems to be to get our people practising. The Boer was compelled by the conditions of his life to be a good marksman; but some peaceful Canadians have more use for skill with the cultivator or the telephone. We mount electric cars when the Boer swings himself into the saddle, and most of us have more practice in talking than stalking.

Still we must shoot straight and take cover quickly if we are to relieve ourselves of the necessity of supporting a standing army. And this only comes by use. If invasion threatened, our people would patriotically take up the duty of drill and rifle practice with great enthusiasm; but our very security keeps them from turning aside from the absorbing occupation of money-getting.

The one chance for general rifle practice amongst us, the conditions being what they are, is to get it regarded as a popular amusement. Col. Hughes is right in wanting to catch the riflemen young. If we can encourage all our young fellows into going to the rifle ranges as they now flock to the grand-stand of a football or baseball ground, the problem will be solved. For it is a fascinating sport, and one which can be continued well up to the borderland of old age.

The Government should do what it can to popularize target-practice by providing good ranges, easy of access, and putting it within the reach of every young man to get the use of a first class rifle and plenty of ammunition. If rifle clubs filled the land an invader would never think of entering it.

UNCONSCIOUS INFLUENCE.

SERMON BY
REV. GEO. H. HEPWORTH.

For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.—Romans, xiv., 7.

Somebody has said that thoughts are things. The phrase is unfortunate, because it is misleading and inaccurate. This world is made up of things and forces. Thoughts are more subtle than mere things and far more potential. They are forces which change a man's life for better or for worse.

If you apply the principles of wireless telegraphy to spiritual concerns you will see the full scope of my statement. We may safely do this, for there is a spiritual law running parallel to every physical law, and no man can discover a physical law without suggesting a corresponding spiritual law. In this way all thinkers stand shoulder to shoulder, lifting the world out of the old into the new.

The wireless telegrapher tells us that a word or its equivalent creates a vibration of the air, as a pebble creates a ripple in the pond, and this vibration speeds on its way to the destined terminus, however distant, and there makes itself known and felt. We are living in an age of miracles, or, in other words, an age of discovery, and this is one of the startling results.

In like manner a word of scorn or of praise hurled into the spiritual universe from a heart that hates or loves becomes a living force, not lost in the general confusion as a single note is lost in the multitude of sounds, but going straight to the man or woman against whom or in favor of whom it was directed. That other heart at the further end of the line, perhaps half broken by remorse or timidly hoping for better days, is the receiving station of this wireless telegraphy. Your thought, critical or gentle, strikes that other heart with an impact which either hurts or helps. You may not know that your thought has taken its flight, that other person may not know whence it comes, but all the same he is uplifted or oppressed by it.

This may seem strange and even incredible, but while it is to-day a possible fact, it may to-morrow become a demonstrated truth, and the next day it may change the whole outlook of the spiritual world. It has the appearance of a miracle, but profounder knowledge always seems miraculous, while in reality we only climb from the lower to the higher realm of law, see further and understand God better.

A spoken thought is even now recognized as a force when speaker and hearer are within earshot of each other. An oath, a compliment, a bit of vocal flattery go through the ear to the heart and kindle a flame of resentment or of happiness. What you say becomes part of another man's life and excites passion or stimulates friendship. Why may there not be a quicker transit than the slow and dull ear affords? Why may not the time come when we can convey our thoughts without the coarse medium of words? There are no words between us and heaven. A prayer is longing of the soul, "uttered or unexpressed." God speaks to hearts. The impression is instantaneous, as when the sun makes its mark on the photographer's plate. There are "unseen beings who walk the earth both when we wake and when we sleep," but they use no words. They make us feel their presence, and we are as sure that they are close by as though we heard a trumpet call. What they would say steals into the heart, for our poor ears cannot catch it. We hear nothing, but we know that they are giving us a helping hand. Is there any language in heaven except that of thoughts?

When the world grows older why may we not speak to each other without this cumbersome factor of spoken words? Progress is indefinite and infinite, and we are moving in that direction. We catch glimpses of the possible already. A look, a pressure of the hand, and contempt or sympathy is complete. Enlarge the circumference and you have a new truth. No one needed to tell the Christ what he thought. He read the heart as an open book. He looked at a man and the man's story was already told. Lips had nothing to do with it. The Master felt the woes and shared the joys of humanity. A subtler language than we can use was at His command.

A thought is the wireless message of soul to soul. Your neighbor's welfare is affected by your kind or unkind criticism of him. When we deal with subtle and far-reaching forces of this kind, then religion, which enjoins charity, is brought to the forefront as the most important factor in human life. If you would be at your best you must love your neighbor, for your thought of him will either lift him up or trip him to a fall. The whole trend and swing of the universe bid a man be honest, just and gentle, for we are so bound together that nobility in one kindles nobility in all, and one man's hurt is an injury to all. Since we are marching, one great company, from time to eternity, let us go as brothers, with a kindly word and a helping hand whenever opportunity offers.

Rough Riders attach much value to their Colonel's good word. Perhaps, however, it never proved more useful to any of them than it did to the man who recently wrote to thank President Roosevelt for a testimonial of good conduct, sent at the former's request. After expressing his thanks he explained the "little difficulty" in which he had found himself as follows:

"I shot a lady in the eye. The lady died. I did not mean to shoot the lady. I was shooting at my wife."—New York Times.

Struggles of a Newspaper.

The Pall Mall Gazette gives the following interesting sketch of the ups and downs of The London Daily News, which is being run under its new proprietors without the usual betting column, and which will also refuse to report all sports other than those of a clean and healthy character:—

"Mr. Cadbury's programme for his new 'Daily News' has reminded me of the introductory article of that journal's first editor, which appeared in its first number on Wednesday, January 21, 1846. "We seek at once," Dickens wrote, 'to preserve our own self-respect, and to be respected, for ourselves, and for it, by our readers.' Interesting, too, is the list of original proprietors of the 'D.N.' It comprised Bradbury & Evans, Sir William Jackson, Sir Joshua Walmsley, and Sir Joseph Paxton. They had at their back a capital of £100,000, paid up and underwritten. They were to pay Dickens £2,000 a year, and the salaries of the staff were liberal in proportion.

"Many, too, were the earlier occupants of the editorial chair. After Dickens, who sat there for seventeen days, came Forster, Eyre Evans Crowe, Knight Hunt, William Weir, Thomas Walker, F. H. Hill, H. W. Lucy. Mr. Lucy's first year of office was his last. The names of those who have succeeded him are more familiar."

Best Breed of Fowls.

There is no best breed of fowls. That claim is chiefly made by sellers and secretaries of specialty clubs for every breed that exists. "Best on earth" blasts can always be found in a certain class of poultry journals. Then there are honest but mistaken opinions expressed by those who, having kept one breed under conditions unfitting that breed, have discarded it and substituted another breed for which the conditions were fitting, and, consequently, better results were obtained. Strains vary much; individuals vary more than any intrinsic differences between breeds.

Some breeders have bred and selected their birds of one breed for many years, with due regard to utility; other breeders have bred and selected the same breed for many years with no regard to anything save feathers, markings, combs and color of shanks and eyes.

To a certain small extent housing must be different for different breeds. For small, lean, active, lightly-feathered birds the houses need to be somewhat warmer in winter than is necessary for large, phlegmatic, heavily-feathered birds.

To a somewhat greater extent, freedom to forage must be greater for one breed than is necessary for another. The small, nervous, active birds do not thrive well under close confinement, and generally the possibility of thrift under confinement is directly proportional to the size of the breed.

It must be admitted that birds, even of largest breeds, that have been reared in freedom will not do well in close confinement; also that fertility of eggs for any breed largely depends on fresh air and exercise in fresh air.

But it is in feeding that the greatest changes are required. All fowls should be compelled to make full use of any foraging opportunities. The full day's rations for fowls of one size and equal activity need to be, in amount and proportion of nutriments, such as fit the climatic conditions of the time or place. And the amount of total food, proportions of proteins, carbon-hydrates and fats must be different for birds of other sizes and degrees of activity.

Young Canada Grain Culture.

The last annual report of the Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion is remarkably interesting reading generally, but more especially where it refers to the progress that is being made by young Canadians along the lines of practical grain culture. With a view to stimulating increased interest in the growing and systematic selection of seed grain, a competition among boys and girls living on Canadian farms was started in the spring of 1900. To encourage them in this work, Sir William C. Macdonald of Montreal donated the sum of $10,000 to be given in cash prizes, according to plans which were arranged by Professor Robinson. These prizes are distributed under the supervision of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The competitors in the seed grain competition are growing seed grain on specially prepared plots of land, one-quarter of an acre in each plot, selecting seed each year from these plots to sow on the plot for the succeeding year. They gather large, well-filled heads from vigorous plants before the grain is cut and after all the conditions of growth have been observed, and then thresh these heads. By screening and hand-picking the large, well-developed grain, from these selected heads, the seed for next year's seed-grain plot is secured. This means and manner of selecting seed has now been conducted for two years on over eight hundred Canadian farms, which are fairly well distributed throughout the Dominion.

The expressions of appreciation which have been received from the parents and teachers of many of the boys and girls who have undertaken the work of managing a seed grain plot have been most gratifying. The nature study connected with the selection of seed-grain, according to the system followed, is as helpful as it is interesting. There can be no doubt, as Professor Robertson has stated elsewhere, that a systematic continued selection of seed-grain from the most vigorous and productive plants in the plots will lead to great improvement in the crops throughout the whole of the country. The educational influence of the seed-grain competition is exerting a wholesome effect upon boys and girls whose school years are nearly ended, and who may never again be offered an inducement sufficient to awaken and to develop a liking for a careful and educational study of nature and nature's methods. This "Progressive agriculture" branch of the Macdonald Manual Training fund is growing in influence and usefulness; and there is good reason to anticipate with confidence that it will prove of perpetual advantage to Canada, not only through the improvement of seed-grain, but also through the increased intelligence and enlarged abilities of the boys and girls who have taken part in the competitions.

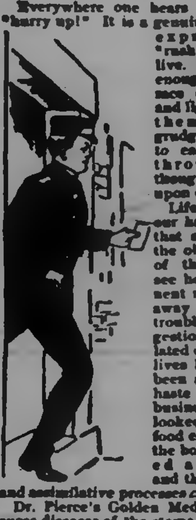
HURRY UP!



Everywhere one hears that expression "hurry up!" It is a genuine Americanism expressive of the "rush" in which we live. Nothing is swift enough for us. We race against steam and lightning and find them slow. We grudge the time given to eating, and rush through meals as though life depended upon our haste.

Life does depend on our haste, but not in that sense. Look at the obituary columns of the papers and see how many prominent men are carried away by "stomach trouble," "acute indigestion" and other related diseases. Their lives have in general been sacrificed to the haste and rush of business which overlooked the fact that food can only nourish the body when digested and assimilated and that the digestive and assimilative processes can't be hurried.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, cures diseases of the stomach and the associated organs of digestion and nutrition. The source of all physical strength is food, properly digested and perfectly assimilated. By enabling the perfect digestion and assimilation of food "Golden Medical Discovery" increases and enriches the blood supply and sends new strength to every organ of the body.

"I was at one time as I thought almost at death's door," writes Mr. J. B. Bell, of Leando, Van Buren Co., Iowa. "I was confined to my house and part of the time to my bed. I had taken quantities of medicines but they only seemed to feed the disease; but I must say that 'Golden Medical Discovery' has cured me, and to-day I am stouter than I have been for twenty years. I am now forty-three years old."

Roofing.

ALLEN'S PATENT FIRE PROOF COMPOSITE roof—better than metal; will not crack as other composite. Daniel Allen, 11 Toronto street Toronto

These days, when the ground in the henyards is too often deep with mud, is almost as likely to cause roup or other disease in the fowl as any season of the year, especially if accompanied with cold winds or a little rain. It is better in such weather to keep the hens in the house most of the time, as the floor in that and the scratching shed should be dry and well covered with a litter of dry chopped straw. Open doors and windows to give them pure air, but keep them out of the mud.

Sunflower Seeds for the Layers.

Dried sunflower seeds are egg-producing, and can be fed sparingly in place of meat scraps, as they contain a goodly supply of oil. The sunflower heads are a fine thing for fowls to peck at on a cold winter's day, to extricate the seeds. Thus they get exercise that gives warmth and health.

When one has spare ground near the hennery it is a good plan to plant a plot of sunflowers for the fowls to work at during the fall. It will keep them out of mischief elsewhere. We break down several heads each day for the layers to eat.

New York's Fussy Society.

"ALLOWING for a certain difference in the degree of barbarism," says Sydney Brooks in "Harper's Magazine," "Rome in its decline could alone furnish a parallel to New York's Four Hundred. The American aristocracy has no equal in Europe for ability to turn the simplest sort of diversion into a function, and every function into a ceremony. It is not of them I write, though their passion for incongruous artificialities and the glare in which they live have infected all strata. An exasperated Englishman once described the social atmosphere of Manhattan Island as 'rather fussy,' but that was only in comparison with the English way of doing things. The charm of London hospitality is that there is never the slightest strain put upon either host or guest. The American hostess, like the French hostess, feels that she must be continually 'entertaining' her guest; she considers it a reflection on her hospitality if the guest is left a moment alone; she looks upon it as her duty to be continually providing fresh amusements, and is constantly troubled by doubts as to whether the visitor is really 'enjoying' himself. That is one of the reasons why Americans, after the pampering they get at home, are apt to feel themselves neglected in London, and left out in the cold."

Feeding Incubator Chicks.

The Country Gentleman gives the following various methods of feeding incubator chicks, which have met with success:—

1. No food is to be given in any case till the chicks are 24 hours old. For the first meal boil some eggs at least twenty minutes. Clear eggs from the incubator will do. Mash these eggs very fine and mix egg, shell and all with bread crumbs equal parts, and feed a little of this for the first day. For the rest of the first week give them for morning meal some small oatmeal; after that some small cracked wheat, one meal a day of the egg and bread-crumbs, the rest of the ration for the first week to be the very small crushed oats and wheat. From that time feed once a day a mash feed composed of one-third each of bran, cornmeal and ground oats, with a little meat in it. As the chicks grow older add a little more meat each week, and do not forget a little bone meal at all times in the mash, just a little for each chick. Let the rest of their ration be broken corn, wheat and a little millet seed; if some oatmeal so much the better, but above all things compel them to hunt and dig in chaff and sand for all the grain food.

2. For the first two days rolled oats every two hours, or as often as the chicks are hungry; then for two days one feed per day of mash made from any good chick meal; mix in the mash some fine chick grit. After four days old, one feed of the mash per day, the rest of their food broken wheat and corn, some little millet seed, small rolled oats and plenty of green food. This is quite simple, but gives good results.

3. To push for quick growth in the shortest time, their first meal should be small broken or rolled oats, thrown into or upon sharp, bright sand. This is continued till the chicks are one week old. From the time they have their first feed of rolled oats the broiler chick should be fed every two hours till it goes to the market at eight or ten weeks old. For the first week give them every two hours a small feed of rolled oats, small cracked wheat and a little millet seed—never more than one-fifth of their food to be millet. At all times furnish some kind of green or vegetable food, and for the first three weeks have the wheat, oats and corn quite small for them. From now till finished for the market feed every two hours as much as they will eat. Give one good feed a day of the mash, and throw all the grain food into the chaff for them to hunt for.

The mash food should be composed of equal parts of wheat, bran, ground oats and cornmeal, with a little meat scrap and bone meal in it. As the chicks grow older increase the meat supply in the mash and feed the wheat whole, and the broken corn can be a little larger. Give plenty of green food and vegetables cut fine, no clover meal for broiler chicks, and be sure that the meat scrap is nice and sweet, or it will taint the delicate flavor of the broiler. When fed so strongly, they must have plenty of exercise and fresh air, also all the water they wish and plenty of grit. Hot milk is the best for mixing the mash. At all times, as soon as they are old enough, make the young chicks hunt and dig in the chaff and sand for their grain food. Some kinds of chicks will not stand such strong feeding. It turns them on their backs and they die. Experiment a little, and keep close watch on them from day to day.

4. First day hard boiled eggs and bread crumbs, as in No. 1. For the rest of the first week, baked bread made of corn meal, bran, middlings and a little cheap flour—this to be mixed with three or four clear eggs from the incubator and some milk. Bake as you do corn bread, crumble fine and feed to the chicks alternately with small oatmeal and broken wheat. As the chicks grow older feed broken corn, whole wheat and millet seed; throw this into the chaff for them to dig for. After two weeks old use the bread mixture for a mash food for once a day, and add to it some good sweet meat scraps.

We trust that the above may help in the rearing of young chicks. At all times a little green cut bone is good for the growing chick. Plenty of green food cut fine is absolutely necessary; so is plenty of grit, water, exercise and fresh air, and above all things brooders, brooder houses, floors, water vessels and feed troughs must be absolutely clean. Keep the floor of the runway clean, and it must be free from dampness. We rather prefer ground oats in the mash to clover meal. The chicks like it better, and it furnishes the roughage or husks in a better form for the chick.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Wilful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

this case if your suspicions are indeed well founded," he said, slowly, "for her father was, in my earlier life, my best friend, and a more honest man the sun never shone on. Why, I could almost as soon think of suspecting my own fair young daughter of taking Mrs. Dillingham's diamonds, as to suspect her!"

At that moment a carriage drove up to the chief's office in all haste, and Alexander Hamilton sprang out.

The chief and Mr. Lane exchanged strange glances when his card was sent in. He was accorded an interview at once.

"I will state briefly as I can the object of my visit," said Mr. Hamilton, unfastening a handsome stud from his bosom and placing it upon the desk.

"I called at a leading jewelry store with a gentleman friend to look at studs. My friend remarked casually that he wished to purchase one exactly like mine if he could. As it happened, I had purchased mine there.

"The jeweler looked at it steadily a moment; then requested me to let him examine it. I did so.

"'There has been a terrible fraud perpetrated here, Mr. Hamilton,' he said excitedly. 'This is not the gem I sold you! This is a clever paste put in that same setting.'

"You can imagine, my dear sir, my intense amazement upon hearing that.

"Now, I come to you to see if you can trace my lost diamond."

"Have you spoken to anyone concerning the matter?" asked the chief.

"No," said Aleck. "Not even to my wife. I did not want to distress her."

"That is right," returned the chief; "do not speak of it—not even to her just now. If I should summon you hastily, come quickly."

Those words and the strange look that accompanied them, haunted Aleck for hours afterward.

CHAPTER XXI.

"The Curse That Hangs on Your Proud Head."

Three weeks had passed since the eventful night of the ball — weeks fraught with the keenest pain to Daisy for the French count was a daily caller at the beautiful villa where they were now located, and he made no secret of the fact that Olive Gordon was the magnet that drew him thither.

It was torture to Daisy, and all the more bitter because Olive was learning to care for the fellow.

"It must not be," she moaned, "and yet, how dare I tell her all? It would wreck my life, and lose me Aleck's love forever."

Either Olive or herself must be sacrificed— which was it to be? Only heaven could have foretold.

The count had been most pressing in his demands for money, too. She had exhausted every available means of obtaining it, and he was driving her to madness.

One evening a note was slipped into her hand, which culminated all her woes.

"My Dear Madame"— it ran — "I have done myself the honor today of proposing for mademoiselle's hand. She reserves her decision in order to consult with you. You dare not refuse to aid me. She must be mine."

She had scarcely finished reading the note when she heard a light tap at the door, and had barely time to crush it into her bosom ere Olive entered.

"Oh, Daisy!" she cried, fluttering to the room and flinging herself breathlessly down on the velvet hassock at her sister's feet, "guess the great news! No, I shall not tease you by making you guess. I will tell you. The count has proposed at last! Just think of it—I am to be a countess! I haven't accepted him yet, but of course I will.

"He has been telling me of his vast possessions, and, Daisy, I will be so rich and grand —and what is best of all—I—I care for him."

No answer fell from Daisy's white lips. Ah, how cruel of heaven to send this double punishment upon her.

"You do not congratulate me," pouted Olive. "Say, something, Daisy. There is a look on your face which puzzles me."

Daisy slipped on her knees at her sister's feet wringing her white hands and sobbing bitterly.

"I cannot bear the thought of you marrying the count, Olive," she gasped. "You must not— I do not like him— indeed I do not."

"I like him," flashed Olive, "and after all I am the one to be suited in an affair of this kind."

"If he were a poor adventurer — a man with neither money, position, nor brains, would you like him?" she asked, piteously.

"Of course not," assented Olive; but what's the use of talking like that? his wealth is enormous, and as for brains —he has any amount of it, and his position is assured. I am determined to marry the count within the coming month. It will be sudden, of course, but he declares he cannot bear the thought of going back to Europe without me."

A month — a long month — what might not happen in that time!

She could surely devise some means of saving her sister from rushing headlong into the pit that had been dug for her unwary feet.

Long after midnight Daisy pondered over the matter. If she were to save Olive, it meant ruin and disgrace for herself.

Was there no way out of this labyrinth of folly but ruin and death?

She grew so pale and wan during the week which followed that Aleck was alarmed over her.

She had such strange notions, too. He thought it a pitiful hallucination— the fancy that someone was dogging her footsteps night and day.

"But it is quite true, Aleck," she persisted, "wherever I go I see a tall man with a dark beard watching me intently. When he finds himself observed by me, he disappears immediately."

"You need change of scene, my darling," said Aleck, soothingly. "You are not well. That reminds me, my dear, to tell you I have urgent business which requires my presence in New York. We must return at once; of course Olive goes with us; that will put a stop to her little flirtation with the handsome count." he added, laughingly.

"Aleck," whispered Daisy, creeping close to him, and stealing two white, cold arms round his neck, "she says she intends marrying the French count, and it must not be, Aleck — do you hear? It must not be."

Not Getting Everything.

An English correspondent writes:— Apropos of the frequent announcements going the rounds of the newspaper press regarding the capture of machinery orders by American firms in markets which the British manufacturers had previously dominated (certain identical reports being frequently repeated "ad nauseam" in the same journals in different forms), it is refreshing to get a glimpse of the other side of the question, and to find that one, at least, of the representatives of our chief staple industry requires not the admonition to "wake up."

An old-established firm of English flour mill engineers have just secured the contract for the supply and erection of a large flour mill on the most modern system in North China. More than one firm of American makers were competing for the work, and, although they claimed to produce by their process better qualities and higher percentages of flour, the English firm in question was able to satisfy the buyers as to the superiority of their machinery and its ability to produce qualities and percentages equal, or superior to, the Americans.

This English house takes the contract at a price below any of the American houses, and has undertaken to ship the whole plant in ten weeks from date of acceptance of order. The firm in question is an Ipswich concern, which some months since shipped a similar complete flour mill to China, the order for which was also secured in competition with America.

About Britain's Food Supply.

To the discussion on the food supply of Great Britain in war time Mr. J. Holland Rose has lately made a contribution, which involves a curious point in the history of the Napoleonic war. Mr. Rose, it may be stated, is a competent historical critic, and the author of several works upon modern history. Recently he published a life of Napoleon, which has attracted a good deal of attention. In this work he examined at length Napoleon's commercial war with Britain, and in the current issue of The Monthly Review he places before the public in concise form some of the results of his investigations. The remarkable fact is set forth by Mr. Rose that Napoleon never attempted to starve England out, and that his famous continental system was directed to checking British exports to, but not to checking British imports from, the countries to which it was applied.

At that time Great Britain had a population of about 12 millions. In ordinary years the home harvest yielded grain enough for 49 weeks' supply of this population, and a quantity of wheat amounting to three weeks' supply, or about 5 per cent. of the total consumption, had to be imported. The Baltic countries, more particularly East Prussia and Russia, and New York were the sources from which Great Britain drew this 5 or 6 per cent. of her wheat supply. From 1809 to 1812 the harvests were bad, and the quantity of grain needed amounted to twenty weeks' supply, or about 40 per cent. of the total amount consumed. The chief grain route was from the Baltic through the North Sea, and French privateers to get at it had to slip through the Straits of Dover; the British navy always had a heavy preponderance, and after Trafalgar was the only navy on the sea.

In 1796 the fact that war with France —which was not a source of grain supply—had not affected the price of wheat caused some comment, and William Pitt drew from this the conclusion that war in general did not affect the price of food. Almost immediately afterwards the Armed Neutrality League of the Baltic powers was formed, and 1801 found Great Britain at war with the countries which constituted her European grain supply. By March the price of wheat was $4.75 a bushel! But Nelson won the battle of Copenhagen, and the Tsar Paul was murdered; the Armed Neutrality fell to pieces, peace was restored, trade was resumed—and in June wheat was down to $3.85 a bushel, and in December it was $2.25 a bushel.

In 1809 two things happened. The harvest was bad, and Napoleon had gained virtual control of the Prussian and Russian grainfields, the Baltic counties entering the continental blockade. The close of the year found wheat at 103 shillings a quarter, or about $3.10 a bushel. But in this and the following year an extraordinary turn was given to the situation. Napoleon allowed, and even encouraged, the export of wheat from France and Italy to England. In 1810 sixteen million bushels of wheat were shipped from that part of Europe to England. Yet the price of bread in England was thirty cents a four-pound loaf, and nearly half of the traders of England made compositions with their creditors.

In 1812 the harvests were bad all over Europe, so that the strange windfall from France and Italy was cut off. Napoleon finding it necessary to import wheat into France. Simultaneously war broke out with the United States, the other source of grain supply for England. Wheat rose to $4.50 a bushel, and the best Dantzig wheat fetched $5.45 a bushel. But at the end of 1812 Napoleon's Russian campaign collapsed; in 1813 the eastern Europe granary was open to English ships; there was at last a good harvest at home, and by August, 1813, the price was down to $3.36 a bushel. There had been a fearful social crisis, and the Luddite riots had shown signs of passing into a conflict between the industrial and agricultural portions of the population. The extraordinary price of wheat had greatly increased the area devoted to wheat-growing in England, and this probably furnished the margin which enabled the country to get through the lean years. On the high seas British warships seized neutral ships laden with grain, and forced them to go into British ports.

Why did Napoleon send wheat to his bitterest enemy, which at the moment was, for want of bread, on the brink of a civil war? His idea of crippling England's commerce was to prevent her from exporting, and to encourage her to import. He seems to have believed that the loss of the gold she would pay for the wheat would hurt her more than its incoming would benefit her. His definite, precise instructions to Eugene, Viceroy of Italy, to encourage the export of food to England and elsewhere are quoted by Mr. Rose. A more singular passage of history could scarcely be conceived—the arch-conqueror feeding the starving foe who confounded him!

Proof Positive.

A convict at a French penal settlement, who was undergoing a life sentence, desired to marry a female convict, such marriages being of common occurrence. The governor of the colony offered no objection, but the priest proceeded to cross-examine the prisoner.

"Did you not marry in France?" he asked.

"Yes."

"And your wife is dead?"

"She is."

"Have you any document to show that she is dead?"

"No."

"Then I must decline to marry you. You must produce some proof that your wife is dead."

There was a pause, and the bride prospective looked at the would-be groom.

Finally he said: "I can prove that my former wife is dead."

"How will you do so?"

"I was sent here for killing her."

The bride accepted him notwithstanding.—"Scotsman"

Grass lands deserve as much attention in spring as any other portion of the farm. Grass is really the mainspring of farming, for wherever there is a good stand of grass there will be an excellent prospect for hay, pasturage and soil improvement. Fertilizer should be applied before grass starts, and the spring rains will carry it down to the roots and give the crop an early start, which will greatly assist in enduring drought in the summer. No pasturage or grass plot should be expected to give crops without manure or fertilizer. Wood ashes make an excellent fertilizer for grass, and a light application of nitrate of soda will give good results. If cattle are given the run of a grass plot when the grass is young they will do more harm to the grass by trampling than can result from any other cause. Grass exhausts the soil the same as any other crop, and the land must be supplied with the plant foods removed. If there are bare places in the pasture use the harrow over them and sow mixed varieties of grass seeds.

The widespread interest in the dairy industry is shown by the returns just received by Superintendent Creelman of the new dairy institute meetings in western Ontario. Fourteen gatherings were held, and there was an aggregate attendance of 2,200. Expert instruction was given on the feeding and care of the dairy cow, and on the care, handling and manufacturing of milk. A series of twelve meetings are now in progress in eastern Ontario. Mr. Creelman, as Secretary of the Fruit Growers' Association, has also completed arrangements for 47 fruit institute meetings, covering the fruit sections of the Province, to begin on Friday and last until the middle of April. These will include valuable orchard demonstrations.

A Very Important Business.

Dairying is a very important business, and a herd of good cows is worth more in every respect than any other kind of stock. The bovine is both meat and milk for the human family, without which existence is almost impossible. Note the capacity of each cow and feed accordingly, as some will be found able to pay for better feeding than others. In order to know this, weigh each cow's product; then, knowing what the feed costs, it is a very easy matter to know whether you are feeding at a profit or loss.

Have a silo if possible; if not, then secure an abundance of corn fodder, well cured, with some roots and a good supply of brain, oil meal, corn meal and ground oats. These, with good early cut clover or cowpea hay, will provide a good range of rich milk-producing food. Now, with a warm, well-lighted and properly ventilated stable, with absorbent to save all the manure, both liquid and solid, you are ready to feed your cows for profit. Feed liberally, but not blindly. Weigh and compound a balanced ration.—L. E. Kerr in Agricultural Epitomist.

Keep Hogs Thrifty.

The hog seems to need some earthy or mineral matter to enable it to digest its food well. For this purpose many give salt, wood ashes and charcoal, allowing them to eat it as they please, and they usually are pleased to eat it pretty freely, especially the breeding stock kept over winter, and it has been found by test that fattening hogs put on flesh more rapidly when they can resort to this mixture as they please. It prevents the gravel eating, which sometimes seems to keep them from growing. The Bureau of Animal Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, sends out the following recipe, which we are not sure is any better than the one we give above. Charcoal, sulphur and black antimony, of each one pound, mixed with common salt, baking soda, sulphate of soda, hyposulphite of soda, of each two pounds. If given in the feed, one teaspoonful is allowed daily to each hog. The hogs also need in winter, especially the breeding sows, either roots or green feed of some kind. We think raw roots are better than cooked ones, but if they are not at hand give every day a lock of clover hay. They will always eat it greedily.—American Cultivator.

The Unproductive Cows.

What to do with the unproductive cows is a question that is puzzling many farmers to-day. Much of the stock on hand will not return the value of the feed needed to keep the animals. If the poorer animals of the herd are old cows, which have passed their period of usefulness for the dairy, I would advise selling for what they will bring as second quality beef. Old dairy cows will not return in their final value the cost of the feed necessary to fatten them. Heifers or cows in the prime of life may pay for fattening. This depends on the amount of feed which must be purchased and used in this way.

Homegrown corn and cottonseed meal are the most economical grains to use in fattening. I would advise feeding animals that are being fattened but little coarse fodder, and of this would use the poorer grades, such as second quality hay and corn stover, but would feed liberally of grain for from four to six weeks, and then sell for what the animals will bring.

A grain ration made up of four hundred pounds of corn meal and two hundred pounds of cottonseed meal should produce a rapid gain. This ration should be fed at the rate of from six to ten pounds a day, according to the size of the animal. All animals will gain faster during the early part of the fattening period, but at the present prices of feeds will probably not gain enough to pay for the feed if the fattening process is followed up beyond a certain point. This point can only be accurately ascertained by frequent weighing, but will probably not be later than six weeks after feeding begins.—Prof. C. S. Phelps, in New-England Homestead.

Relics in Jerusalem.

The Greek Catholic monks, who are in possession of the chief portions of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, are now going to build a bazaar opposite it, where pilgrims may purchase souvenirs of their visit to Jerusalem. During the process of clearing the site the foundations of an old mediaeval church, forty meters long and thirty wide, with three apses, were discovered. A number of fine capitals, fragments of basalt pillars, and bas-reliefs, with symbolic animals, were found, all these remains having doubtless belonged to the choir of the church. Last year a valuable silver shrine, containing a piece of the holy cross and relics of the Apostles Peter and Paul—according, at least, to the inscriptions on them—was discovered at the same place.

The Patriarch of Jerusalem, it is said, is keeping other discoveries secret, owing to his dislike of the Roman Catholic Church. Those mentioned above are all the more important, as it can be ascertained to what church they belonged. According to the statement of a mediaeval traveller, the hospice and the monastery which the citizens of Amalfi founded about the year 640, as a refuge for western pilgrims, was situated due south of the Holy Sepulchre, about a stone's throw away. The first church was built in honor of St. Mary de Latinis, and the second, the ruins of which have now been found, in honor of St. John the Baptist. The French monk Bernard, who lived there in 870, highly praised the hospitality and the large library of the hospice. A Mohammedan historian says it was destroyed by the Khalif Hakem, and rebuilt shortly afterwards, while, according to another account, it prospered down to the time of King Baldwin of Jerusalem, from 1109 to 1118, when the two communities of St. Mary and St. John adopted the latter as their joint protector. This was the origin of the Knights of St. John. The remains now discovered, therefore, are the ruins of the cradle of this order. It is most unfortunate that the preservation of these very interesting remains seems impossible, owing to the ill-feeling which exists between the Greek and Roman Catholics in Jerusalem.—London Standard.

A Defence of the "Old Maid."

A toast is offered to the spinster! We meet a great many pleasant people in the world, but nowhere do we find a more satisfactory person than that elderly unmarried woman generally and somewhat disrespectfully known as the "old maid," and supposed to be afflicted with "nerves" and a cantankerous disposition. As a matter of fact, she is frequently the sweetest, most self-forgetful of her sex. She usually walks, with tact and a loving heart, in other women's paths, lives in other women's homes, and rejoices in other women's joys, making them her own. The children adore her, for she becomes to them a sort of fairy godmother, one who possesses all the tenderness of a mother without the extremes of maternal discipline. She loves to give children a "good time," and does it with extraordinary success. In household details, what a treasure! How many dinners owe their success to her, who reaps no glory except the glory of doing! And in the ultimate trials of life, what a prop and solace she becomes! But it is to the young boy-lovers of the family that she exhibits the finest flower of her capacity for friendship. What a gift of understanding she seems to have! There is no difficulty she cannot dissipate, no fear she cannot lessen, no tender little half-scared hope that she does not encourage to bloom for the other woman. It is always for somebody else that she is working, and perhaps it is this which gives to her eyes the look that even the worst among us unconsciously associates with all that is best and fairest in life. Let them make fun of her if they will, but could we do without her?—Harper's Weekly.

Imperial Weather.

SOMEBODY is about to publish a vindication of the character of English weather. It appears that it has been most unfairly misrepresented. What we stupidly call its fickleness is really nothing in the world but a perfectly laudable effort to reproduce in our midst the imperial nature of our climate, remarks "Outlook." When it presents us with primroses in November, that is to remind us of the pleasant picnic weather they are having on the veldt; the same laudable intention accounts for June snowstorms. Nor do we have to wait for complete reversals of the seasons. A week of imperial weather—sometimes, like a cheap trip, it is all crammed into one day—runs somewhat as follows: Monday, fog (home produce); Tuesday, cricketing weather (Australia); Wednesday, skating (Canada); Thursday, waterspouts (various ocean territories); Friday, steaming (West Coast); Saturday, general imperial representation; Sunday—but the British Sunday [illegible]

A Classification.

Henry Thomas Buckle's thoughts and conversation were always on a high level. Once he remarked: "Men and women range themselves into three classes, or orders, of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons; the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things; the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

A Visit to a Saint Factory.

WHAT lends a peculiar interest to a visit to such a factory, writes a contributor to "Pearson's Magazine," is the curious suggestion of humour which, in one's conversation with the workmen and employees, comes to relieve the deep sense of awe and reverence which at all times weighs upon one.

I remember that, having contemplated, not without a painful feeling in my breast, the most lamentable figure of an old man in monk's attire, whose hands were pierced, whose side was pierced, and from whose furrowed brow large drops of blood were trickling down, I asked a passing workman to tell me whom the statue represented. And he called to a fellow-workman: "Who is that old gent up there?" It was St. Francis d'Assisi. The painful feeling was for a while dispelled. This was but a figure after all, an article of trade. And so also, when one hears the clerks calling through the telephones: "When is that St. Maurice coming down?" "Five St. Anthonys, with their pigs, wanted at once." And so on. There is not a vestige of irreverence in these remarks, but, as I say, they are not without a most welcome suggestion of humor.

For, indeed, the terrible realism of many of these statues must impress even the most indifferent. I could not refrain from asking the maker of saints why he allowed his artists to carry the horrible to such extremes. Here was St. Jean de Dieu succoring a leper, on whose body the modeller had not omitted one of the horrid signs of that most foul of maladies. Here was a writhing St. Sebastian streaming with blood. Here a chained woman in the flames of purgatory extended her anguished hands.

"We export very largely to South America," said Monsieur Pacheu, "and it is necessary that, to impress the imaginations of the people there—who are indifferent, as a rule, to suffering—we should strike hard. Yet in none of our figures is truth surpassed. That leper is studied from life. Those horrid bruises were copied from a corpse."

For Farmers.

The fact that last year some crop did not bring good prices is often an indication that this year prices may be high, for the reason that such a crop is liable to be discarded this season for something else. A successful fruit grower once stated that whenever he found his neighbors discarding a crop he invariably selected it for himself, as he expected a scarcity of the crop in market, by reason of less land being devoted to it.

TO DETECT POISONS

The Body Tries to Sweat Them out

At a convention of medical men in St. Louis the effects of coffee drinking were carefully considered. It was unanimously agreed that while coffee does not seem to injure some persons, to others it is a rank poison. The effect on different persons is, of course, very different. In some the heart is affected, in others the kidneys, again the stomach or bowels, or the eyes, and in nervous cases the prostration is spread over the whole body.

As an illustration, a man in Hinton, W. Va., experienced well defined symptoms of poisoning from coffee. He says, "I used coffee a great many years with no apparent ill effects, but about nine years ago I began being sick. I became dull, lost my ambition, had dizziness, my eyesight was very bad and kept getting worse, and at times I could hardly navigate at all, I felt I was going to fall every minute, and finally became so bad I would have to sit down and rest three or four times in a distance of twice that many blocks.

I went from one physician to another and faithfully took their prescriptions but the case was so complex that they could not successfully diagnose it. I finally went to N.Y. City to the Vanderbilt Clinic for treatment. There my case was diagnosed as neurasthenia. Every morning about nine I would have a kind of spasm. The perspiration would break out all over the palms of my hands, and my hair would be wringing wet, every nerve in the body would be affected and my heart would jump and beat at a fearful rate. This condition would generally last for about two hours. What I suffered no one can understand.

It finally came to me that these terrible sweats and spasms were just the same as in cases where people are poisoned and Nature tries to throw off the poison through the pores. So I concluded that something I was taking must act like a poison and I decided it was coffee. I left it off one morning and had a fearful headache all day, a sure sign that I was being held up by a drug, so that evening I bought some Postum and the next morning had it for breakfast in place of coffee. I was surprised for I could hardly tell it from coffee. That day I was only a little sick about the usual time, and from the next day until now, something over 18 months, I have never felt even the remotest return of the spasms.

I steadily got strong, my weight has increased from 130 pounds to 147 pounds and I am a well man. The seven years of suffering from coffee poison will always remain with me as a horrible nightmare." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SALVATION ARMY NOTES

Items of Interest Concerning the Army and Their Work in Peterborough

The local corps have just celebrated their 17th Anniversary. The meetings last Sunday were of this character: Adj't Moore, the officer in command spoke in the afternoon at some length on the progress made. "It scarce seems seventeen years since we "opened fire" in the pretty town of Peterborough, yet so it is, we now number one hundred and thirty five soldiers." He then proceeded to give statistics as to what each soldier cost the army, which was immensely interesting covering as it did the amount of labor as well as cost in dollars and cents.

We notice a great improvement in the brass band. Their music on our streets is very pleasing. It is now under the leadership of Mr. Mendell Greene, senior partner of the firm of Greene Bros. This gentleman states they intend to add several more members and instruments ere he will consider it complete.

Mr. John Haweis has just given the junior work a substantial subscription of $25.00 to purchase new books for the library.

We notice announcements of the visit of the Hand bell Ringers on Tuesday, Apr. 29th. Good! their reputation precedes them, and, no doubt here as elsewhere a packed house will greet them. Brigadier Pickering, of Toronto, is in command. (See photo of him and band in many store windows.) This is a rare musical treat feasible for all to enjoy.

'On the veldt of South Africa' is the subject of Capt. Poole's magic lantern service to-morrow evening (Apr. 29th) African scenes by limelight will certainly be realistic.

People with Bad Breath

Generally suffer from Catarrh and should use Catarrhozone Inhaler four times daily, and be cured. The pleasant scented Catarrhozone vapour spreads through every air passage of the breathing organs, and reaches the very root of the disease at once; it kills the germs, purifies and cleanses the mucous surfaces, and erradicates every vestige of catarrh in a short time.

Pure, sweet breath, free from headache, sneezing and discharge are quickly derived from the use of Catarrhozone Inhaler. Complete outfit, guaranteed to cure, costs $1.00, trial size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

NOTICE TO MANUFACTURERS OF AND DEALERS IN PORTLAND CEMENT

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for Portland Cement" will be received at this office up to sixteen o'clock on Monday, 28th April, 1902, for the supply and delivery of 80,000 barrels, or any portion thereof of Portland Cement on the Trent Canal as per specification.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the same, and further, an accepted bank check for 10 per cent. of the total amount tendered for must accompany the tender. This accepted check must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The accepted check thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By Order.

NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organised in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, will be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 256½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $950,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 35,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $2.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $6.80 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	286,319.88
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock. Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada. Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further Information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

EARL RUSSELL OF DIVORCE COURT FAME

Has Bill Before House of Lords Dealing With Divorce

SOME OF ITS PROVISIONS GIVEN

By It Marriage With a Deceased's Wife Sister Would be Made Legal

Special to The Times.

London, April 25—The divorce bill of Earl Russell, who has had a long series of marital troubles, was introduced in the House of Lords on Wednesday.

The first clause provides that either a man or wife may petition for a dissolution of their marriage, unless connivance is proved, on the grounds of either adultery, cruelty, penal servitude for not less than three years, unsound mind for a year preceding the filing of the petition, living apart for the preceding three years, and not intending to resume cohabitation, or living apart for the preceding year, when the other party concurs in the petition.

Clause 7 provides that after the commencement of the act no petition for a judicial separation or restitution of conjugal rights or respecting jactitation of marriage shall be received.

Clause 16 provides that as soon as a dissolution of marriage is effected the parties may marry again.

Clause 18 provides that marriage with a deceased wife's sister or a deceased husband's brother shall not be invalid by reason of affinity.

EARL RUSSELL'S WOES

In 1890 Earl Russell wedded the daughter of Sir Claude Scott, but in the following year she sued him for divorce, making charges of cruelty and other offences of a serious character. The charges created a great scandal. The Countess was unsuccessful in her suit and she was compelled to pay the costs which it is said amounted to over $25,000. Her mother, Lady Scott, was afterwards convicted and imprisoned for libelling the Earl, and the Countess was convicted of libelling H. A. Roberts, a master of Bath College, who was mentioned in the charge she made against her husband.

Five years ago the Countess withdrew the charges she had made against her husband and sued for restitution of conjugal rights. In this suit she was also unsuccessful. She then adopted the stage as a profession. In April, 1900, Lord Russell married Mollie Somerville Cooke, at Reno, Nevada. Earl Russell returned to England last year and was arrested for Bigamy. He was tried by the House of Lords, convicted and sentenced to three months in Holloway gaol, which he served. The first Countess Russell then secured a divorce, and on October 31 last Earl Russell remarried Mollie Somerville.

NEW RAILWAY RULES

How an American Railway Company Has Set the Pace

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 25 — Courtesy will hereafter characterize the conduct of trainmen on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, if the new regulations adopted by that road for the guidance of its employees are obeyed. Conductors and brakemen must remove their hats when passing through parlor cars and dining cars. They must answer the enquiries of passengers promptly and cheerfully. "Coarse and vulgar language from anyone employed on this road is prohibited, under the penalty of prompt dismissal." Trainmen must assist, or at least offer assistance, to all passengers when they alight at stations.

The drawling of words, so common to the vernacular of railroad employees when making such announcements as "All aboard!" is to be done away with. Passengers must never be ejected "except at a regular open station." Women, or "Children of tender age," are not to be "put off" under any circumstances; and a person travelling alone who is "in such a condition of mind and body as to be incapable of caring for himself must be placed in the custody of the nearest station agent." A brakeman is required to pass through every car of a train before it leaves its terminus and call out distinctly the names of all the stations on that line; and when approaching a station its name must be announced from each end of a car.

The new regulations go further and prescribe that a passenger train shall be called a "train of superior class," that a freight shall be known as a "second class train," that a side track shall be no longer denominated as a "siding," but as an "auxiliary," that engineers shall be called "engine men," and that the term "engine house" shall supersede the old name of "roundhouse."

The general manager and general superintendent of the road, who framed the rules, have caused the following injunction to be printed conspicuously on over 50 of the 135 pages which the book contains: "In case of doubt, adopt the safe course. Speed must always be sacrificed for safety."

HIS ENTERPRISING UNCLE

How a Peterborough Man Badly Missed a Good Thing

"I'm sorry I didn't stay with my uncle in New York," said a well known citizen to Mr. James Dolan, our enterprising and progressive dry goods merchant, when the latter refused him a job as clerk in his new store.

"Why?" asked Mr. Dolan, in a sympathetic tone.

"Oh, I'd been rich now," said the disappointed aspirant to the clerkship. "My uncle has one of the biggest saloon businesses in New York state. He kept forty men busy every day making mallets for tapping beer kegs. He runs five distilleries in connection with his saloon. His saloon is situated in a tract of 250 acres. In the centre of this tract is a fresh water lake that covers ten acres. Every morning he dumps ten car loads of sliced lemons into the lake and one car load of sugar, to make lemonade."

"How does he stir it?" asked Mr. D., becoming greatly interested.

"Why, he has three mules hitched to one of these big wheels they use in brickyards for stirring up the mud. He drives the mules through the lake and they stir up the mixture."

After the applicant had gone, Mr. Martin Connors, who was standing by and overheard the conversation, asked, "What is the matter with him?"

"Nothing," said Mr. Dolan, "except that he is not telling the truth."

Malt Breakfast Food

THE ONLY CEREAL FOOD THAT PERFECTLY AGREES WITH STOMACHS STRONG OR WEAK

The pre-eminent qualities of Malt Breakfast Food are the result of the action of the pure, health giving malt on the starch and gluten of the wheat, rendering them soluble and changing them into forms to be quickly absorbed by the stomach, then passing into the blood to enrich it and build up the nerves, the tissues, of the body and brain.

Malt Breakfast Food being quite free from starchy ingredients, requires no digestive effort or loss of bodily energy. It is delicious, comforting and soothing to the stomach of child or adult. WILL SHIPPING COMBINE COERCE CANADA

Rumor in London That It Wants to Handle All the Emigration

THREATENS COMMERCIAL WAR.

Would Buy Up the Canadian Railways and Play with Us Generally

Special to The Times.

London, April 25.—The Daily Express declares that the shipping combine is trying to coerce Canada into accepting its terms and conditions as to emigration rates and traffic, and that, if resistance is made, the combine will buy up the Canadian railroads and declare a commercial war.

It is the intention of the combine, says the Daily Express, to demand that the Canadian Emigration Department in London should cease to give facilities to the Elder, Dempster Company.

COLONEL DENISON'S PROPOSAL.

Colonel Denison fears that the trust will buy up the Canadian Pacific Railway, and thereby control all lines that could possibly feed the shipping. He says British policy should be to run a competing line, tax everything the combine vessels bring into this country, and let the things that the other line brings come in free.

TO FLY AMERICAN FLAG.

The Daily Mail publishes a statement this morning to the effect that the promoters of the new shipping combination will announce in a few days that the arrangement is one for mutual commercial convenience, and has no special national significance. At the same time the Daily Mail professes to know that the vessels of British lines which have been taken over will pass under the American flag after three or four years. It talks of a new shipping bill, which will be promoted in the United States Congress, with the object of permitting vessels built abroad but owned in America to be brought under the American flag, and quotes one of the promoters as saying that, apart from sailing vessels, private yachts, and the navy, the British flag will at the end of a few years have disappeared from the North Atlantic.

Shipping men consider that undue excitement has been caused by newspapers, and that the flag will remain over all British ships now in the trans-atlantic trade. They also contend that one combination will be met by another, for British capitalists, with the Admiralty behind them, will not allow the control of the merchant marine to pass into foreign hands. Without doubt there is a strong patriotic feeling in favor of a vigorous defence of British maritime interests against the grip of a money power.

WHAT THE TORONTO STAR SAYS

In Reference to the Street Railway and Another Industry for Peterborough

From Toronto Star.

Peterborough, April 24.— The Peterboro Street Railway, which was built by the Edison Company when the electric works were established here, and which was afterwards acquired by the Peterboro and Ashburnham Street Railway Company, was sold yesterday afternoon to a Detroit syndicate. The line has not been operated for a couple of years, but will be put in first class shape by July 1st. Branch lines will also be operated to nearby summer resorts, including Chemong Park, Lakefield and Rice Lake.

The big cereal works are being got into good shape. The building is eight storeys in height, and of mammoth proportions otherwise.

Another large American cereal company is in negotiation with Mr. J. Alex. Culverwell, of the Central Ontario Power Company, regarding the building of a branch factory here. The company whose factory is now here will fill its European orders from this city, and it is said the new company's main object in locating in Canada is to secure the advantage of the preference which may be given by Great Britain to Canadian food products.

SHOULD MINISTERS SHAVE?

Presbyterian Pastors Engage in a Discussion of the Question

Pittsburg, Pa., April 25 — Should a minister wear whiskers after his beard becomes gray? was a question which arose at to-day's session of the Presbyterian Ministerial Association. Rev. Mr. Sherrard held that a minister should remain young in appearance as long as possible, and that this is almost impossible when the face is covered with long white hair. Once he was invited to preach a trial sermon. He was entertained over Sunday at the home of one of the congregation and almost the first question asked him was in regard to his age. In a joking manner he replied that he was over 40, when, as a matter of fact, he was 52. Mr. Sherrard said he believed one of the reasons why he was called to the charge was on account of his not having a beard.

Then the bearded men took up the defence. Rev. Dr. Dunlap Moore said the face had little to do with the man. He did not know but that few Apostles ever shaved, he said, and Christ has always been pictured to us with a beard. While in India Dr. Moore shaved daily, and the Mohammedans often questioned him in regard to his hairless face. He found that the beard had secured the respect of the Mohammedans, and, therefore, he allowed his to grow. He referred to the beardless man as resembling woman.

PLAN TO FIGHT TRUST

He Would Have Britain Tax All Goods by Combine's Vessel

Special to The Times.

London, April 25.—The Daily Express publishes two flaring columns under the heading "Splitting the Empire," "Morgan Trust to Control Canada." It alleges that Canada will be coerced to accept the terms of the trust, its immigrant rates will be fixed, and they will be compelled to travel on the steamers of the trust. Failing this, commercial war will be declared. The Express anticipates the trust will control the Canada Pacific, securing absolute command of Canadian ports and railways.

Other alarmist reports are elaborated, apparently on the authority of Col. Denison, who urges the British and Canadian Governments to run a competing line, and tax everything the trust vessels bring, and British letting everything the Anglo-Canadian line brings enter free.

KING'S BIRTHDAY

Government to Introduce Bill to Recognize Two Holidays on One Day

The government has decided to introduce a bill at the present session providing for the celebration of the King's birthday on May 24th, Victoria Day.

King Edward's birthday is November 9th, but Thanksgiving Day usually takes place that month and the official view is that it would be most inconvenient to have another holiday in November. In England the King's birthday will be celebrated on May 30th, but it is deemed better that Canadians should take advantage of the holiday already fixed by statute for the 24th. George the third's birthday was June 4th. This continued to be observed in Canada as the sovereign's birthday throughout the reign of George IV and William IV. It is likely that June 26th will be proclaimed as a holiday in honor of the coronation of King Edward.

Follow the Example of the Millions of Women Now Now Use

DIAMOND DYES

It is safe to follow the example of the millions of wise women, who have made the Diamond Dyes their chosen and only dyes for home coloring. The faith of all is so firmly established in the excellence of the Diamond Dyes that they would not use any other make, even if they were given the common and imitation dyes free of cost. Valuable goods and garments should not be risked with poor and untried dyes. Ruin, loss of money and bad temper is the sure result.

Mrs. R. F. Swalwell, 108 Harris st., Vancouver, B.C., says: "I have used a great many of the Diamond Dyes and have always had most satisfactory results. I have dyed silks, dresses, men's clothes, curtains and any quantity of wool goods to my entire satisfaction."

Despised Even by Brute

"I've worked around animals more or less all my life," said a well known livery man, "and I have noticed particularly the effect that a drunken man has on them. A horse hates a man with a jag worse than the devil hates holy water, but a dog seems to feel that a drunk isn't responsible for himself and acts accordingly. A dog, no matter how fierce he is, will never bite a drunken man. He seems to know by instinct when a man is under the weather, and treats him much as he would treat a child. But with a horse it's different. A horse treats a drunken man with contempt—doesn't want to have anything to do with him. There used to be an old bum who loafed around the stables, and who somehow or other always managed to keep loaded up to the nozzle. Some nights he would creep into a stall and go to sleep in the straw. The horses, when they finished at night would always be ready to drop in their stalls, but I never knew a horse that would sleep with the bum. Rather than lie down alongside him the horse would stand up all night."

THE COUNCIL AND THE ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Many Reasons Why the Franchise Should be Transferred

RAILWAY GREATLY NEEDED

Leading Citizens Favor a Thirty Year Franchise to the Company

The Company will Then be in a Position to Handle its Bonds to Advantage

The citizens of Peterborough are delighted at the prospect of having the street railway resurrected and put in first class shape. On all sides one hears nothing but words of commendation of the scheme, which is sure to play an important part in the development of our town and district. The extension of the road to Chemong and Lakefield will be a good thing for the town, and will do much to develop and popularize Peterborough as a summer resort. The fact that lines of railway are to be constructed to outlying points without one cent of municipal aid and costing the town absolutely nothing is too good a thing to contemplate without intense satisfaction. It is more than likely that besides Chemong, Lakefield and Young's Point, the road will eventually reach out in other directions—probably down the old Cobourg track to Hiawatha, to Keene, and other places within a close radius of Peterborough. But better than all, there would doubtless be an effort made to continue the line from Young's Point to Burleigh Falls and thence to Apsley, bringing the whole back country our way.

The Times, in order to strengthen the hands of the Council has interviewed a few of the leading citizens with regard to granting the thirty years' extension asked for.

Mr. D. W. Dumble thought that the town should help the Company in every possible way.

Other places bonused railways in order to bring trade and develop the town. In our case the road was being built to outside points without costing us a dollar. He was strongly in favor of granting the thirty year franchise.

Mr. W. A. Cressman was satisfied that the council would be making a big mistake if it was to hamper the Company in any way. He is of the opinion that a good electric railway to outlying points would naturally help business.

Mr. A. Poussette, K.C., said: "I have for several years interested myself very considerably in an endeavor to revive the railway, and am pleased to learn that a contract for its sale has been made to substantial people. I am satisfied that the town should grant a thirty year franchise as no shorter term would enable the purchasers to float bonds for the enlarged scheme proposed. Great credit is due to Mayor Denne for bringing the negotiations to a successful issue, and it is now for him and the Council to see that the sale is not prevented going through."

Mr. James Dolan was delighted with the prospects of getting an up-to-date electric railway. It would help business and do much for the town. He was in favor of giving them all the privileges they desired in the way of street franchise.

Mr. H. LeBrun believed in railways, and especially in electric roads running into outlying villages. As for the thirty-year franchise, he thought the Council should not object to this, as half this time would probably elapse before the investment paid.

Mr. R. B. McKee said he believed Peterborough was particularly lucky in getting American capital interested. He thought the council should do everything in its power to help the Company, and secure an early start.

—Mr. H. C. Winch thought we were exceedingly fortunate in having the old buried railway so gloriously resurrected. He believed the opening of the railway to Chemong, Lakefield and Young's Point would mark an era in the town's history. The franchise was none too long, considering what was to be undertaken.

Mr. J. M. Brooks said that the Oshawa Council, of which he was a member at the time, not only gave the electric railway a street franchise, but also gave a bonus of $600. Peterborough would indeed be making a big mistake in placing any obstacles in the way of the present negotiations for a 30 year franchise.

Mr. W. H. Meldrum was in favor of meeting the wishes of the new Company as far as possible consistent with our own interests. He thought that with the present rate of increase in population, an electric railway would be a paying investment in five years' time. Twenty years, he thought, would be a reasonable time for the franchise to run. Proper conditions should be inserted in the contract as regards keeping the roadbed in order.

Mr. Chas Stanley was anxious to see the railway again in operation, and believed the new owners are the people to give us a first class road. The town had everything to gain and nothing to lose. He would not object to a 30 year franchise so long as the company gave us a good service.

Dr. Halliday thought the Company should be given a 30-year franchise, as it probably would be many years before the railway was made to pay. A good electric street car service was much to be desired, and he was very pleased to hear that we were likely to secure one.

Items of Interest

London, April 25.—Fifty persons were injured this morning in an accident on the Great Eastern Railway near the Hackney Downs station. As a train for Walthamstow called the "three penny train" was crossing the bridge an axle of the car nearest the locomotive broke, and the coach jumped the rails, crashed into the side of the bridge and lodged across both tracks. The train was filled with persons on their way to work.

The two coaches following the stranded car crashed into it, completing the wreck and dealing awful havoc among the passengers [illegible] therein.

The second car also was wrecked, and a number of its inmates were badly hurt. The injured were taken to the hospital.

DEVELOPING RUSSIAN TRADE.

London, April 25.—Prince Scherbatoff, who has arrived in London for the purpose of establishing closer direct Anglo-Russian trade relations, was yesterday interviewed by a representative of Reuter's Agency. "The main fact I wish to emphasize," said he, "are that there are 12,000,000 householders in Russia who are interested in finding a market for the surplus agricultural production of that country, and that there are 4,000,000 householders in Great Britain who are interested in finding markets for English manufactured goods.

"If you take into consideration the development of Russia and the increase of the population, I am quite sure that in thirty years the actual consumption now to £151,000,000 would rise to £3,000,000,000. It will be England's fault if she allows this market to slip from her hands."

CRITICIZED BY LORD ROBERTS.

London, April 25.—Some candid criticism on the efficiency shown last year by the regular practice is to be found in a memorandum just issued by Lord Roberts.

The Commander-in-Chief refrains from enumerating certain units in which the results were bad, but significantly remarks that "the names of the officials commanding these units have been noted, and this fact will be taken into account in considering their future advancement in the army."

In regard to the regular army, Lord Roberts insists upon effeciency in musketry practice in officers, both commissioned, and upon increased attention to the training of recruits, while he emphasizes the necessity of training soldiers to use their own intelligence and judgment.

NEW OIL ENGINE.

London, April 25.—Messrs. Thornycroft, the well-known ship-builders of Chiswick, are experimenting with a new oil engine which may not only revolutionize private yacht propulsion, but may also effect a remarkable change in the adaptability and allround efficiency in the smaller craft of our navy. Messrs. Thornycroft point out the advantages of the motor for navy cutters and similar craft no less than for private yachts, and are building a special steel cutter in which to make experiments. The oil motor occupies certainly not more than half the space of the steam engine. Power can be developed in ten minutes, where half an hour would be required for steam, and the oil fuel that can be carried will last twice the time that coal will.

LORD O'BRIEN ADVENTURE.

London, April 25.—Lord Chief Justice O'Brien has had a remarkable experience at the Ennis Assizes. His coachman had to give evidence before another Judge in a different part of the building. Leaving his magnificent livery hat on the coach-box, the servant handed over his horses to the charge of a ragged little urchin, and departed. The chief justice rose rather early, was ushered out to his carriage, and took his seat without noticing that the coachman was absent. The escort drew their swords, the trumpeter blew his trumpet, and the carriage, states The Freeman's Journal, drove away to his Lordship's lodgings. His Lordship could not understand the rapidity of the peace or the roars of laughter of the spectators, till, on alighting, he discovered that he had been driven by the tattered urchin, who was wearing the coachman's resplendent hat.

London, April 25.—Lord Roberts has given orders that all reservists of cavalry, infantry and army service corps who are at present on "working furlough" are at once to be recalled to regimental duty. Immediately on their return they are to be medically examined, and if fit for foreign service they are to embark for South Africa with the next regimental draft. If not medically fit they are to be discharged. By this means it is hoped that a considerable waste of money will be averted. There have been for over two years a large number of men who, though nominally effective reservists, have been medically unfit for service abroad whenever mobilized. These men, although they have had nothing to do, have since the war started been in receipt of their full regimental pay and 6d. a day furlough money in addition.

FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE DAIRY.

London, April 25.—The Warwickshire Farmers' Association have established at Coventry a co-operative dairy for dealing with large supplies of milk direct from the farmer. They have acquired what was formerly a cycle factory, and this has been equipped with the most modern machinery for pasteurizing and sterilizing milk. Each farmer becomes a shareholder in proportion to the quantity of milk supplied.

Napanee, April 25.—Word was received here this morning from Phoenix, Arizona announcing the death of Mr. John A. Shibley, business manager of the well known firm of Dean & Shibley, bankers, promoters and financial agents of New York city and Providence, R.I., The late Mr. Shibley was one of the most successful young Canadians in the States. He was born in 1866, near the Village of Wilton, Addington County. He went to the States in the early nineties, and aided solely by his own energies and abilities, became at thirty-three years of age a millionaire. Three years ago Mr. Shibley purchased a summer residence in Napanee, where he has since spent much of his time. His large handed donations for benevolent purposes have been the talk of town and country. Last summer and the preceding summer all the children of the Counties of Lennox and Addington and of the surrounding towns were invited to the Napanee Park, where several thousand of them were royally entertained at Mr. Shibley's expense. Death was due to tuberculosis. The remains, accompanied by Mrs. Shibley, valet and nurse, will be sent here on Monday for interment.

A Splendid Investment

The advertisement in this issue, referring to the offer of preference stock of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, calls attention to the rapid development of one of Canada's most important resources. The President, Mr. Edwards, is a wealthy and far-seeing business man, and one of the Directors is Mr. Waterous, of Brantford. The location of the works is on the Bay of Chaleurs, where there is an unlimited supply of wood and a fine water power, and whence the shipping facilities to all parts of the world are excellent. The stock offered for sale will pay 7 per cent., and there should be no difficulty in earning it, under such careful management as there is every reason to expect from the men who have the enterprise under their control.

CHINESE SOLDIERS DEFEAT REBELS

A BIG FIGHT NEAR NAN NING

Later the Rebels Took Two Villages and Established Their Headquarters

Special to The Times.

Hong Kong, April 25.—Advices received here to-day from Wu Chou, under date of Tuesday, April 22 announce that a bloody battle was then proceeding between a force of imperial troops on their way to Nan Ning and a large force of rebels. The imperial army attacked the rebels' encampment in the Wu Chang hills, brought up two maxims and two twelve pounders, and finally scattered the rebels and captured their leader, Hung Yung Seng, who was wounded.

Subsequently the rebels captured two villages on the outskirts of Nan Ning, and established their headquarters in these villages.

ABOUT WEALTHY CHILDREN

A Citizen who Thinks that they Miss a Lot of Fun

Yesterday a well known gentleman about town entered the Times' sanctum, and, seating himself on an easy chair, began to expound some theories to the editor of this great family journal. Our new office boy, who is no paragon of cleanliness and beauty, attracted his attention, and he said:

"Our wealthy children are disreputably clean. They are little patterns of anemic primness. They exist merely for their clothes. A good roll in the mud is what they need. Mud pies, that blessed institution of happy, normal children, would be their salvation.

"A plush civilization is not the one for children. The home on whose walls the pictures are crying out for space is not the home for children. Parents must decide whether the upholsterer, the tailor or the child shall rule the home."

And this g.f.j., cordially endorses the above deductions, which are based on good square common sense.

WEDDING BELLS

Nuptials of Miss A. K. Shaw and Mr. C. F. DeMill

A very pretty wedding took place on Thursday evening last, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Major, Rubidge street. The contracting parties were Miss Amey Kathleen Shaw, of Bedford, England and Mr. Charles Fremont DeMill of the Canadian General Electric Co., and formerly of Hamilton Ont.

The bridal party entered the drawing-room at eight o'clock to the strains of the wedding march, which was played by Miss May Koster. The bride wore a most becoming gown of crepe-de-chene draped with applique and the bride's maid, Miss L. Koster, looked charming in a pretty suit trimmed with over applique. Mr. R. Cottrell performed the duties of best man and ably supported the groom.

Rev. J. G. Potter, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was the officiating minister. After the wedding ceremony was performed, all united in giving Mr. and Mrs. DeMill their heartiest best wishes for future success and happiness. A sumptuous wedding dejeuner was then partaken of in the dining room which was prettily decorated for the occasion.

During the evening a programme of songs, recitations etc. was pleasingly rendered by those present.

The high esteem in which the bride is held by her many friends is evidenced by the numerous, costly presents she was the recipient of.

The Times unites in wishing Mr. and Mrs. DeMill a full measure of happiness and success to crown their every undertaking.

After Long Years of Mental and Physical Sufferings and Failures With Common Medicines

Paine's Celery Compound

Cures an Ontario Lady

THE GREAT REMEDY IS HEARTILY INDORSED BY THE ABLEST PHYSICIANS, WHO DAILY RECOMMEND ITS USE

What a blessing it would be to humanity in general if all suffering men and women knew just what Paine's Celery Compound is able to do.

The work that cannot be done for the sick and suffering by months of experimenting with the common medicines of the day, is successfully carried to victory by Paine's Celery Compound in a few short weeks.

The cure of Mrs. Hopper, of Thornhill, Ont., fully proves the assertion made above. After years of failures, misery, agony and despondency, Paine's Celery Compound made a "new woman" of one who had become a mere wreck—one who was fast nearing the grave.

Have faith sufferer! You have a strong deliverer at hand able to rescue and save you. From to-day, let your hope be centred in Paine's Celery Compound and its mighty power to cure. It has never disappointed any sufferer; it will not fail in your case. Read Mrs. Hopper's wonderful and striking testimony.

"With great pleasure and satisfaction I wish to add my testimony to what had already been said in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. For a very long time I suffered from general debility and rundown system. Having heard of Paine's Celery Compound, I determined to give it a trial, and I am happy to say it has done for me more good than I can express. For ten years I doctored without any good results, but after using Paine's Celery Compound I am perfectly restored to health, can eat well, digestion is good, and my sleep is sweet and sound. Altogether I am a new woman. I always recommend Paine's Celery Compound to my friends.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Some of the advanced ladies of the United States are rather opposed to the idea of having the Government put Martha Washington's portrait on a postage stamp. They say that there are lots of women who have done something, while all this lady did was to be Mrs. Washington. Yet, even without the postage stamp reminder, the face of the pleasant looking lady who led a simple home life, and was only Mrs. Washington, will be remembered generations after the founders of a sect, the leaders of a great movement, have been forgotten.

A gentleman in Connecticut has started a movement for purchasing the Holy Land by Christian people. While the Moslem has control of it he will allow all Christians to see it and prevent them fighting over its possession. The Monroe doctrine would interfere with annexing it to the United States, and no one European country would consent to its becoming part of any other European country. Better leave it in the hands of the infidel to see fair play.

The Toronto World says the Deerings of Chicago "see what is in the wind—that the Canadian tariff is bound to be increased—and so these enterprising Americans are making a move to hold their Canadian business. One good turn of the Canadian tariff screw would bring the McCormicks and others into Canada, in order to hold their business." And that turn of the screw would raise the cost of implements to the Canadian farmer and to that extent would discourage the development of Canada's most important industry. This country is going to be well supplied with implement factories under the present 20 per cent. tariff. The Massey-Harris people manage to get three square meals a day out of their profits; the Deerings will do the same, and if the McCormicks do not want to come in, Canada will be very glad to pocket the customs duty on all the machines they make in the United States and sell in Canada. Cannot the World let well alone? What spite has it against the Canadian farmer?

Man as an Incarnation.

PEOPLE of a materialistic frame of mind, to whom man is but a machine, says an editorial writer in the "Hospital," are apt to put on one side all that cannot be weighed and measured as not only inexplicable or unthinkable, but as quite beyond the range of reasonable discussion. Such people are advised to attend a meeting of the Society for Psychical Research for "a change of scene." What they will see is thus described:

"There they will find people, quite as convinced as they are of their own sanity, and quite as content as they can possibly be with the correctness of their own interpretation of things, asserting the most astounding propositions, without turning a hair. To those who are so self-centered as to think that there is something cranky about all who do not see as they do, it is a wholesome awakening to find good, solid, comfortable, and respectable people believing in telepathy as a thing indisputable, and holding that man, as we see him engaged in his various more or less ignoble pursuits, in the city and elsewhere, is but the incarnation of one little bit of himself as he exists in an intangible and ethereal form. At the last meeting of the Psychical Research Society, Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., said that he did not hold that the whole of any one of us was incarnated in their terrestrial bodies; certainly not in childhood; more, but perhaps not so very much more, in adult life. What was manifest was only a definite portion of a much larger whole. What the rest was doing during the years spent here he did not know. Perhaps it was asleep; but probably, he said, it was not entirely asleep with men of genius, nor perhaps was it all completely inactive with people called mediums. Now to the modern materialist all this is absolute 'rot.' Yet Dr. Lodge is not exactly a man to pooh-pooh. Indeed, may not the immaterialists retort that this is a Christian country and that our very religion teaches us not to weigh and measure too exactly? Again, Roentgen, Tesla, and Marconi have of late been giving many shocks to old ideas. At any rate, this is clear, that we must not too rigidly put outside the bounds of sanity belief in the unthinkable. It is a queer world, and which half of it is sane appears still undecided."

A SIMPLE FAITH.

SERMON BY
GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

Ye believe in God, believe also in me.—St. John xiv., 1.

What is absolutely essential in religion, so far as doctrine is concerned, is very little and very simple. The church has for a long time had a strange notion that in order to be saved a man must believe a long list of dogmas, whereas the only condition imposed by the Christ is that a man shall have a heart and a life full of love which lifts someone's burden whenever the chance occurs, and seek the strength to do it from Him who is Father to all alike.

There is this difference between what is called "a body of doctrine" and a spiritual principle, namely, that not everybody can either understand or accept the doctrine, while no man is so unlettered or so obtuse that he need fail to do what is right because he is in doubt about it. The road to heaven is not a tangled maze of statement about Christ or God, but a straight and open path from the trusting human heart to the immortal life, a path in which the little child and the grave philosopher may hand in hand wend their way with equal pleasure and profit.

You need corner-stones if you erect a building, and for a like reason you need certain beliefs if you make for yourself a character. Faith in a God who will never desert you stands first. It must be an unflinching faith, however, or it will give way in the time of emergency. You begin well when you begin with that, and you begin ill if you begin in any other fashion.

I have a queer suspicion that the faith in the ability or willingness of God to see us safely through all earthly experience is clouded by more or less doubt. It is a matter which we keep to ourselves, but deep down in the heart is a wonder whether this beautiful something which we call religion can be relied upon as firmly, for instance, as the sea captain relies on his compass in a storm. Hence the despair which we find when death comes into the house, and hence our weakness when a bold and insolent temptation assails us. We are not thoroughly convinced, and, though we hope that God is there and does hear us when we cry, we have a doubt which seizes us like a sudden throb of agony.

That is not religion; it is only the simulation of it. It is a staff of willow, not a staff of oak. It serves in good weather, but in the tempest it fails us. When Davy invented his wire gauze lamp as a protection against the explosive fire damp in mines the workmen looked at it and shook their heads. It was too simple to be worth much. But Davy had faith in his lamp. He lighted the candle, went into the bowels of the earth, sought the spot where fire damp lay in ambush and exposed himself to the danger. He had not only a theory, but a conviction. He would trust his life to it. No test could be too severe. He felt absolutely safe with that lantern in his hand.

That is the kind of faith we want if our lives are to become heroic. And when we are possessed of it we have something else besides. Faith in God produces faith that our earthly experiences are our discipline and our preparation. The moment you see God as your Father duty becomes not only clear and distinct, but easy. Alone you can bear but little, but with the infinite reservoir of power and love to draw from you are equal to whatever your position may be. If God is with you, then the angels who do His bidding will be your companions. You become one of the great family and will be consciously helped by unseen hands over the rough places. And this consciousness will grow clearer as your faith increases, until in the end there will be only a thin veil between you and the other world. You will live in the friendship of the departed as you live in that of the dear ones in your household. The Christ realized this, but we are yet dull of hearing and dim of sight.

Immortality will become not a vague hope or even a reasonable belief, but a demonstrable certainty, and you will live in the two worlds at the same time. Your last hour will find you with a smile on your lips and a great gladness in your heart. You will eagerly step out of a tired body to be welcomed by those who await your coming.

That is the kind of religion which men long for, and which they will have when they wake up from this half belief and this make believe to a realization of the glorious truth. It was Christ's religion, and it is our own fault if we do not make it ours.

Anecdotal.

After one of his trips to the Emerald Isle Foote was praising the hospitality of the Irish, when a gentleman asked him whether he had been at Cork. "No, sir," answered Foote, "but I have seen many drawings of it."

Disraeli once said of Sir William Harcourt in his affectedly cynical way: "He has the three essential qualifications of success in politics—a fine person, a loud voice, and no principles." To this, when it was repeated to him, Harcourt rejoined: "Leaving out the first two qualifications, it might almost be applied to 'Dizzy' himself."

Tradition ascribes to the second Pitt the dying words: "O, my country—my country! How I leave my country!" What, in fact, Pitt said was: "I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork-pies." Which he did—and straightway expired, to the intense grief of the nation. This version is attested by the head-waiter of "Bellamy's" (likewise deceased), who told it to Mr. Disraeli.

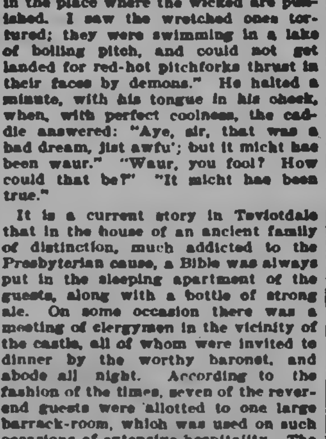
Louis XIV. was told that Lord Stair was one of the best-bred men in Europe. "I shall soon put him to the test," said the king; and asking Lord Stair to take an airing with him, as soon as the door of the coach was opened, he bade him pass and get in. The other bowed and obeyed. The king said: "The world is in the right in the character it gives—another person would have troubled me with ceremony."

When, a few years ago, the King of Portugal was a guest at Lord Salisbury's country seat, the Prince of Wales—now King Edward—asked King Carlos what had impressed him most during his stay in England. "English roast beef is very delightful," was the reply. "Oh," said the Prince, "surely something else has impressed you as well." "Ah, yes," returned Carlos; "of course, there is English boiled beef, which is also delightful."

A commercial traveler well known in the cycle trade adds this to the collection of jokes on newly made happy fathers: The hero is the manufacturer of the wheel which the narrator sells. Being compelled to go away on a business trip about the time an interesting domestic event was expected, he left orders for the nurse to wire him results according to the following formula: If a boy, "Gentleman's safety arrived." If a girl, "Lady's safety arrived." The father's state of mind may be imagined when, a few days later, he received a telegram containing the one word: "Tandem."

A certain Scotch caddie named Mathie Gorum was noted for his invariable remark after a poor shot by the person he was serving: "It micht hae been waur," which was meant to be consolatory and encouraging. His master, a clergyman, was wearied with this well-meaning flattery. Accordingly, to make sure that he would squash the remark for once, he told the caddie he had a terrible dream the night before. "Mathie, my man, I dreamt that I was in the place where the wicked are punished. I saw the wretched ones tortured; they were swimming in a lake of boiling pitch, and could not get landed for red-hot pitchforks thrust in their faces by demons." He halted a minute, with his tongue in his cheek, when, with perfect coolness, the caddie answered: "Aye, sir, that was a bad dream, jist awfu'; but it micht hae been waur." "Waur, you fool? How could that be?" "It micht hae been true."

It is a current story in Teviotdale that in the house of an ancient family of distinction, much addicted to the Presbyterian cause, a Bible was always put in the sleeping apartment of the guests, along with a bottle of strong ale. On some occasion there was a meeting of clergymen in the vicinity of the castle, all of whom were invited to dinner by the worthy baronet, and abode all night. According to the fashion of the times, seven of the reverend guests were allotted to one large barrack-room, which was used on such occasions of extensive hospitality. The butler took care that the divines were presented each with a Bible and a bottle of ale. But, after a little consultation among themselves, they are said to have recalled the domestic as he was leaving the apartment. "My friend," said one of the venerable guests, "you must know when we meet together as brethren the youngest man reads aloud a portion of Scripture to the rest; only one Bible, therefore, is necessary. Take away the other six, and, in their place, bring six more bottles of ale."



"Now, James, please remember: Left hand—Eggs, poultry, three yards of silk to match my skirt, lining for Mamie's dress, and a new reefer for George. Right hand—Nellie's ribbons, Harry's algebra, telephone message to Henry, a box of starch, and my new bonnet. Say them over as you go to town."—"Harper's Weekly."

Sue Brette—How do you know the gallery gods threw eggs at you? Ham Lette—How do I know? Ye gods, didn't I catch them in the act?—Chicago "News."

A visitor to a farm was especially struck by the great ruggedness and strength of one of the stalwart harvest hands, and said to the farmer: "That fellow ought to be chuck-full of work." "He is," replied the farmer, "or he ought to be, because I hain't never been able to get none out of him."—From "Success."

"I see that Mrs. Uptardeight is addressing the Mothers' Scientific Club this afternoon on The Care of Children." "Speaking of children, who was that youngster that broke into Snoop's candy store last night and robbed the till?" "That—why, that was Mrs. Uptardeight's youngest."—Baltimore "News."

IT'S CHILD'S PLAY

To treat a woman for a disease year after year and give her no permanent relief. Yet that has been the case with scores of women who have "doctored" for year after year unhelped and unhealed, to find at last that a few bottles of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription would have saved years of suffering and a great deal of money.

For the regulation of the periods, the stopping of disagreeable drains, the healing of inflammation and ulceration, and the cure of female weakness, there is no medicine can equal Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"About five years ago I had very poor health," writes Mrs. S. R. Whalen, of Holden, Johnson Co., Missouri. "After doctoring four years with our town doctors they gave my case up; said they had done all they could. I had been confined to my bed half my time; the other half could hardly drag around. I had such pains in my back and abdomen I could not stand for more than a few minutes. My feet were cold or burning, and my periods came too often. The doctors said it was change of life, so, as I had heard of Dr. Pierce's medicines, my husband got me a bottle of 'Favorite Prescription.' I took it and it helped me in some ways, so I wrote to you and followed your advice. I commenced 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the 'Pellets,' as I was so constipated all the time and pills would weaken me so that I would have to go to bed. To the great surprise of everybody I got well, and when I met my friends they would say, 'We never thought you would be here now.' But I can say it was your medicine, which no doubt is the best in the world. Have had no use for doctors since I tried your medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's Tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvellous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

CURE YOURSELF!

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 13 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 3 1-2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 3 1-2 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After jogging along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented shoals for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing, off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 82. There were 128 new cases in September, 300 in October, 472 in November, 804 in December and 1,285 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. At present the plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

A man who was bicycling in southern France was pushing his machine up a steep hill, when he overtook a peasant with a donkey cart. The patient beast was making but little progress, although it was doing its best.

The benevolent cyclist, putting his left hand against the back of the cart and guiding his machine with the other hand, pushed so hard that the donkey, taking fresh courage, pulled his load successfully up to the top.

When the summit was reached the peasant burst into thanks to his benefactor.

"It was good of you, indeed, monsieur!" he protested. "I should never in the world have got up the hill with only one donkey."—Youth's Companion.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

He knit his brows into a quizzical frown, asking quietly:

"Did you ever hear the old lines:

"'If a woman will, she will, you may depend on't,
If a woman won't, she won't, so there's an end on't.'"

"But I repeat it must not be!" cried Daisy, wildly. "I would as soon see her lying in her coffin!"

"How vehement you are, my darling," laughed Aleck; "but why do you dislike the count so much and all at once? You declared, only a little while since, that we must take him into society, and make quite a lion of him, and now——"

"Now he has lost my good will by falling in love with Olive," she faltered.

"If you think there is the least doubt as to his social standing, we can investigate at once."

"No— no!" cried Daisy, in a spasm of guilty terror; "do not do that, Aleck— anything but that!"

"Then if you have nothing in particular against him, why interfere, my darling? Every heart should choose its own mate. Think how badly you and I should have felt if any one had tried to separate us."

She crept closer up to him, her breath coming in short gasps.

"It would have killed me, Aleck," she whispered; and you— oh, Aleck! what would you have done if any one had come between us?"

"I would have gone through fire and water to have won you, my wild flower," he replied, earnestly.

"I have thanked heaven," he went on slowly, "that I am your first and only love, Daisy. I am a very jealous fellow, my darling. I should never have allowed myself to love you, if you had ever cared for any one else."

"I have never loved any one but you, Aleck," she whispered. "I should solemnly say that if I were dying."

"You must not say such grave things, Daisy," said Aleck. "Gloomy thoughts are depressing."

"That reminds me of Olive's message. There is a party of gypsies encamped back of the grove. The young folks are going to take a stroll down that way, and want you to go with them. You had better go, dear; it will take up your time and attention."

"I am not going, dear," said Daisy to her sister, when Olive made her appearance half an hour later. "You must go with our guests — my head aches."

"The gypsy tents and their campfires are very picturesque when viewed by moonlight. You had better come, Daisy, especially as they are to be ordered from the grove tomorrow."

But Daisy declined.

"I shall not leave my room," she declared. "My head aches."

Aleck was loath to leave her by herself; but she insisted he should accompany their guests.

It was a merry party which set out for the grove a little later.

Daisy watched them out of sight with restless eyes.

"I couldn't have a better opportunity," she murmured, catching her breath with a hard sob.

Hurrying to the wardrobe, she took from it a long, dark cloak lined with scarlet, drew the hood over her face and stole noiselessly by a rear entrance from the house, and by cutting across lots, gained the grove fully half an hour in advance of the party that had gone round by the main road.

Once in the grove, Daisy turned her cloak crimson side out and waited patiently by a fallen log for their approach.

She had not long to wait. She soon heard voices, Olive's the gayest and brightest of them all.

They passed the little shrinking figure in the crimson cloak, who drew furtively back among the shadows, laughing and chattering as they passed on toward the white tents.

Darting quickly forward, she touched her on the arm.

"If you would have your fortune told, bonny lady," she said, in a hoarse constrained voice that could never have been recognized, "come apart a little way to where the nightingale is singing, and I will tell you of the strangest fortune the fates have in store for you that ever was heard."

Olive glanced down curiously at the small, misshapen figure in the bright, crimson cloak standing amid the shadows of the trees.

"I know my fortune," she said impatiently. "I have had my love-dream, met my lover, and am engaged, and soon to be married; so there, what more of a fortune could you tell me, my good gypsy."

"I could tell you of the curse that hangs over your proud head!" was the startling answer.

CHAPTER XXII.

Only a Dash of the Pen.

Olive Gordon's face grew strangely white.

"A curse!" she repeated, with a gasp. "Why, what can you mean?"

"You have a lover," replied her companion; "handsome, gay, debonair, whom you would wed; but hark you, lady, listen to the gypsy's warning— turn from him— love him not — his life is accursed— he is not for love— not for marriage with such as you. If you married him the greatest curse that ever fell on a woman's head would fall upon yours."

"I do not believe it!" cried Olive. "I will marry him in defiance of every curse. I will hear no more; who are you who dares defame my betrothed?"

She stretched out her hand to grasp the little red- cloaked figure beside her and drag her out into the clearer light that she might see her face, but the little figure was too quick for her— like a shadow she had glided amongst the pines and was lost in the darkness.

"I have failed," muttered Daisy, hurrying back to the house. "I might have known— heaven help me, what shall I do now— which way shall I turn?"

"There is but one thing to do," she murmured, sinking on her knees when she reached her own room, "and that is, to live through the coming month as best I can, and on the day of the wedding end it all by a full confession of everything— and while they read what I have written, I shall be lying cold in death — then perhaps they will forgive me my terrible sin— when they see that

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

Abigail Again.

I SEE by the papers, says a writer in "Pick-Me-Up," that some worthy people in high places are getting a little tired of the servant girl question, and now there is a proposal to bring boys up to the job. What will become of the balance of the girls willing but not henceforward able to take to service, is not stated. Perhaps the English language is too abrupt and practical to permit of any reliable statement of the kind. But, of course, it's the old trouble. When mistress and maid fall out the fault is always the maid's. We never hear of any society for proving mistresses in the wrong. And poor old Abigail is down again!

I think before people lay the blame too heavily on Abigail they should search their own hearts and see if there is no fault in themselves. Just because the family thinks it would like to have breakfast at eight o'clock in the morning, Abigail's night's rest is practically broken from seven a.m. onwards. First there is the alarm clock, which rattles like the Day of Judgment; and just as she has turned over and gone to sleep again, the electric bell over her head starts its infernal clatter, interrupting her in a most lovely dream just where she and the milkman's young man had arranged to get married as soon as he could get trusted for a suite of kitchen furniture and a regulation four-poster. And as a final blow she has to sit up in bed and hear the master downstairs offering to run up and drag her out of bed, while the missis is declining the offer with some energy. No thanks.

How much nicer it would be to treat Abigail like one of the family. Now and again it would show a very good feeling if the head of the family went off to the city without his breakfast rather than disturb Abigail in her second go of beauty sleep. When employers meet together and talk of Abigail's sins, it never seems to occur to them that they might win her over by a timely display of generosity. Nobody seems to think anything of it if missis comes down to breakfast in a dressing-gown. She chooses to do it, and that is enough. But if Abigail waits at the breakfast-table in a red flannel petticoat, fastened over her shoulders with a safety-pin, the harsh remarks that are heaped upon a poor orphan girl are positively brutal.

What Abigail objects to so much is the perpetual fault-finding. Suppose she does drop a plate on the ground and break it? A plate must be broken sooner or later in the ordinary course of nature, and, as Horatius said when he called for volunteers to defend the narrow pass, we may as well pick it off as wait for it to drop on us.

In many households it is quite a usual thing to keep a common, irresponsible cat of indifferent moral character, and to let it have the free run of the place. If the cat does anything wrong, the missis at once blames —Abigail. Is it any wonder that the servant girl has turned at last after centuries of injustice? If the cat should get the key of the beer cask and go down and draw off a modest quencher, it's as likely as not that Abigail is charged with having taken the beer for her favorite policeman, when it is well known that he is a teetotaller and only eats cloves to improve his complexion. As every naturalist is well aware, it is quite a common thing for a cat to run round to the pawnbroker's with a couple of the best tablecloths till the end of the month; but as sure as anything Abigail will be charged with the offence, just because the ticket happened to fall out of her petticoat pocket. Most unreasonable.

The way to solve the problem is not for the mistresses to entrench themselves on one side and the maids on the other, and speak in harsh and inconsiderate language of the opposition. As Lord Rosebery says, the way to make peace is for two travelers to arrive at an inn and have a drink or something of that sort, and drop hints of mutual concessions in between the sips. The mistresses should meet the maids casually and get some idea of the basic principles of domestic service as governed by the natural aspirations of both sides. As I make it out, the point of view of the mistresses will be that they want a girl who will always get up at six in the morning, who will always look neat and tidy, and who will be talked at in a loud, rasping voice from the attic to the cellar without once answering back in the dreamy, picturesque language of Bermondsey. A girl who can do the work of three men, and who has a small appetite, will be preferred.

From the maids' point of view, I understand it is considered essential that a bicycle should be kept on the premises exclusively for kitchen use, and that the offensive habit of locking up the piano and hiding the key will be discontinued. It will also be necessary that the objectionable practice of counting the bottles of sherry in the cellar, and the mince pies in the larder, should at once cease, as this sort of thing is calculated to imply distrust and want of confidence. The question as to the privilege of wearing the missis's sealskin jacket or her new hat is not definitely settled; but it is understood that a concession of this sort would go far to remove the bad blood that has been stirred up in this unfortunate controversy.

Sweetness Long Drawn Out.

A business man of whom the "Youth's Companion" tells declares that the average stenographer will not learn to spell correctly until the millennium comes. In support of his opinion he relates his experience with a young woman whose spelling, as he describes it, had an "engaging originality," but who was so amiable and even-tempered that he seldom found heart to rebuke her.

One day she appeared before him with a neatly written letter for a Southern correspondent. He hastily looked it over.

"See here," he said, "you've spelled sugar s-u-g-g-a-r."

The young woman looked at it a moment critically, and then her face brightened as she replied:

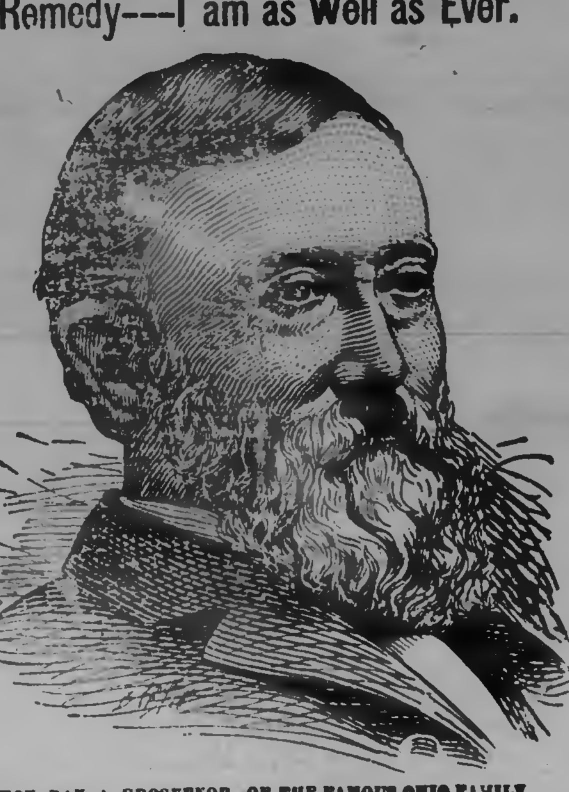
"So I have. How careless of me! I don't see how I came to leave out the 'h.'"

Supply Limited.

"This is tough luck," said Ham, mournfully, as he leaned out over the side of the ark. "What's wrong now?" queried Shem. "Why, all this water to fish in," replied Ham, "and only two fishin' worms on board."—Ohio State Journal."

DAN GROSVENOR SAYS:

"Peruna is an Excellent Spring Catarrh Remedy—I am as Well as Ever."



HON. DAN. A. GROSVENOR, OF THE FAMOUS OHIO FAMILY.

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, Deputy Auditor for the War Department, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., says:

"Allow me to express my gratitude to you for the benefit derived from one bottle of Peruna. One week has brought wonderful changes and I am now as well as ever. Besides being one of the very best spring tonics it is an excellent catarrh remedy."—

DAN. A. GROSVENOR.

In a recent letter he says:

"I consider Peruna really more meritorious than I did when I wrote you last. I receive numerous letters from acquaintances all over the country asking me if my certificate is genuine. I invariably answer, yes."—Dan. A. Grosvenor.

A County Commissioner's Letter.

Hon. John Williams, County Commissioner, of 517 West Second street, Duluth, Minn., says the following in regard to Peruna:

"As a remedy for catarrh I can cheerfully recommend Peruna. I know what it is to suffer from that terrible disease and I feel that it is my duty to speak a good word for the tonic that brought me immediate relief. Peruna cured me of a bad case of catarrh and I know it will cure any other sufferer from that disease."—John Williams.

Miss Mattie L. Guild, President Illinois Young People's Christian Temperance Union, in a recent letter from Chicago, Ill., says:

"I doubt if Peruna has a rival in all the remedies recommended to-day for catarrh of the system. A remedy that will cure catarrh of the stomach will cure the same condition of the mucous membrane anywhere. I have found it the best remedy I have ever tried for catarrh, and believing it worthy my endorsement I gladly accord it.—Mattie L. Guild.

A Congressman's Letter.

Hon. W. P. Brownlow, Congressman from Tennessee, writes from Washington, D. C., the following:

"I have suffered from catarrh of the stomach for several years, and for the past twelve months was in an exceedingly critical condition. My attention was called to your Peruna, and I began to use it, and my improvement was noticeable after the first three days. I have taken three bottles of the medicine and I feel satisfied that I am now almost, if not permanently, cured. In connection with the Peruna, I have used your Manalin for biliousness and torpid liver. I regard it as the best medicine for this purpose that I have ever used. Having been benefited so much myself, I give you this statement, that others may be likewise benefited."—W. P. Brownlow, M. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

Mrs. Elmer Fleming, Minneapolis, Minn.

"I have been troubled all my life with catarrh in my head. I took Peruna for about three months, and now think I am permanently cured. I believe that for catarrh in all its forms Peruna is the medicine of the age. It cures when all other remedies fail. I can heartily recommend Peruna as a catarrh remedy."—Mrs. Elmer Fleming.

Treat Catarrh in Spring.

The spring is the time to treat catarrh. Cold, wet winter weather often retards a cure of catarrh. If a course of Peruna is taken during the early spring months the cure will be prompt and permanent. There can be no failures if Peruna is taken intelligently during the favorable weather of spring.

As a systemic catarrh remedy Peruna eradicates catarrh from the system wherever it may be located. It cures catarrh of the stomach or bowels with the same certainty as catarrh of the head.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

—Lindsay Post: A most peculiar accident happened yesterday afternoon to the Haliburton train while it was on its trip north. When near Distillery Creek bridge, a mile north of the Victoria Junction, the strong gale lifted the roof completely off an Intercolonial Railway box car, throwing it on the fence on the east side of the track. The train was stopped and the car examined, but as there was no other damage the trip north was continued.

—The following pupils entered the departmental drawing class, which is being conducted by Mr. Wm. Smith:—S. Plummer, N. Miller, H. Fair, W. Moncrief, W. H. Vickers, F. Dawson, Geo. Hall, R. McKee, W. Kennedy, G. Ferguson, F. Hewson, C. Gilbert and D. Carlisle. It is expected that a large number of these will secure certificates. The good showing is due to the good work done by the instructors, Messrs. Geo. Cliffe and W. H. Collier.

A New Tea Store

The Stroud Tea Company, of Montreal, has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. W. J. Morrow, as manager of their Peterborough store. Mr. Morrow has had a long experience in the grocery business, and has a large circle of friends. The premises will be No. 366 George-st., next to Messrs. Stinson & Son, boot and shoe dealers, and are now being refitted, and will be opened by the middle of May, carrying a full line of teas, coffees, etc. In Mr. Morrow's able hands, and backed up by the excellent goods, the store should be a popular one with buyers of such staple necessaries as teas and coffees.

A Surprising Discovery

THE CAMPAIGN

It is Only a Question of Majority in West Peterborough

The Campaign in West Peterborough has not entered the stage of excitement yet, if it ever will. It is conceded on all sides that Hon. Mr. Stratton will be returned, and that it is only a question of majority. His splendid majority of 1,000 secured four years ago, will, we think, not be materially reduced. Indeed, if a man were to prophesy that it would disappear altogether, he would be laughed at. Some idea of the feeling that exists amongst the "sporting" element, may be inferred from the fact that bets have been made that Mr. Stratton's majority would exceed a thousand.

Thinking people, regardless of party, know that the interests of this rising young City can be best served by re-electing Mr. Stratton. They argue, and not without reason, that partyism should not enter into the campaign, and that Peterborough should support a government that gives us a cabinet minister.

TO THE FRONT

New Appointment for One of Our Esteemed Citizens.

The many friends of Mr. Jas. Strobell will be delighted to learn that late last evening he received the appointment of adjuster to one of the prominent Canadian Fire Insurance Companys of Canada and received his first call to adjust a Fire Insurance claim at Gananoque, the premises of F. O. Webster, Stanley Piano Representative of that town having been laid in ashes yesterday. We are sure that Mr. Strobell will perform his duty whether to adjust fire loss or fighting the Boer in South Africa.

LESS CANDY

Better to Give Children Delicious Food Than Candy

Some foods will cure dyspepsia and other foods will cause it. The safest way to get well is to use the food that agrees with the stomach and permits Nature to go along in a thoroughly natural way.

A lady says, "I have at last found a true way to get well and keep well, and that is by the use of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food.

For six years I suffered with indigestion and palpitation of the heart so that I could not sleep nights. I tried a great many different kinds of medicines and a lot of different kinds of cereals, but none of them helped me, and my stomach seemed to get worse and worse.

I became very despondent and was at a loss to know what to do. One day I read in the paper that Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food would cure indigestion and build up the body. I wondered if it contained any medicine, but learned that it did not, and that it was only a food prepared so that the stomach could easily digest it.

The next time I went down town I bought two packages. This was on Tuesday and it was all gone on Saturday for we all liked it so much, so I sent down and got three more packages and from that time I have been using Grape-Nuts steadily and my indigestion has entirely disappeared.

Sometimes when my little girl has been playing extra hard after supper she will climb on my knee, put my cheek and whisper in my ear, 'Mamma please give me something good.' I say (knowing all the time) 'What is good, dear?' She says, 'Grape-Nuts with cream on top,' and there is nothing else that she enjoys better than this good, wholesome food. She eats it for breakfast every morning and prefers Grape-Nuts pudding for dinner. At night she has Grape-Nuts for her supper with a soft boiled egg, and she thrives wonderfully on this kind of food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

DR. FORD SPEAKS

And Tells The Times About His Campaign in the East

Dr. Ford, the Conservative candidate, dropped into the Times office on Thursday evening, for half an hour's chat. He spent the day in Ashburnham and suburbs, and appeared to be well satisfied with his day's work.

The Doctor is exceedingly hopeful of the result, and says that he expects to head the poll by a handsome majority. In the back country, which he visited, he was well received, and was assured of a big vote in that district.

In discussing the outlook throughout the province, the Doctor said he was persuaded that the Conservatives would emerge from the conflict triumphant. There was every reason to believe that such would be the case.

Barbers May Raise Rates

The barbers of Peterborough contemplate an advance in rates at an early date. A prominent tonsorial artist said to The Times yesterday:

"I am of opinion that the time has arrived when our prices should be increased, in harmony with other things, and to partly overcome the extra expense in the way of wages, etc., that master barbers have to meet. I would suggest that general barbering such as haircutting and shaving prices be not changed, but hereafter it will cost 25c. instead of 15c. to have your razor honed. Then if you want your beard trimmed it will cost you 10c. instead of 20c. for haircut and beard trim as heretofore. I would also suggest that barbers close up one half day each week."

NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organised in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, willl be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 356½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $560,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 25,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $3.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $5.39 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	286,319.88
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

EARL RUSSELL OF DIVORCE COURT FAME

Has Bill Before House of Lords Dealing With Divorce

SOME OF ITS PROVISIONS GIVEN

By It Marriage With a Deceased's Wife Sister Would be Made Legal

Special to The Times.

London, April 26—The divorce bill of Earl Russell, who has had a long series of marital troubles, was introduced in the House of Lords on Wednesday.

The first clause provides that either a man or wife may petition for a dissolution of their marriage, unless connivance is proved, on the grounds of either adultery, cruelty, penal servitude for not less than three years, unsound mind for a year preceding the filing of the petition, living apart for the preceding three years, and not intending to resume cohabitation, or living apart for the preceding year, when the other party concurs in the petition.

Clause 7 provides that after the commencement of the act no petition for a judicial separation or restitution of conjugal rights or respecting jactitation of marriage shall be received.

Clause 16 provides that as soon as a dissolution of marriage is effected the parties may marry again.

Clause 18 provides that marriage with a deceased wife's sister or a deceased husband's brother shall not be invalid by reason of affinity.

EARL RUSSELL'S WOES

In 1890 Earl Russell wedded the daughter of Sir Claude Scott, but in the following year she sued him for divorce, making charges of cruelty and other offences of a serious character. The charges created a great scandal. The Countess was unsuccessful in her suit and she was compelled to pay the costs which it is said amounted to over $25,000. Her mother, Lady Scott, was afterwards convicted and imprisoned for libelling the Earl, and the Countess was convicted of libelling H. A. Roberts, a master of Bath College, who was mentioned in the charge she made against her husband.

Five years ago the Countess withdrew the charges she had made against her husband and sued for restitution of conjugal rights. In this suit she was also unsuccessful. She then adopted the stage as a profession. In April, 1900, Lord Russell married Mollie Somerville Cooke, at Reno, Nevada. Earl Russell returned to England last year and was arrested for Bigamy. He was tried by the House of Lords, convicted and sentenced to three months in Holloway gaol, which he served. The first Countess Russell then secured a divorce, and on October 31 last Earl Russell remarried Mollie Somerville.

NEW RAILWAY RULES

How an American Railway Company Has Set the Pace

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 25 — Courtesy will hereafter characterize the conduct of trainmen on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, if the new regulations adopted by that road for the guidance of its employees are obeyed. Conductors and brakemen must remove their hats when passing through parlor cars and dining cars. They must answer the enquiries of passengers promptly and cheerfully. "Coarse and vulgar language from anyone employed on this road is prohibited, under the penalty of prompt dismissal." Trainmen must assist, or at least offer assistance, to all passengers when they alight at stations.

The drawling of words, so common to the vernacular of railroad employees when making such announcements as "All aboard!" is to be done away with. Passengers must never be ejected "except at a regular open station." Women, or "Children of tender age," are not to be "put off" under any circumstances; and a person travelling alone who is "in such a condition of mind and body as to be incapable of caring for himself must be placed in the custody of the nearest station agent." A brakeman is required to pass through every car of a train before it leaves its terminus and call out distinctly the names of all the stations on that line; and when approaching a station its name must be announced from each end of a car.

The new regulations go further and prescribe that a passenger train shall be called a "train of superior class," that a freight shall be known as a "second class train," that a side track shall be no longer denominated as a "siding," but as an "auxiliary," that engineers shall be called "engine men," and that the term "engine house" shall supersede the old name of "roundhouse."

The general manager and general superintendent of the road, who framed the rules, have caused the following injunction to be printed conspicuously on over 50 of the 135 pages which the book contains: "In case of doubt, adopt the safe course. Speed must always be sacrificed for safety."

HIS ENTERPRISING UNCLE

How a Peterborough Man Badly Missed a Good Thing

"I'm sorry I didn't stay with my uncle in New York," said a well known citizen to Mr. James Dolan, our enterprising and progressive dry goods merchant, when the latter refused him a job as clerk in his new store.

"Why?" asked Mr. Dolan, in a sympathetic tone.

"Oh, I'd been rich now," said the disappointed aspirant to the clerkship. "My uncle has one of the biggest saloon businesses in New York state. He kept forty men busy every day making mallets for tapping beer kegs. He runs five distilleries in connection with his saloon. His saloon is situated in a tract of 250 acres. In the centre of this tract is a fresh water lake that covers ten acres. Every morning he dumps ten car loads of sliced lemons into the lake and one car load of sugar, to make lemonade."

"How does he stir it?" asked Mr. D., becoming greatly interested.

"Why, he has three mules hitched to one of these big wheels they use in brickyards for stirring up the mud. He drives the mules through the lake and they stir up the mixture."

After the applicant had gone, Mr. Martin Connors, who was standing by and overheard the conversation, asked, "What is the matter with him?"

"Nothing," said Mr. Dolan, "except that he is not telling the truth."

Malt Breakfast Food

THE ONLY CEREAL FOOD THAT PERFECTLY AGREES WITH STOMACHS STRONG OR WEAK

The pre-eminent qualities of Malt Breakfast Food are the result of the action of the pure, health giving malt on the starch and gluten of the wheat, rendering them soluble and changing them into forms to be quickly absorbed by the stomach, then passing into the blood to enrich it and build up the nerves, the tissues, of the body and brain.

Malt Breakfast Food being quite free from starchy ingredients, requires no digestive effort or loss of bodily energy. It is delicious, comforting and soothing to the stomach of child or adult. It makes the weak strong and keeps the strong in perfect health. Malt Breakfast Food is recommended by physicians everywhere. Sold by all grocers.

WILL SHIPPING COMBINE COERCE CANADA

Rumor in London That It Wants to Handle All the Emigration

THREATENS COMMERCIAL WAR.

Would Buy Up the Canadian Railways and Play with Ex Mob Generally

Special to The Times.

London, April 25.—The Daily Express declares that the shipping combine is trying to coerce Canada into accepting its terms and conditions as to emigration rates and traffic, and that, if resistance is made, the combine will buy up the Canadian railroads and declare a commercial war.

It is the intention of the combine, says the Daily Express, to demand that the Canadian Emigration Department in London should cease to give facilities to the Elder, Dempster Company.

COLONEL DENISON'S PROPOSAL.

Colonel Denison fears that the trust will buy up the Canadian Pacific Railway, and thereby control all lines that could possibly feed the shipping. He says British policy should be to run a competing line, tax everything the combine vessels bring into this country, and let the things that the other line brings come in free.

TO FLY AMERICAN FLAG.

The Daily Mail publishes a statement this morning to the effect that the promoters of the new shipping combination will announce in a few days that the arrangement is one for mutual commercial convenience, and has no special national significance. At the same time the Daily Mail professes to know that the vessels of British lines which have been taken over will pass under the American flag after three or four years. It talks of a new shipping bill, which will be promoted in the United States Congress, with the object of permitting vessels built abroad but owned in America to be brought under the American flag, and quotes one of the promoters as saying that, apart from sailing vessels, private yachts, and the navy, the British flag will at the end of a few years have disappeared from the North Atlantic.

Shipping men consider that undue excitement has been caused by newspapers, and that the flag will remain over all British ships now in the trans-atlantic trade. They also contend that one combination will be met by another, for British capitalists, with the Admiralty behind them, will not allow the control of the merchant marine to pass into foreign hands. Without doubt there is a strong patriotic feeling in favor of a vigorous defence of British maritime interests against the grip of a money power.

WHAT THE TORONTO STAR SAYS

In Reference to the Street Railway and Another Industry for Peterborough

From Toronto Star.

Peterborough, April 24.— The Peterboro Street Railway, which was built by the Edison Company when the electric works were established here, and which was afterwards acquired by the Peterboro and Ashburnham Street Railway Company, was sold yesterday afternoon to a Detroit syndicate. The line has not been operated for a couple of years, but will be put in first class shape by July 1st. Branch lines will also be operated to nearby summer resorts, including Chemong Park, Lakefield and Rice Lake.

The big cereal works are being got into good shape. The building is eight storeys in height, and of mammoth proportions otherwise.

Another large American cereal company is in negotiation with Mr. J. Alex. Culverwell, of the Central Ontario Power Company, regarding the building of a branch factory here. The company whose factory is now here will fill its European orders from this city, and it is said the new company's main object in locating in Canada is to secure the advantage of the preference which may be given by Great Britain to Canadian food products.

SHOULD MINISTERS SHAVE?

Presbyterian Pastors Engage in a Discussion of the Question

Pittsburg, Pa., April 25.—Should a minister wear whiskers after his beard becomes gray? was a question which arose at to-day's session of the Presbyterian Ministerial Association. Rev. Mr. Sherrard held that a minister should remain young in appearance as long as possible, and that this is almost impossible when the face is covered with long white hair. Once he was invited to preach a trial sermon. He was entertained over Sunday at the home of one of the congregation and almost the first question asked him was in regard to his age. In a joking manner he replied that he was over 40, when, as a matter of fact, he was 52. Mr. Sherrard said he believed one of the reasons why he was called to the charge was on account of his not having a beard.

Then the bearded men took up the defence. Rev. Dr. Dunlap Moore said the face had little to do with the man. He did not know but that few Apostles ever shaved, he said, and Christ has always been pictured to us with a beard. While in India Dr. Moore shaved daily, and the Mohammedans often questioned him in regard to his hairless face. He found that the beard had secured the respect of the Mohammedans, and, therefore, he allowed his to grow. He referred to the beardless man as resembling woman.

PLAN TO FIGHT TRUST

He Would Have Britain Tax All Goods by Combine's Vessel

Special to The Times.

London, April 25.—The Daily Express publishes two flaring columns under the heading "Splitting the Empire," "Morgan Trust to Control Canada." It alleges that Canada will be coerced to accept the terms of the trust, its immigrant rates will be fixed, and they will be compelled to travel on the steamers of the trust. Failing this, commercial war will be declared. The Express anticipates the trust will control the Canada Pacific, securing absolute command of Canadian ports and railways.

Other alarmist reports are elaborated, apparently on the authority of Col. Denison, who urges the British and Canadian Governments to run a competing line, and tax everything the trust vessels bring, and British letting everything the Anglo-Canadian line brings enter free.

KING'S BIRTHDAY

Government to Introduce Bill to Recognize Two Holidays on One Day

The government has decided to introduce a bill at the present session providing for the celebration of the King's birthday on May 24th, Victoria Day.

King Edward's birthday is November 9th, but Thanksgiving Day usually takes place that month and the official view is that it would be most inconvenient to have another holiday in November. In England the King's birthday will be celebrated on May 30th, but it is deemed better that Canadians should take advantage of the holiday already fixed by statute for the 24th. George the third's birthday was June 4th. This continued to be observed in Canada as the sovereign's birthday throughout the reign of George IV and William IV. It is likely that June 26th will be proclaimed as a holiday in honor of the coronation of King Edward.

Follow the Example of the Millions of Women Now Now Use

DIAMOND DYES

It is safe to follow the example of the millions of wise women who have made the Diamond Dyes their chosen and only dyes for home coloring. The faith of all is so firmly established in the excellence of the Diamond Dyes that they would not use any other make, even if they were given the common and imitation dyes free of cost. Valuable goods and garments should not be risked with poor and untried dyes. Ruin, loss of money and bad temper is the sure result.

Mrs. R. F. Swalwell, 108 Harris st., Vancouver, B.C., says: "I have used a great many of the Diamond Dyes and have always had most satisfactory results. I have dyed silks, dresses, men's clothes, curtains and any quantity of wool goods to my entire satisfaction."

Despised Even by Brute

"I've worked around animals more or less all my life," said a well known livery man, "and I have noticed particularly the effect that a drunken man has on them. A horse hates a man with a jag worse than the devil hates holy water, but a dog seems to feel that a drunk isn't responsible for himself and acts accordingly. A dog, no matter how fierce he is, will never bite a drunken man. He seems to know by instinct when a man is under the weather, and treats him much as he would treat a child. But with a horse it's different. A horse treats a drunken man with contempt—doesn't want to have anything to do with him. There used to be an old bum who loafed around the stables, and who somehow or other always managed to keep loaded up to the nozzle. Some nights he would creep into a stall and go to sleep in the straw. The horses, when they finished at night would always be ready to drop in their stalls, but I never knew a horse that would sleep with the bum. Rather than lie down alongside him the horse would stand up all night."

THE COUNCIL AND THE ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Many Reasons Why the Franchise Should be Transferred

RAILWAY GREATLY NEEDED

Leading Citizens Favor a Thirty Year Franchise to The Company

The Company will Then be in a Position to Handle its Bonds to Advantage

The citizens of Peterborough are delighted at the prospect of having the street railway resurrected and put in first class shape. On all sides one hears nothing but words of commendation of the scheme, which is sure to play an important party in the development of our town and district. The extension of the road to Chemong and Lakefield will be a good thing for the town, and will do much to develop and popularize Peterborough as a summer resort. The fact that lines of railway are to be constructed to outlying points without one cent of municipal aid and costing the town absolutely nothing is too good a thing to contemplate without intense satisfaction. It is more than likely that besides Chemong, Lakefield and Young's Point, the road will eventually reach out in other directions—probably down the old Cobourg track to Hastings, to Keene, and other places within a close radius of Peterborough. But better than all, there would doubtless be an effort made to continue the line from Young's Point to Burleigh Falls and thence to Apsley, bringing the whole back country our way.

The Times, in order to strengthen the hands of the Council has interviewed a few of the leading citizens with regard to granting the thirty years' extension asked for.

Mr. D. W. Dumble thought that the town should help the Company in every possible way.

Other places bonused railways in order to bring trade and develop the town. In our case the road was being built to outside points without costing us a dollar. He was strongly in favor of granting the thirty year franchise.

Mr. W. A. Cressman was satisfied that the council would be making a big mistake if it was to hamper the Company in any way. He is of the opinion that a good electric railway to outlying points would naturally help business.

Mr. A. Poussette, K.C., said: "I have for several years interested myself very considerably in an endeavor to revive the railway, and am pleased to learn that a contract for its sale has been made to substantial people. I am satisfied that the town should grant a thirty year franchise as no shorter term would enable the purchasers to float bonds for the enlarged scheme proposed. Great credit is due to Mayor Denne for bringing the negotiations to a successful issue, and it is now for him and the Council to see that the sale is not prevented going through."

Mr. James Dolan was delighted with the prospects of getting an up-to-date electric railway. It would help business and do much for the town. He was in favor of giving them all the privileges they desired in the way of street franchise.

Mr. H. LeBrun believed in railways, and especially in electric roads running into outlying villages. As for the thirty-year franchise, he thought the Council should not object to this, as half this time would probably elapse before the investment paid.

Mr. R. B. McKee said he believed Peterborough was particularly lucky in getting American capital interested. He thought the council should do everything in its power to help the Company, and secure an early start.

—Mr. H. C. Winch thought we were exceedingly fortunate in having the old buried railway so gloriously resurrected. He believed the opening of the railway to Chemong, Lakefield and Young's Point would mark an era in the town's history. The franchise was none too long, considering what was to be undertaken.

Mr. J. M. Brooks said that the Oshawa Council, of which he was a member at the time, not only gave the electric railway a street franchise, but also gave a bonus of $5000. Peterborough would indeed be making a big mistake in placing any obstacles in the way of the present negotiations for a 30 year franchise.

Mr. W. H. Meldrum was in favor of meeting the wishes of the new Company as far as possible consistant with our own interests. He thought that with the present rate of increase in population, an electric railway would be a paying investment in five years' time. Twenty years, he thought, would be a reasonable time for the franchise to run. Proper conditions should be inserted in the contract as regards keeping the roadbed in order.

Mr. Chas. Stanley was anxious to see the railway again in operation, and believed the new owners are the people to give us a first class road. The town had everything to gain and nothing to lose. He would not object to a 30 year franchise so long as the company gave us a good service.

Dr. Halliday thought the Company should be given a 30-year franchise, as it probably would be many years before the railway was made to pay. A good electric street car service was much to be deserved, and he was very pleased to hear that we were likely to secure one.

Items of Interest

London, April 25.—Fifty persons were injured this morning in an accident on the Great Eastern Railway near the Hackney Downs station. As a train for Walthamstow called the "three penny train" was crossing the bridge an axle of the car nearest the locomotive broke, and the coach jumped the rails, crashed into the side of the bridge and lodged across both tracks. The train was filled with persons on their way to work.

The two coaches following the stranded car crashed into it, completing the wreck and dealing awful havoc among the passengers caught therein.

The second car also was wrecked, and a number of its inmates were badly hurt. The injured were taken to the hospital.

DEVELOPING RUSSIAN TRADE.

London, April 25.—Prince Scherbatoff, who has arrived in London for the purpose of establishing closer direct Anglo-Russian trade relations, was yesterday interviewed by a representative of Reuter's Agency. "The main facts I wish to emphasize," said he, "are that there are 12,000,000 householders in Russia whose interested in finding a market for the surplus agricultural production of that country, and that there are 4,000,000 householders in Great Britain who are interested in finding markets for English manufactured goods.

"If you take into consideration the development of Russia and the increase of the population, I am quite sure that in thirty years the actual consumption now to £51,000,000 would rise to £2,000,000,000. It will be England's fault if she allows this market to slip from her hands."

CRITICIZED BY LORD ROBERTS.

London, April 25.—Some candid criticism on the efficiency shown last year by the regular practice is to be found in a memorandum just issued by Lord Roberts.

The Commander-in-Chief refrains from enumerating certain units in which the results were bad, but significantly remarks that "the names of the officials commanding these units have been noted, and this fact will be taken into account in considering their future advancement in the army."

In regard to the regular army, Lord Roberts insists upon effeciency in musketry practice in officers, both commissioned, and upon increased attention to the training of recruits, while he emphasizes the necessity of training soldiers to use their own intelligence and judgment.

NEW OIL ENGINE.

London, April 25.—Messrs. Thornycroft, the well-known ship-builders of Chiswick, are experimenting with a new oil engine which may not only revolutionize private yacht propulsion, but may also effect a remarkable change in the adaptability and allround efficiency in the smaller craft of our navy. Messrs. Thornycroft point out the advantages of the motor for navy cutters and similar craft no less than for private yachts, and are building a special steel cutter in which to make experiments. The oil motor occupies certainly not more than half the space of the steam engine. Power can be developed in ten minutes, where half an hour would be required for steam, and the oil fuel that can be carried will last twice the time that coal will.

LORD O'BRIEN ADVENTURE.

London, April 25.—Lord Chief Justice O'Brien has had a remarkable experience at the Ennis Assizes. His coachman had to give evidence before another judge in a different part of the building. Leaving his magnificent livery hat on the coach-box, the servant handed over his horses to the charge of a ragged little urchin, and departed. The chief justice rose rather early, was ushered out to his carriage, and took his seat without noticing that the coachman was absent. The escort drew their swords, the trumpeter blew his trumpet, and the carriage, states The Freeman's Journal, drove away to his Lordship's lodgings. His Lordship could not understand the rapidity of the pace or the roars of laughter of the spectators, till, on alighting, he discovered that he had been driven by the tattered urchin, who was wearing the coachman's resplendent hat.

London, April 25.—Lord Roberts has given orders that all reservists of cavalry, infantry and army service corps who are at present on "working furlough" are at once to be recalled to regimental duty. Immediately on their return they are to be medically examined, and if fit for foreign service they are to embark for South Africa with the next regimental draft. If not medically fit they are to be discharged. By this means it is hoped that a considerable waste of money will be averted. There have been for over two years a large number of men who, though nominally effective reservists, have been medically unfit for service abroad whenever mobilized. These men, although they have had nothing to do, have since the war started been in receipt of their full regimental pay and 6d. a day furlough money in addition.

FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE DAIRY.

London, April 25.—The Warwickshire Farmers' Association have established at Coventry a co-operative dairy for dealing with large supplies of milk direct from the farmer. They have acquired what was formerly a cycle factory, and this has been equipped with the most modern machinery for pasteurizing and sterilizing milk. Each farmer becomes a shareholder in proportion to the quantity of milk supplied.

Napanee, April 25.—Word was received here this morning from Phoenix, Arizona announcing the death of Mr. John A. Shibley, business manager of the well known firm of Dean & Shibley, bankers, promoters and financial agents of New York city and Providence, R.I. The late Mr. Shibley was one of the most successful young Canadians in the States. He was born in 1866, near the Village of Wilton, Addington County. He went to the States in the early nineties, and aided solely by his own energies and abilities, became at thirty-three years of age a millionaire. Three years ago Mr. Shibley purchased a summer residence in Napanee, where he has since spent much of his time. His large handed donations for benevolent purposes have been the talk of town and country. Last summer and the preceding summer all the children of the Counties of Lennox and Addington and of the surrounding towns were invited to the Napanee Park, where several thousand of them were royally entertained at Mr. Shibley's expense. Death was due to tuberculosis. The remains, accompanied by Mrs. Shibley, valet and nurse, will be sent here on Monday for interment.

A Splendid Investment

The advertisement in this issue, referring to the offer of preference stock of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, calls attention to the rapid development of one of Canada's most important resources. The President, Mr. Edwards, is a wealthy and far-seeing business man, and one of the Directors is Mr. Waterous, of Brantford. The location of the works is on the Bay of Chaleurs, where there is an unlimited supply of wood and a fine water power, and whence the shipping facilities to all parts of the world are excellent. The stock offered for sale will pay 7 per cent., and there should be no difficulty in earning it, under such careful management as there is every reason to expect from the men who have the enterprise under their control.

CHINESE SOLDIERS DEFEAT REBELS

A BIG FIGHT NEAR NAN NING

Later the Rebels Took Two Villages and Established Their Headquarters

Special to The Times.

Hong Kong, April 25.—Advices received here to-day from Wu Chou, under date of Tuesday, April 22 announce that a bloody battle was then proceeding between a force of Imperial troops on their way to Nan Ning and a large force of rebels. The Imperial army attacked the rebels' encampment in the Wu Chang hills, brought up two maxims and two twelve pounders, and finally scattered the rebels and captured their leader, Hung Yung Seng, who was wounded.

Subsequently the rebels captured two villages on the outskirts of Nan Ning, and established their headquarters in these villages.

ABOUT WEALTHY CHILDREN

A Citizen who Thinks that they Miss a Lot of Fun

Yesterday a well known gentleman about town entered the Times' sanctum, and, seating himself on an easy chair, began to expound some theories to the editor of this great family journal. Our new office boy, who is no paragon of cleanliness and beauty, attracted his attention, and he said:

"Our wealthy children are disreputably clean. They are little patterns of anemic primness. They exist merely for their clothes. A good roll in the mud is what they need. Mud pies, that blessed institution of happy, normal children, would be their salvation.

"A plush civilization is not the one for children. The home on whose walls the pictures are crying out for space is not the home for children. Parents must decide whether the upholsterer, the tailor or the child shall rule the home."

And the g.f.j., cordially endorses the above deductions, which are based on good square common sense.

WEDDING BELLS

Nuptials of Miss A. K. Shaw and Mr. C. F. DeMill

A very pretty wedding took place on Thursday evening last, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Major, Rubidge street. The contracting parties were Miss Amey Kathleen Shaw, of Bedford, England and Mr. Charles Fremont DeMill of the Canadian General Electric Co., and formerly of Hamilton Ont.

The bridal party entered the drawing-room at eight o'clock to the strains of the wedding march, which was played by Miss May Koster. The bride wore a most becoming gown of crepe-de-chene draped with applique and the bride's maid, Miss L. Koster, looked charming in a pretty suit trimmed with over applique. Mr. R. Cottrell performed the duties of best man and ably supported the groom.

Rev. J. G. Potter, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was the officiating minister. After the wedding ceremony was performed, all united in giving Mr. and Mrs. DeMill their heartiest best wishes for future success and happiness. A sumptuous wedding dejeuner was then partaken of in the dining room which was prettily decorated for the occasion.

During the evening a programme of songs, recitations etc. was pleasingly rendered by those present.

The high esteem in which the bride is held by her many friends is evidenced by the numerous, costly presents she was the recipient of.

The Times unites in wishing Mr. and Mrs. DeMill a full measure of happiness and success to crown their every undertaking.

After Long Years of Mental and Physical Sufferings and Failures With Common Medicines

Paine's Celery Compound

Cures an Ontario Lady

THE GREAT REMEDY IS HEARTILY INDORSED BY THE ABLEST PHYSICIANS, WHO DAILY RECOMMEND ITS USE

What a blessing it would be to humanity in general if all suffering men and women knew just what Paine's Celery Compound is able to do.

The work that cannot be done for the sick and suffering by months of experimenting with the common medicines of the day, is successfully carried to victory by Paine's Celery Compound in a few short weeks.

The cure of Mrs. Hopper, of Thornhill, Ont., fully proves the assertion made above. After years of failures, misery, agony and despondency, Paine's Celery Compound made a "new woman" of one who had become a mere wreck—one who was fast nearing the grave.

Have faith sufferer! You have a strong deliverer at hand able to rescue and save you. From to-day, let your hope be centred in Paine's Celery Compound and its mighty power to cure. It has never disappointed any sufferer; it will not fail in your case. Read Mrs. Hopper's wonderful and striking testimony.

"With great pleasure and satisfaction I wish to add my testimony to what had already been said in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. For a very long time I suffered from general debility and rundown system. Having heard of Paine's Celery Compound, I determined to give it a trial, and I am happy to say it has done for me more good than I can express. For ten years I doctored without any good results, but after using Paine's Celery Compound I am perfectly restored to health, can eat well, digestion is good, and my sleep is sweet and sound. Altogether I am a new woman. I always recommend Paine's Celery Compound to my friends."

EDITORIAL NOTES

Some of the advanced ladies of the United States are rather opposed to the idea of having the Government put Martha Washington's portrait on a postage stamp. They say that there are lots of women who have done something, while all this lady did was to be Mrs. Washington. Yet, even without the postage stamp reminder, the face of the pleasant looking lady who led a simple home life, and was only Mrs. Washington, will be remembered generations after the founders of a sect, the leaders of a great movement, have been forgotten.

• • • •

A gentleman in Connecticut has started a movement for purchasing the Holy Land by Christian people. While the Moslem has control of it he will allow all Christians to see it and prevent them fighting over its possession. The Monroe doctrine would interfere with annexing it to the United States, and no one European country would consent to its becoming part of any other European country. Better leave it in the hands of the infidel to see fair play.

• • • •

The Toronto World says the Deerings of Chicago "see what is in the wind—that the Canadian tariff is bound to be increased—and so these enterprising Americans are making a move to hold their Canadian business. One good turn of the Canadian tariff screw would bring the McCormicks and others into Canada, in order to hold their business." And that turn of the screw would raise the cost of implements to the Canadian farmer and to that extent would discourage the development of Canada's most important industry. This country is going to be well supplied with implement factories under the present 20 per cent. tariff. The Massey-Harris people manage to get three square meals a day out of their profits; the Deerings will do the same, and if the McCormicks do not want to come in, Canada will be very glad to pocket the customs duty on all the machines they make in the United States and sell in Canada. Cannot the World let well alone? What spite has it against the Canadian farmer?

Man as an Incarnation.

PEOPLE of a materialistic frame of mind, to whom man is but a machine, says an editorial writer in the "Hospital," are apt to put on one side all that cannot be weighed and measured as not only inexplicable or unthinkable, but as quite beyond the range of reasonable discussion. Such people are advised to attend a meeting of the Society for Psychical Research for "a change of scene." What they will see is thus described:

"There they will find people, quite as convinced as they are of their own sanity, and quite as content as they can possibly be with the correctness of their own interpretation of things, asserting the most astounding propositions, without turning a hair. To those who are so self-centered as to think that there is something cranky about all who do not see as they do, it is a wholesome awakening to find good, solid, comfortable, and respectable people believing in telepathy as a thing indisputable, and holding that man, as we see him engaged in his various more or less ignoble pursuits, in the city and elsewhere, is but the incarnation of one little bit of himself as he exists in an intangible and ethereal form. At the last meeting of the Psychical Research Society, Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., said that he did not hold that the whole of any one of us was incarnated in their terrestrial bodies; certainly not in childhood; more, but perhaps not so very much more, in adult life. What was manifest was only a definite portion of a much larger whole. What the rest was doing during the years spent here he did not know. Perhaps it was asleep; but probably, he said, it was not entirely asleep with men of genius, nor perhaps was it all completely inactive with people called mediums. Now to the modern materialist all this is absolute 'rot.' Yet Dr. Lodge is not exactly a man to pooh-pooh. Indeed, may not the immaterialists retort that this is a Christian country and that our very religion teaches us not to weigh and measure too exactly? Again, Roentgen, Tesla, and Marconi have of late been giving many shocks to old ideas. At any rate, this is clear, that we must not too rigidly put outside the bounds of sanity belief in the unthinkable. It is a queer world, and which half of it is sane appears still undecided."

A SIMPLE FAITH.

SERMON BY

GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

Ye believe in God, believe also in me.—St. John xiv., 1.

What is absolutely essential in religion, so far as doctrine is concerned, is very little and very simple. The church has for a long time had a strange notion that in order to be saved a man must believe a long list of dogmas, whereas the only condition imposed by the Christ is that a man shall have a heart and a life full of love which lifts someone's burden whenever the chance occurs, and seek the strength to do it from Him who is Father to all alike.

There is this difference between what is called "a body of doctrine" and a spiritual principle, namely, that not everybody can either understand or accept the doctrine, while no man is so unlettered or so obtuse that he need fail to do what is right because he is in doubt about it. The road to heaven is not a tangled maze of statement about Christ or God, but a straight and open path from the trusting human heart to the immortal life, a path in which the little child and the grave philosopher may hand in hand wend their way with equal pleasure and profit.

You need corner-stones if you erect a building, and for a like reason you need certain beliefs if you make for yourself a character. Faith in a God who will never desert you stands first. It must be an unflinching faith, however, or it will give way in the time of emergency. You begin well when you begin with that, and you begin ill if you begin in any other fashion.

I have a queer suspicion that the faith in the ability or willingness of God to see us safely through all earthly experience is clouded by more or less doubt. It is a matter which we keep to ourselves, but deep down in the heart is a wonder whether this beautiful something which we call religion can be relied upon as firmly, for instance, as the sea captain relies on his compass in a storm. Hence the despair which we find when death comes into the house, and hence our weakness when a bold and insolent temptation assails us. We are not thoroughly convinced, and, though we hope that God is there and does hear us when we cry, we have a doubt which seizes us like a sudden throb of agony.

That is not religion; it is only the simulation of it. It is a staff of willow, not a staff of oak. It serves in good weather, but in the tempest it fails us. When Davy invented his wire gauze lamp as a protection against the explosive fire damp in mines the workmen looked at it and shook their heads. It was too simple to be worth much. But Davy had faith in his lamp. He lighted the candle, went into the bowels of the earth, sought the spot where fire damp lay in ambush and exposed himself to the danger. He had not only a theory, but a conviction. He would trust his life to it. No test could be too severe. He felt absolutely safe with that lantern in his hand.

That is the kind of faith we want if our lives are to become heroic. And when we are possessed of it we have something else besides. Faith in God produces faith that our earthly experiences are our discipline and our preparation. The moment you see God as your Father duty becomes not only clear and distinct, but easy. Alone you can bear but little, but with the infinite reservoir of power and love to draw from you are equal to whatever your position may be. If God is with you, then the angels who do His bidding will be your companions. You become one of the great family and will be consciously helped by unseen hands over the rough places. And this consciousness will grow clearer as your faith increases, until in the end there will be only a thin veil between you and the other world. You will live in the friendship of the departed as you live in that of the dear ones in your household. The Christ realised this, but we are yet dull of hearing and dim of sight.

Immortality will become not a vague hope or even a reasonable belief, but a demonstrable certainty, and you will live in the two worlds at the same time. Your last hour will find you with a smile on your lips and a great gladness in your heart. You will eagerly step out of a tired body to be welcomed by those who await your coming.

That is the kind of religion which men long for, and which they will have when they wake up from this half belief and this make believe to a realization of the glorious truth. It was Christ's religion, and it is our own fault if we do not make it ours.

Herr Von Holleben, who entertains Prince Henry as Germany's chief representative in America, has been Ambassador at Washington since 1897, and was Minister to the United States from 1889 to 1891. He is the second in the Ambassadorial corps, and upon the retirement of Lord Pauncefote will become the dean. He is sixty years old, a native of Brehen, and a graduate of Heidelberg. He was educated especially for the diplomatic service. While at the university he was distinguished as a successful duelist, and his face shows the marks of sword encounters. He is a confirmed bachelor.

Anecdotal.

After one of his trips to the Emerald Isle Foote was praising the hospitality of the Irish, when a gentleman asked him whether he had been at Cork. "No, sir," answered Foote, "but I have seen many drawings of it."

Disraeli once said of Sir William Harcourt in his affectedly cynical way: "He has the three essential qualifications of success in politics—a fine person, a loud voice, and no principles." To this, when it was repeated to him, Harcourt rejoined: "Leaving out the first two qualifications, it might almost be applied to 'Dizzy' himself."

Tradition ascribes to the second Pitt the dying words: "O, my country—my country! How I leave my country!" What, in fact, Pitt said was: "I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork-pies." Which he did—and straightway expired, to the intense grief of the nation. This version is attested by the head-waiter of "Bellamy's" (likewise deceased), who told it to Mr. Disraeli.

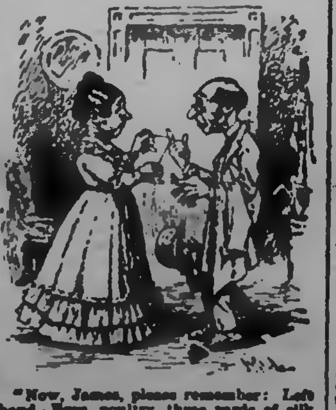
Louis XIV. was told that Lord Stair was one of the best-bred men in Europe. "I shall soon put him to the test," said the king; and asking Lord Stair to take an airing with him, as soon as the door of the coach was opened, he bade him pass and get in. The other bowed and obeyed. The king said: "The world is in the right in the character it gives—another person would have troubled me with ceremony."

When, a few years ago, the King of Portugal was a guest at Lord Salisbury's country seat, the Prince of Wales—now King Edward—asked King Carlos what had impressed him most during his stay in England. "English roast beef is very delightful," was the reply. "Oh," said the Prince, "surely something else has impressed you as well." "Ah, yes," returned Carlos; "of course, there is English boiled beef, which is also delightful."

A commercial traveler well known in the cycle trade adds this to the collection of jokes on newly made happy fathers: The hero is the manufacturer of the wheel which the narrator sells. Being compelled to go away on a business trip about the time an interesting domestic event was expected, he left orders for the nurse to wire him results according to the following formula: If a boy, "Gentleman's safety arrived." If a girl, "Lady's safety arrived." The father's state of mind may be imagined when, a few days later, he received a telegram containing the one word: "Tandem."

A certain Scotch caddie named Mathie Gorum was noted for his invariable remark after a poor shot by the person he was serving: "It micht hae been waur," which was meant to be consolatory and encouraging. His master, a clergyman, was wearied with this well-meaning flattery. Accordingly, to make sure that he would squash the remark for once, he told the caddie he had a terrible dream the night before. "Mathie, my man, I dreamt that I was in the place where the wicked are punished. I saw the wretched ones tortured; they were swimming in a lake of boiling pitch, and could not get landed for red-hot pitchforks thrust in their faces by demons." He halted a minute, with his tongue in his cheek, when, with perfect coolness, the caddie answered: "Aye, sir, that was a bad dream, fist awfu'; but it micht hae been waur." "Waur, you fool? How could that be?" "It micht hae been true."

It is a current story in Teviotdale that in the house of an ancient family of distinction, much addicted to the Presbyterian cause, a Bible was always put in the sleeping apartment of the guests, along with a bottle of strong ale. On some occasion there was a meeting of clergymen in the vicinity of the castle, all of whom were invited to dinner by the worthy baronet, and abode all night. According to the fashion of the times, seven of the reverend guests were allotted to one large barrack-room, which was used on such occasions of extensive hospitality. The butler took care that the divines were presented each with a Bible and a bottle of ale. But, after a little consultation among themselves, they are said to have recalled the domestic as he was leaving the apartment. "My friend," said one of the venerable guests, "you must know when we meet together as brethren the youngest man reads aloud a portion of Scripture to the rest; only one Bible, therefore, is necessary. Take away the other six, and, in their place, bring six more bottles of ale."



"Now, James, please remember: Left hand—Eggs, poultry, three yards of silk to match my skirt, lining for Mamie's dress, and a new reefer for George. Right hand—Nellie's ribbons, Harry's algebra, telephone message to Henry, a box of starch, and my new bonnet. Say them over as you go to town."—"Harper's Weekly."

Sue Brette—How do you know the gallery gods threw eggs at you? Ham Lette—How do I know? Ye gods, didn't I catch them in the act?—Chicago "News."

A visitor to a farm was especially struck by the great ruggedness and strength of one of the stalwart harvest hands, and said to the farmer: "That fellow ought to be chuck-full of work." "He is," replied the farmer, "or he ought to be, because I hain't never been able to get none out of him."—From "Success."

"I see that Mrs. Uptardeight is addressing the Mothers' Scientific Club this afternoon on The Care of Children." "Speaking of children, who was that youngster that broke into Snoop's candy store last night and robbed the till?" "That—why, that was Mrs. Uptardeight's youngest."—Baltimore "News."

IT'S CHILD'S PLAY

To treat a woman for a disease year after year and give her no permanent relief. Yet that has been the case with scores of women who have "doctored" for year after year unhelped and unhealed, to find at last that a few bottles of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription would have saved years of suffering and a great deal of money.

For the regulation of the periods, the stopping of disagreeable drains, the healing of inflammation and ulceration, and the cure of female weakness, there is no medicine can equal Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"About five years ago I had very poor health," writes Mrs. S. E. Whalen, of Holden, Johnson Co., Missouri. "After doctoring four years with our town doctors they gave my case up; said they had done all they could. I had been confined to my bed half my time; the other half could hardly drag around. I had such pains in my back and abdomen I could not stand for more than a few minutes. My feet were cold or burning, and my periods came too often. The doctors said it was change of life, so, as I had heard of Dr. Pierce's medicines, my husband got me a bottle of 'Favorite Prescription.' I took it and it helped me in some ways, so I wrote to you and followed your advice. I commenced 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the 'Pellets,' as I was so constipated all the time and pills would weaken me so that I would have to go to bed. To the great surprise of everybody I got well, and when I met my friends they would say, 'We never thought you would be here now.' But I can say it was your medicine, which no doubt is the best in the world. Have had no use for doctors since I tried your medicine."

CURE YOURSELF!

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 13 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 2 1-2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 3 1-2 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After jogging along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented shoals for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing, off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 82. There were 183 new cases in September, 380 in October, 473 in November, 804 in December and 1,286 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. At present the plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

A man who was bicycling in southern France was pushing his machine up a steep hill, when he overtook a peasant with a donkey cart. The patient beast was making but little progress, although it was doing its best.

The benevolent cyclist, putting his left hand against the back of the cart and guiding his machine with the other hand, pushed so hard that the donkey, taking fresh courage, pulled his load successfully up to the top.

When the summit was reached the peasant burst into thanks to his benefactor.

"It was good of you, indeed, monsieur!" he protested. "I should never in the world have got up the hill with only one donkey."—Youth's Companion.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

He knit his brows into a quizzical frown, saying quietly:

"Did you ever hear the old lines:

"'If a woman will, she will, you may depend on't,
If a woman won't, she won't, so
there's an end on't.'"

"But I repeat it must not be!" cried Daisy, wildly. "I would as soon see her lying in her coffin!"

"How vehement you are, my darling," laughed Aleck; "but why do you dislike the count so much and all at once? You declared, only a little while since, that we must take him into society, and make quite a lion of him, and now——"

"Now he has lost my good will by falling in love with Olive," she faltered.

"If you think there is the least doubt as to his social standing, we can investigate at once."

"No—no!" cried Daisy, in a spasm of guilty terror; "do not do that, Aleck—anything but that!"

"Then, if you have nothing in particular against him, why interfere, my darling? Every heart should choose its own mate. Think how badly you and I should have felt if any one had tried to separate us."

She crept closer up to him, her breath coming in short gasps.

"It would have killed me, Aleck," she whispered; "and you—oh, Aleck! what would you have done if any one had come between us?"

"I would have gone through fire and water to have won you, my wild flower," he replied, earnestly.

"I have thanked heaven," he went on slowly, "that I am your first and only love, Daisy. I am a very jealous fellow, my darling. I should never have allowed myself to love you, if you had ever cared for any one else."

"I have never loved any one but you, Aleck," she whispered. "I should solemnly say that if I were dying."

"You must not say such grave things, Daisy," said Aleck. "Gloomy thoughts are depressing.

"That reminds me of Olive's message. There is a party of gypsies encamped back of the grove. The young folks are going to take a stroll down that way, and want you to go with them. You had better go, dear; it will take up your time and attention."

"I am not going, dear," said Daisy to her sister, when Olive made her appearance half an hour later. "You must go with our guests — my head aches."

"The gypsy tents and their campfires are very picturesque when viewed by moonlight. You had better come, Daisy, especially as they are to be ordered from the grove tomorrow."

But Daisy declined.

"I shall not leave my room," she declared. "My head aches."

Aleck was loath to leave her by herself; but she insisted he should accompany their guests.

It was a merry party which set out for the grove a little later.

Daisy watched them out of sight with restless eyes.

"I couldn't have a better opportunity," she murmured, catching her breath with a hard sob.

Hurrying to the wardrobe, she took from it a long, dark cloak lined with scarlet, drew the hood over her face and stole noiselessly by a rear entrance from the house, and by cutting across lots, gained the grove fully half an hour in advance of the party that had gone round by the main road.

Once in the grove, Daisy turned her cloak crimson side out and waited patiently by a fallen log for their approach.

She had not long to wait. She soon heard voices, Olive's the gayest and brightest of them all.

They passed the little shrinking figure in the crimson cloak, who drew furtively back among the shadows, laughing and chattering as they passed on toward the white tents.

It happened that Olive fell back a few paces. This was Daisy's chance.

Darting quickly forward, she touched her on the arm.

"If you would have your fortune told, bonny lady," she said, in a hoarse constrained voice that could never have been recognized, "come apart a little way to where the nightingale is singing, and I will tell you of the strangest fortune the fates have in store for you that ever was heard."

Olive glanced down curiously at the small, misshapen figure in the bright, crimson cloak standing amid the shadows of the trees.

"I know my fortune," she said impatiently. "I have had my love-dream, met my lover, and am engaged, and soon to be married; so there, what more of a fortune could you tell me, my good gypsy?"

"I could tell you of the curse that hangs over your proud head!" was the startling answer.

CHAPTER XXII.

Only a Dash of the Pen.

Olive Gordon's face grew strangely white.

"A curse!" she repeated, with a gasp. "Why, what can you mean?"

"You have a lover," replied her companion; "handsome, gay, debonair, whom you would wed; but hark you, lady, listen to the gypsy's warning—turn from him—love him not — his life is accursed— he is not for love—not for marriage with such as you. If you married him the greatest curse that ever fell on a woman's head would fall upon yours."

"I do not believe it!" cried Olive. "I will marry him in defiance of every curse. I will hear no more; who are you who dares defame my betrothed?"

She stretched out her hand to grasp the little red-cloaked figure beside her and drag her out into the clearer light that she might see her face, but the little figure was too quick for her— like a shadow she had glided amongst the pines and was lost in the darkness.

"I have failed," muttered Daisy, hurrying back to the house. "I might have known— heaven help me, what shall I do now— which way shall I turn?"

"There is but one thing to do," she murmured, sinking on her knees when she reached her own room, "and that is, to live through the coming month as best I can, and on the day of the wedding end it all by a full confession of everything— and while they read what I have written, I shall be lying cold in death — then perhaps they will forgive me— my terrible sin— when they see the end."

Abigail Again.

I SEE by the papers, says a writer in "Pick-Me-Up," that some worthy people in high places are getting a little tired of the servant girl question, and now there is a proposal to bring boys up to the job. What will become of the balance of the girls willing but not henceforward able to take to service, is not stated. Perhaps the English language is too abrupt and practical to permit of any reliable statement of the kind. But, of course, it's the old trouble. When mistress and maid fall out the fault is always the maid's. We never hear of any society for proving mistresses in the wrong. And poor old Abigail is down again!

I think before people lay the blame too heavily on Abigail they should search their own hearts and see if there is no fault in themselves. Just because the family thinks it would like to have breakfast at eight o'clock in the morning, Abigail's night's rest is practically broken from seven a.m. onwards. First there is the alarm clock, which rattles like the Day of Judgment; and just as she has turned over and gone to sleep again, the electric bell over her head starts its infernal clatter, interrupting her in a most lovely dream just where she and the milkman's young man had arranged to get married as soon as he could get trusted for a suite of kitchen furniture and a regulation four-poster. And as a final blow she has to sit up in bed and hear the master downstairs offering to run up and drag her out of bed, while the missis is declining the offer with some energy. No thanks.

How much nicer it would be to treat Abigail like one of the family. Now and again it would show a very good feeling if the head of the family went off to the city without his breakfast rather than disturb Abigail in her second go of beauty sleep. When employers meet together and talk of Abigail's sins, it never seems to occur to them that they might win her over by a timely display of generosity. Nobody seems to think anything of it if missis comes down to breakfast in a dressing-gown. She chooses to do it, and that is enough. But if Abigail waits at the breakfast-table in a red flannel petticoat, fastened over her shoulders with a safety-pin, the harsh remarks that are heaped upon a poor orphan girl are positively brutal.

What Abigail objects to so much is the perpetual fault-finding. Suppose she does drop a plate on the ground and break it? A plate must be broken sooner or later in the ordinary course of nature, and, as Horatius said when he called for volunteers to defend the narrow pass, we may as well pick it off as wait for it to drop on us.

In many households it is quite a usual thing to keep a common, irresponsible cat of indifferent moral character, and to let it have the free run of the place. If the cat does anything wrong, the missis at once blames—Abigail. Is it any wonder that the servant girl has turned at last after centuries of injustice? If the cat should get the key of the beer cask and go down and draw off a modest quencher, it's as likely as not that Abigail is charged with having taken the beer for her favorite policeman, when it is well known that he is a teetotaller and only eats cloves to improve his complexion. As every naturalist is well aware, it is quite a common thing for a cat to run round to the pawnbroker's with a couple of the best tablecloths till the end of the month; but as sure as anything Abigail will be charged with the offence, just because the ticket happened to fall out of her petticoat pocket. Most unreasonable.

The way to solve the problem is not for the mistresses to entrench themselves on one side and the maids on the other, and speak in harsh and inconsiderate language of the opposition. As Lord Rosebery says, the way to make peace is for two travelers to arrive at an inn and have a drink or something of that sort, and drop hints of mutual concessions in between the sips. The mistresses should meet the maids casually and get some idea of the basic principles of domestic service as governed by the natural aspirations of both sides. As I make it out, the point of view of the mistresses will be that they want a girl who will always get up at six in the morning, who will always look neat and tidy, and who will be talked at in a loud, rasping voice from the attic to the cellar without once answering back in the dreamy, picturesque language of Bermondsey. A girl who can do the work of three men, and who has a small appetite, will be preferred.

From the maids' point of view, I understand it is considered essential that a bicycle should be kept on the premises exclusively for kitchen use, and that the offensive habit of locking up the piano and hiding the key will be discontinued. It will also be necessary that the objectionable practice of counting the bottles of sherry in the cellar, and the mince pies in the larder, should at once cease, as this sort of thing is calculated to imply distrust and want of confidence. The question as to the privilege of wearing the missis's sealskin jacket or her new hat is not definitely settled; but it is understood that a concession of this sort would go far to remove the bad blood that has been stirred up in this unfortunate controversy.

Sweetness Long Drawn Out.

A business man of whom the "Youth's Companion" tells declares that the average stenographer will not learn to spell correctly until the millennium comes. In support of his opinion he relates his experience with a young woman whose spelling, as he describes it, had an "engaging originality," but who was so amiable and even-tempered that he seldom found heart to rebuke her.

One day she appeared before him with a neatly written letter for a Southern correspondent. He hastily looked it over.

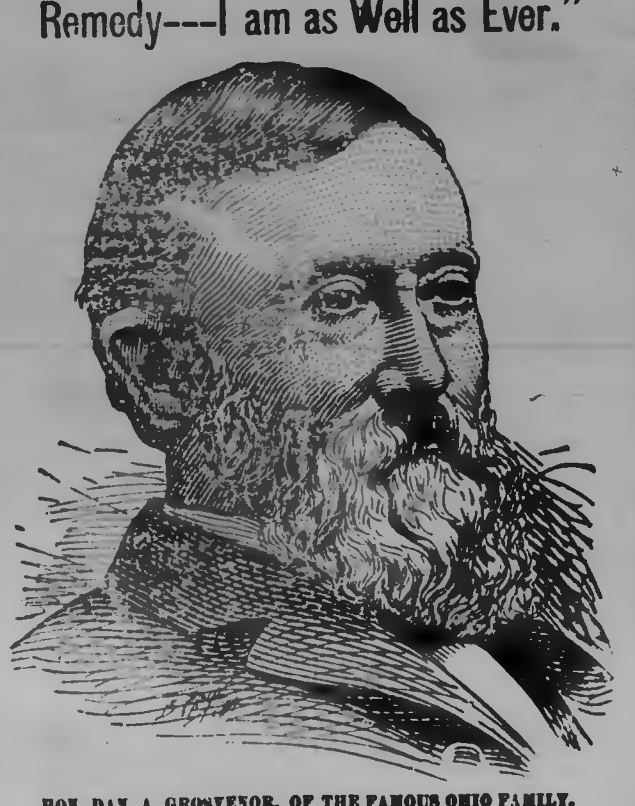
"See here," he said, "you've spelled sugar s-u-g-g-a-r."

The young woman looked at it a moment critically, and then her face brightened as she replied:

"So I have. How careless of me! I don't see how I came to leave out the 'h.'"

Supply Limited.

"This is tough luck," said Noah, mournfully, as he leaned out over the side of the ark. "What's wrong now?" queried Ham. "Why, all this water going to waste," replied Noah, "and only two worms on board."—Ohio "State Journal."



DAN GROSVENOR SAYS:

"Peruna is an Excellent Spring Catarrh Remedy---I am as Well as Ever."

HON. DAN. A. GROSVENOR, OF THE FAMOUS OHIO FAMILY.

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, Deputy Auditor for the War Department, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., says:

"Allow me to express my gratitude to you for the benefit derived from one bottle of Peruna. One week has brought wonderful changes and I am now as well as ever. Besides being one of the very best spring tonics it is an excellent catarrh remedy."—

DAN. A. GROSVENOR.

In a recent letter he says:

"I consider Peruna really more meritorious than I did when I wrote you last. I receive numerous letters from acquaintances all over the country asking me if my certificate is genuine. I invariably answer, yes."—Dan. A. Grosvenor.

A County Commissioner's Letter.

Hon. John Williams, County Commissioner, of 517 West Second street, Duluth, Minn., says the following in regard to Peruna:

"As a remedy for catarrh I can cheerfully recommend Peruna. I know what it is to suffer from that terrible disease and I feel that it is my duty to speak a good word for the tonic that brought me immediate relief. Peruna cured me of a bad case of catarrh and I know it will cure any other sufferer from that disease."—John Williams.

Miss Mattie L. Guild, President Illinois Young People's Christian Temperance Union, in a recent letter from Chicago, Ill., says:

"I doubt if Peruna has a rival in all the remedies recommended to-day for catarrh of the system. A remedy that will cure catarrh of the stomach will cure the same condition of the mucous membrane anywhere. I have found it the best remedy I have ever tried for catarrh, and believing it worthy my endorsement I gladly accord it.—Mattie L. Guild.

A Congressman's Letter.

Hon. W. P. Brownlow, Congressman from Tennessee, writes from Washington, D. C., the following:

"I have suffered from catarrh of the stomach for several years, and for the past twelve months was in an exceedingly critical condition. My attention was called to your Peruna, and I began to use it, and my improvement was noticeable after the first three days. I have taken three bottles of the medicine and I feel satisfied that I am now almost, if not permanently, cured. In connection with the Peruna, I have used your Manalin for biliousness and torpid liver. I regard it as the best medicine for this purpose that I have ever used. Having been benefited so much myself, I give you this statement, that others may be likewise benefited."—W. P. Brownlow, M. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

Mrs. Elmer Fleming, orator of Reservoir Council No. 168, Northwestern Legion of Honor, of Minneapolis, Minn., writes from 2535 Polk street, N. E.:

"I have been troubled all my life with catarrh in my head. I took Peruna for about three months, and now think I am permanently cured. I believe that for catarrh in all its forms Peruna is the medicine of the age. It cures when all other remedies fail. I can heartily recommend Peruna as a catarrh remedy."—Mrs. Elmer Fleming.

Mrs. Elmer Fleming, Minneapolis, Minn.

Treat Catarrh in Spring.

The spring is the time to treat catarrh. Cold, wet winter weather often retards a cure of catarrh. If a course of Peruna is taken during the early spring months the cure will be prompt and permanent. There can be no failures if Peruna is taken intelligently during the favorable weather of spring.

As a systemic catarrh remedy Peruna eradicates catarrh from the system wherever it may be located. It cures catarrh of the stomach or bowels with the same certainty as catarrh of the head.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system. not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

—Lindsay Post: A most peculiar accident happened yesterday afternoon to the Haliburton train while it was on its trip north. When near Distillery Creek bridge, a mile north of the Victoria Junction, the strong gale lifted the roof completely off an Intercolonial Railway box car, throwing it on the fence on the east side of the track. The train was stopped and the car examined, but as there was no other damage the trip north was continued.

—The following pupils entered the departmental drawing class, which is being conducted by Mr. Wm. Smith:—S. Plummer, N. Miller, H. Fair, W. Moncrief, W. H. Vickers, F. Dawson, Geo. Hall, R. McKee, W. Kennedy, G. Ferguson, F. Bowman, C. Gilbert and D. Carlisle. It is expected that a large number of those will secure certificates. The good showing is due to the good work done by the instructors, Messrs. Geo. Cliffe and W. H. Collier.

Broke Her Leg

Yesterday about six o'clock a child who was riding a tricycle on the sidewalk on Charlotte street, near the Queen's Hotel, collided with a middle aged lady named Mrs. Lafave, who resides on Sherbrooke street. The woman was knocked down, and in falling had the misfortune to break one of the bones of her ankle. Dr. McNulty set the fractured limb.

A New Tea Store

The Stroud Tea Company, of Montreal, has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. W. J. Morrow, as manager of their Peterborough store. Mr. Morrow has had a long experience in the grocery business, and has a large circle of friends. The premises will be No. [illegible] George-st., next to Messrs. Stinson & Son, boot and shoe dealers, and are now being refitted, and will be opened by the middle of May, carrying a full line of teas, coffees, etc. In Mr. Morrow's able hands, and backed up by the excellent goods, the store should be a popular one with buyers of such staple necessaries as teas and coffees.

A Surprising Discovery

You will be surprised in trying Catarrhozone to find how quickly it cures cold in the head. The agreeable, penetrating vapor traverses every air cell and passage of the nose, throat and lungs. In one breath it carries instant death to the millions of germs infesting the respiratory organs and breaks up a cold in ten minutes.

THE CAMPAIGN

It is Only a Question of Majority in West Peterborough

The Campaign in West Peterborough has not entered the stage of excitement yet, if it ever will. It is conceded on all sides that Hon. Mr. Stratton will be returned, and that it is only a question of majority. His splendid majority of 1,000 secured four years ago, will, we think, no be materially reduced. Indeed, if a man were to prophesy that it would disappear altogether, he would be laughed at. Some idea of the feeling that exists amongst the "sporting" element, may be inferred from the fact that bets have been made that Mr. Stratton's majority would exceed a thousand.

Thinking people, regardless of party, know that the interests of this rising young City can be best served by re-electing Mr. Stratton. They argue, and not without reason, that partyism should not enter into the campaign, and that Peterborough should support a government that gives us a cabinet minister.

TO THE FRONT

New Appointment for One of Our Esteemed Citizens.

The many friends of Mr. Jas. Scobell will be delighted to learn that late last evening he received the appointment of adjustor to one of the prominent Canadian Fire Insurance Companys of Canada and received his first call to adjust a Fire Insurance claim at Gananoque, the premises of F. O. Webster, Stanley Piano Representative of that town having been laid in ashes yesterday. We are sure the Mr. Scobell will perform his duty whether to adjust fire loss or fighting the Boer in South Africa.

LESS CANDY

Better to Give Children Delicious Food Than Candy

Some foods will cure dyspepsia and other foods will cause it. The safest way to get well is to use the food that agrees with the stomach and permits Nature to go along in a thoroughly natural way.

A lady says, "I have at last found a true way to get well and keep well, and that is by the use of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food.

For six years I suffered with indigestion and palpitation of the heart so that I could not sleep nights. I tried a great many different kinds of medicines and a lot of different kinds of cereals, but none of them helped me, and my stomach seemed to get worse and worse.

I became very despondent and was at a loss to know what to do. One day I read in the paper that Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food would cure indigestion and build up the body. I wondered if it contained any medicine, but learned that it did not, and that it was only a food prepared so that the stomach could easily digest it.

The next time I went down town I bought two packages. This was on Tuesday and it was all gone on Saturday for we all liked it so much, so I went down and got three more packages and from that time I have been using Grape-Nuts steadily and my indigestion has entirely disappeared.

Sometimes when my little girl has been playing extra hard after supper she will climb on my knee, put my check and whisper in my ear, 'Mamma please give me something good.' I say (knowing all the time) 'What is good, dear?' She says, 'Grape-Nuts with cream on top,' and there is nothing else that she enjoys better than this good, wholesome food. She eats it for breakfast every morning and prefers Grape-Nuts pudding for dinner. At night she has Grape-Nuts for her supper with a soft boiled egg, and she thrives wonderfully on this kind of food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

DR. FORD SPEAKS

And Tells The Times About His Campaign in the East

Dr. Ford, the Conservative candidate, dropped into the Times office on Thursday evening, for half an hour's chat. He spent the day in Ashburnham and suburbs, and appeared to be well satisfied with his day's work.

The Doctor is exceedingly hopeful of the result, and says that he expects to head the poll by a handsome majority. In the back country, which he visited, he was well received, and was assured of a big vote in that district.

In discussing the outlook throughout the province, the Doctor said he was persuaded that the Conservatives would emerge from the conflict triumphant. There was every reason to believe that such would be the case.

Barbers May Raise Rates

The barbers of Peterborough contemplate an advance in rates at an early date. A prominent tonsorial artist said to The Times yesterday:

"I am of opinion that the time has arrived when our prices should be increased, in harmony with other things, and to partly overcome the extra expense in the way of wages, etc., that master barbers have to meet. I would suggest that general barbering such as haircutting and shaving prices be not changed, but hereafter it will cost 25c. instead of 15c. to have your razor honed. Then if you want your beard trimmed it will cost you 10c. instead of 20c. for haircut and beard trim as heretofore. I would also suggest that barbers close up one half day each week."

NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organised in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, will be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 356½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $950,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 35,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $2.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $5.80 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	286,319.88
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund, under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

BOER AND BRITON WILL NOW BE ONE

The Result of the South African War Will Soon Manifest Itself

NO TIME FOR NOW EXULTATION

A Survey of the Situation That is now Re-Assuring—John Bull Now Stronger Than Ever.

Special to The Times.

London, April 28 — The Mail says: The dawn of peace in South Africa is naturally a time for reflection and contemplation of the results of the great struggle in which the Boer and the Briton have been engaged. Among those who acknowledge allegiance to King Edward it is a time for exultation and congratulation, and among the vanquished South Africans it should be a time for philosophical introspectation. If these latter, notwithstanding the terrible temporary havoc that has been wrought, will realize how bright a prospect there is for continued peace, prosperity and contentment under the aegis of the flag of Britain, they will not for long mourn the loss of their national independence, and will on a day not far distant rejoice that they have had given them the liberties and privileges of British citizenship.

A survey of the field from the standpoint of the Briton leads to the conclusion that the immediate results of the conflict are far-reaching and momentous, and that ultimately this war will be regarded as epoch-making. A far-distant corner of the Empire was threatened by a pastoral people who would be numerically hardly sufficient to populate one of the minor manufacturing cities of England, and yet the task of arresting the disturbers of the peace has occupied a period of two years and a half, has involved an expenditure of over eight hundred millions of dollars, and has necessitated a sacrifice of something like twenty thousand lives. But a new era in the history of the Empire has been inaugurated. The latent power of Greater Britain had never before been put to the test. The fighting strength of John Bull was problematical, and that of the Imperial partnership was uncertain and unreliable. Other nations were sceptical and then envious, their scepticism amounting during the early stages of the struggle to a belief that the British army was a sham and that the British navy would soon prove to be one. The conviction gained ground that a few thousand peasant farmers were beginning the destruction of the Imperial fabric, and that there would soon be an end to Britain's political prestige and commercial supremacy. But Britain and Greater Britain displayed an ability for united action that soon excited the amazement of Europe. The people of every portion of the great Empire and of every race that at that time bowed the beloved Queen allegiance evinced a spirit of patriotism and devotion that has rarely if ever been equalled. The time of disillusion had come, and instead of exulting over Britain's supposed weakness, Europe was obliged to assume an attitude of impotent anger and ill-will. It would be superfluous to recount here the story of the campaign, with the great sacrifice and suffering that it involved, the destruction of life and property, the reputations made and unmade, the triumphs and disasters, joys and sorrows, and the harrowing and thrilling scenes on the blood-stained veldt and kopjes. There were the contributory details of the great imperial achievement, an achievement which, we believe, is destined to make South Africa one of the most valuable portions of our heritage. The war has engendered in the Mother Country a greater unity of interest, greater patriotism, greater loyalty to existing institutions and a more healthy national spirit than can be found in any previous period in the nation's history. With a greater knowledge of Britain's power has come a recognition of the worth of Britain's soldiers, and the application of remedies for such weaknesses and defects as have been found in her military system. In the British dominions beyond the seas it has brought into existence a wave of Imperial sentiment that gives inestimable strength to the Imperial bond. It has created a feeling of greater security and confidence in the great congeries of nations that make up the Empire, and of greater pride in their connection with the great sisterhood. The destinies of each dependency have become safer, its aspirations loftier, and the spirit that dominates it is one that should make for an increase in its prosperity, and an enhancement of its power. These are some of the fruits of the great outlay involved in the subjugation of the Boers, and few there are to say that the cost has been too great.

The restoration of peace is, however, not the highest Imperial interest. There are things that are more important than peace with the Boers, namely, the conservation of the integrity of the Empire, the maintenance of the existence of the world-wide federation of freedom which the Empire constitutes, and the upholding of the sword of justice before all the subject races of Asia and Africa. In order to secure these there must be a full recognition of Imperial supremacy in South Africa, the dispelling forever of the Afrikander dream of domination, and the extinction of the hope, a heritage of an evil past, of the dissolution of the Empire, and of an Afrikander succession to one portion of the dismembered possessions of the sick man. Any wavering in the Imperial resolve might mean the beginning of a centrifugal movement, and it matters little how long the struggle has lasted so long as the object is ultimately attained.

Transfer of the City of Paris and the City of New York to American Flag — Appointment of Committee

Special to The Times.

London, April 28 — The statements regarding the intentions of the managers of the Atlantic shipping combine vary with each edition of almost every newspaper here, and most of them entirely lack the semblance of authenticity, but they serve to enhance the general scare which is fairly voiced by the startling newspaper posters and headlines.

Shipping circles express satisfaction at the announcement of Mr. Anold-Forster, the Secretary of the Admiralty, in the House of Commons yesterday, of the appointment of a committee to inquire into the whole subject, as affecting the admiralty. Much is made of the fact that the Inman line steamers, City of Paris, now the American line steamer Philadelphia, and the City of New York, now the American line steamer New York, after receiving £26,000 in subsidies, were transferred to the American flag, and it is contended that there is nothing to prevent a repetition of such action.

The Westminster Gazette, however, solaces itself with the thought that if the law by which only American-built ships are entitled to fly the American flag is repealed, the British, as shipbuilders, stand to gain what they will lose as ship-owners.

The Cause of Dyspeptic Pains

Improperly digested food usually forms gases that cause a painful distention of the stomach and pressure against the heart. This results in much pain and distress, but Nerviline will relieve the distention, dispel the gas, and cure the dyspeptic pains very quickly. Polson's Nerviline is really an excellent remedy for dyspepsia, indigestion, cramps, summer complaint and all stomach and bowel troubles. No household is complete without Nerviline. Try a 25c. bottle.

Grants' Birthday Banquet — The British Camp at New Orleans and the Boer War.

Special to The Times.

Washington, April 27 — Gen. Pearson, the Boer agent here, has returned from New Orleans, and reports that the British camp there is flourishing. That President Roosevelt would overlook the gross outrages which this country is perpetrating on the Boer republics, is not pleasing to Pearson.

AUTOMOBILE ENDURANCE TEST

New York, April 26 — Fourteen gasoline carriages, a dozen steam vehicles and a number of electric machines made the start from Jamaica to-day on the one hundred mile endurance run under the auspices of the Long Island Automobile Club. Everyone interested in automobilism is discussing the probable result of the contest as it is certain to demonstrate the reliability of the automobile in general and furnish valuable information regarding the worth of the various types of power driven vehicles.

GRANT BIRTHDAY BANQUET

The Grand Monument Association has completed arrangements for its annual banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria to-night in celebration of Grant's birthday. General G. M. Washington, D.C., April 26 — Admiral Schley left Washington to-day for a week's visit to Tennessee. In response to invitations he will visit Memphis, Nashville, Chattanooga and several other cities, where elaborate preparations have been made to receive him.

ARCHBISHOP WILLIAMS IS 80

Boston, Mass., April 27 — Presents and congratulatory messages began to pour in upon Archbishop Williams yesterday in commemoration of his 80th birthday, which will be celebrated today. The priests of the archdiocese have planned to make the occasion a notable one in the history of the diocese.

Archbishop Williams was born in this city April 27, 1822. He began his education at a private school. Later he went to the Sulpician College at Montreal, and in 1841 was sent to the theological seminary conducted by the same fathers in Paris, where he was ordained in 1846. On his return home he was assigned to the Franklin street cathedral in this city as assistant, and afterward as rector. A few years later he was appointed Vicar-general of the diocese by Bishop Fitzpatrick, whom he succeeded as bishop of the diocese in 1856. In 1875 Boston was raised to an archbishopric, and on May 3 the pallium was conferred on Archbishop Williams. In all the long course of years that he has lived as priest, bishop and archbishop in Boston, the same zeal and devotion to duty have characterized Archbishop Williams, and it has been said for many years that his is one of the best governed dioceses in the country, and that with the church authorities at Rome no bishop in the United States has a higher standing. By the priests of his diocese Archbishop Williams is revered as a father, loved for his personal qualities and respected for his thoughtfulness of them and those in their care. It has been the proud boast of the priests of the diocese that there never has been any trouble between bishop and clergy.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 28 — A widespread public interest is manifested in the case of Mrs. Kate Soffel, which was called for trial to-day in the criminal court. Mrs. Soffel, who was the wife of the warden of the Allegheny county jail, is charged with aiding in the escape of the Biddles, who were killed in an effort to escape capture, the bullets of the pursuing posse also seriously wounding Mrs. Soffel. Able counsel has been secured to conduct the defence and the trial promises to be an interesting one.

INTERESTING TO FARMERS

Decided in a Case Heard at the Last Sittings of the Division Court

Rosborough vs. McIlmoyle — This was an action tried at the last sittings of the Division Court, which excited a good deal of interest among the farmers living in the neighborhood of Lakefield, the question being whether the defendant was bound to pay for certain pigs which he had bought, they being over the value of $40, and there being no memorandum in writing in regard to the contract and no payment of any part of the purchase money. The defendant never saw the pigs, but they were delivered at the Lakefield cheese factory in accordance with his instructions. Word was sent him the day after the delivery of the pigs that they were there, and a few days after that he offered to sell them to the cheese maker. The judgment delivered involves a great deal of research, and a very large number of precedents have been examined, with the result that His Honor finds that there may be delivery to an agent without the necessity of actual delivery to the defendant or inspection by him, and that there may be acceptance by words only, and he finds as a matter of fact that the defendant in this case did accept the hogs which had been delivered in accordance with his instructions. The Judge, therefore, gives judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed. Dennistoun, Peck & Stevenson, solicitors for the plaintiff; Messrs. Edmison & Dixon, solicitors for the defendant.

A SUCCESSFUL CONCERT

Given on Friday Night by the Choir of St Andrew's Church

The past few months' history in St. Andrews' choir has been most fertile in earnest and interesting endeavor and the vocal event which has been much looked forward to came to pass on Friday evening last, when notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather a most select and attentive audience gathered in St. Andrew's Sunday school hall and showed their appreciation of the choir in this, their initial effort at choral singing. Under the able and efficient leadership of Mr. Alfred Davies the improvement in this choir is most apparent to all. He has been most energetic and indefatigable in his efforts and we feel confident it is with no small amount of satisfaction he should witness the success of the evening's entertainment. The choir was most artistically arranged, a very pleasing effect being attained by the wearing of white by the ladies. The choruses were sung with great precision and good expression and were also well-balanced and of delightful rhythmic quality. The first number was "March of the Men of Harlech," which was heartily applauded, after which Miss Davies and Mr. Davies gave a piano duet in D major (Diabelli) which excelled in faultless execution. Mr. Gerrard then gave "Out on the Deep" (Lohr) in his usual happy style, followed by Miss Davies rendering "Come Sweet Morning" very sweetly and with the marked beauty of tone for which she is noted. Mr. Potter's reading "Sorrow at Easter" was much enjoyed, and Miss Weddell, who is well known to Peterborough audiences as a purely Scotch singer gave "Jessie's Dream" with good effect. The part song, "Silent Night," was most harmoniously rendered by Misses Davies, Weddell and Van Every, Mrs. Kerr and Messrs. Laing, Smith, Gerrard and Edwards. A pretty duet, "I Would That my Love" (Mendelssohn) was next given by Miss Davies and Mrs. Kerr, after which the humorous part song, "The Goslings," was given by Miss Van Every and Messrs. Laing, Smith, Gerrard. The chorus "O who will o'er the downs so free," was then given by the choir, and after a five minutes' intermission the choir gave "Drops of Rain," a descriptive piece which charmed all hearers with its suggestiveness of the weather. Miss Davies' piano solo Grand Fantasia on Weber's "Oberon" displayed most marked talent, splendid technique and conscientious interpretation. As an encore she gave a melody by Stephen Heller. The quartette "Venetian Boat Song," given by Mrs. Kerr and Messrs. Laing, Smith, Gillespie and Sollitt was followed by Miss McCrae reciting "The Chariot Race," from "Ben Hur." Miss McCrae held her audience well and proved herself the possessor of a very fine memory and good dramatic fire. The humorous glee, "Dame Durden," which was given by Messrs. Laing, Smith and Gerrard evoked much laughter and applause and was repeatedly encored. Miss Davies again favored the audience and gave "The World's Awakening" (Noel Johnson), after which a quartette composed of Mrs. Metheral, Miss Tully and Messrs. Smith and Gillespie rendered "Sweetly Come Those Strains Melodious" (G. F. Root), the effect of voices in the distance being well carried out by the choir. Mr. Potter then gave "King of the Sea" in good voice and was loudly encored. The last two numbers were part songs by the choir, the first being "Sweet and Low" (Sir J. Barnby), and "The Watchword," which drew forth much enthusiasm. The accompanists of the evening were Mr. Davies, Miss Davies and Miss Etta Garbutt.

At the conclusion a vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Davies and the choir by Mr. McFarlane, which was most warmly seconded by Messrs. McClelland and Webster. Mr. Davies in responding dwelt on the pleasure his connection with St. Andrews had given him and thanked the choir for the united effort which they had put forth to make the concert a success. Owing to the unfavorable state of the weather it was deemed advisable to repeat this entertainment on Tuesday, May 20th. The National Anthem brought this very pleasant and enjoyable evening to a close.

[We regret very much that for lack of space this report was omitted in Saturday's issue.]

BOERS HIDDEN IN THE LONG GRASS

Graphic Story of a Fight of the Queen's Bays Dragoons

A DARK AND MISTY NIGHT.

Commandant Prinsloo was Wounded and Captured by the British—The Hussars in a Charge

Special to The Times.

Pretoria, April 27 — Details have been received here of the gallant fight of Col. Rawley's column at Holsprut on Easter Tuesday. The column was 800 strong, consisting of the 2nd Queen's Bays, the 7th Hussars, and a few National scouts, with a convoy.

On April 1, having received information of the location of Alberts's laager, Colonel Fanshaw, with about three squadrons of the Bays and a few National Scouts, left camp at two o'clock in the morning, and trekked east through Nooitgedacht and Leeuwkop to Holspruit.

DARK AND MISTY

The night was extremely dark and misty, and it was difficult to see a yard ahead. It was felt that the horses were descending a slope towards a drift, but before reaching the banks the leading squadron came suddenly on a number of hobbled horses, betraying the vicinity of the enemy. Simultaneously the whole Boer force, which had been hidden in the river and the long grass, opened fire almost from under the horses' hoofs, and our men galloped to the shelter of the ridge they had just descended. Here a short stand was made while Colonel Fanshawe arranged his men, but he found that the Boers held a position on the left dominating him, and he had to retire on the next ridge.

Then commenced a series of rear-guard actions, the enemy continually out-flanking our men on either side until the Bays were quite surrounded. In the darkness it was almost impossible to distinguish friend from enemy. The contending forces were often mixed up, frequently at close quarters, and the fighting was mostly at close range.

A GALLANT FIGHT

Many hand to hand encounters took place, the enemy in front making short rushes, shouting and yelling "Hands up," but none thought of surrender. Only a few horseless men unable to get away and wounded were captured.

On reaching Leeuwkop, where Col. Fanshawe had thought he would be able to hold the enemy in check until reinforcements arrived, he found the Boers in strong possession, and fell back further north. By this time dawn was breaking.

The squadrons still kept cool and in order, retiring in turns and encouraged by the approach of the 7th Hussars, who came dashing to their assistance. The Boers in turn had to retire before the eager cavalry, who burned to get to close quarters.

Some of the Hussars did charge a body of the enemy, scattering them in all directions and killing two, but once the retreat had commenced the Boers were soon out of sight behind their strong positions.

PRINSLOO CAPTURED

Dr. Richie, who stayed behind to attend to the wounded, says the Boers treated them well, very few being molested, but some of the captured men were stripped. Commandant Alberts stated that they lost very heavily, including Commandant Prinsloo and his brother killed.

The latter fell into our hands and was returned in an ambulance under a white flag. Three field cornets were also killed. Eleven dead Boers were picked up on the field, and it is also known that the enemy had sixteen seriously wounded.

All accounts agree that their loss was equal to ours.

Our casualties were heavy. Most of the wounded were severely injured, owing to the closeness of the range, the latest return being seventy wounded and fourteen killed.

The Bays lost all their squadron leaders, six out of twelve officers being hit. Major Vaughan had two horses shot under him, and although hit below the knee early in the fight he continued right through.

The Hague, Apr. 28—In their morning bulletin from Castle Loo, Queen Wilhelmina's physicians say the rise in the patient's temperature yesterday evening was of shorter duration than before. Consequently, the Queen had a fairly quiet night, resulting beneficially to her general condition.

A BIG EXCURSION

London, April 26 — Well-grown boys and girls, as well as the "tiny tots," are to be feasted in the great coronation excursion of 46,000 children from Southwark.

The project which is now being arranged will necessitate the purchase of 90,000 pies, 46,000 scones, and, approximately, 125,000 cups of tea.

Each of the 46,000 children is to receive a scone on entering the train, and meat and fruit pies are to be given at the journey's end.

In various pleasant spots in the neighborhood of Box Hill, Ashtead and Epsom the children will be able to enjoy fresh air, music, games and refreshments — a few thousand children at each spot. Each group of children will vary in the design of the band on the children's arms.

The huge excursion is to be non-sectarian and non-political, and the fifty schools, board and voluntary, in the borough are all to be centres for the organization of the trip.

BIG EGGS

London, April 26 — An egg of the Aepyornis Maximus is to be sold by auction. These eggs are the largest in existence, one having been known to contain two gallons of water, or equal to 125 hens' eggs. The bird has long since died out, but it remains in the shape of a few bones which have been found in Madagascar.

A CURIOUS RAILWAY

London, April 26—The Millisle and Garlieston Railway, Wigtownshire, is a curiosity in railway enterprise. Its days, however, seem numbered. It is about a mile long, and is jointly owned by four great railway companies, who are getting tired of its average weekly receipts of a sovereign, on which have to be maintained an engine, with driver and fireman, one carriage and a guard. Sometimes the fares collected on a journey total threepence. The early morning and late evening trains have recently been withdrawn, and the mails between Millisle and Garlieston are now wheeled on a barrow to catch the Whithorn connection.

EXPLORER'S DONKEY DIET

London, April 26—Major H. H. Austin had quite a thrilling story to tell the Royal Geographical Society last night when he described his journey from Omdurman to Mombasa, via lake Rudolf.

The major, in company with Major Bright and Major Garner, left Omdurman in December, 1900, having an escort of fifty-nine Sudanese soldiers. On approaching Lake Rudolf unfriendly natives were met, and some of the Sudanese escort were continually missing and being found speared.

Water became scarce, while for food they were compelled to eat the donkeys they had brought with them.

The major and his companions were several times at death's door, and of the fifty-nine Soudanese who started only fourteen survived.

SLAVERY IS RECOGNIZED

London, April 26 — On April 25, 1898, a very important decision was given by the judge of the Provincial Court of Mombasa, in which it was laid down, on the advice of two Mohammedan doctors learned in the law, who sat as assessors in the case, that all slaves imported into the coast territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar (which are leased by Great Britain from him), since the decree of April 18, 1876, were illegally held and should be confiscated. According to this judgment a very large proportion of the slave population of the coast strip (estimated by the bishop at no less than nine-tenths of the whole), are legally free. Four years have elapsed since that decision was given, and yet nothing has been done to make it known and effective throughout the territory. On the contrary, in spite of it our administration still recognises the status of slavery, and that notwithstanding that Ministers have repeatedly declared their wish to abolish it.

PLAN TO PRESERVE MILK

London, April 26—If recent scientific reports are to be believed, we are on the eve of a revolution in regard to our milk supply. Milk preserved by means of deleterious substances is to be a thing of the past. The new process is of French origin, the discovery having been made by members of the Pasteur Institute. For the moment its exact nature is not to be disclosed, but it appears that after the milk has cooled it is treated with oxygen, the microbes being put into a state of paralysis, so that they cannot multiply. Then the milk is heated to a fixed degree and cooled again, it being claimed that the fluid so treated will last in a perfectly pure state over nine months. In a short time the system is to be introduced to this country by prominent members of the wholesale milk trade in England and Scotland.

KILLED ON THE RAILWAY

Gananoque, April 24 — The body of a man was found lying across the G.T.R. Track at Thousand Island Island Junction, having been run over by an express. From papers found in the pockets he is supposed to be Wm. Macoon, of Elgin. He is about 32 years of age. Coroner Shaw of Lansdowne will hold an inquest.

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSTABULARY

London, April 24—During the course of the budget debate in the Commons the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that after July 1 the new colonies were to assume the cost of maintaining 6,000 of the 10,000 men in the South African Constabulary, even if peace were not concluded.

Otonabee Council

The Otonabee council met on the 21st April, all the members being present except John Dryell, who was unable to attend on account of illness. Ormiston Stewart was present requesting that his and Fred Stewart's statute labor be commuted for 3 years, to improve the roads near their places.—Granted. It was decided to hold the court of revision on the 28th May. $1650 was granted for expenditure on the roads. Following accounts were ordered to be paid: E. J. Grieve, for 19 days employed as policeman at E W Woods, to prevent the spread of smallpox, $21.37; J. J. Turner & Sons, double hospital tent, $80, 2 spring camp beds and mattresses, $6; stove pipes, tins, 30c; Dickson Co., for tent floor, $10.19; S. Mather, repairing scrapers, etc., $0.75.

A communication was received from Dennistoun, Peck, & Stevenson advising the Council that the timber on the road allowances can be sold by the council. Council adjourned to May 28th.

THRILLING BATTLE WITH THE BOLOMEN

Captain Schoeffel of the Ninth Infantry Tells a Graphic Story

ATTACKED FROM THE AMBUSH

Routed a Band of Barbarous Filipinos with a Band of Fifteen Brave Yankee Soldiers

Special to The Times.

San Francisco, April 28 — Captain Schoeffel of the Ninth Infantry, who has recently returned from the Philippines, where he led a detachment of his regiment in a hot fight against the bolomen, has arrived here. His left foot and leg are entirely paralyzed from the severing of the sciatic nerve by a bolo thrust. Two operations at Manila did not result favorably, and the handsome young officer is here on waiting orders at the Presidio Hospital. He hopes soon to be ordered to Washington for treatment, and then to Johns Hopkins, in Baltimore, for another operation, which will consist of bringing the nerve together and sewing it. This may restore to him the use of his foot and leg. His home is in Rochester, N.Y., where his wife and children reside.

STORY OF THE FIGHT

The gallant captain recounts the story of his adventure with great modesty. He says: "Early on the morning of December 24 I sent Lieut. Lang with eighteen men, many of them native scouts, by boat to a place called Dap-Dap, while I and eighteen men of Company E, Ninth Infantry, and one or two native scouts, went by boats also to a place called Talinga, at the head of a bay several miles in the rear of the first named place.

"The first man on the trail in our little advance guard was our faithful old Filipino scout, who knew the country, every inch of it, well. He was on the lookout at every tree for a bamboo spear trap.

"These people have an unpleasant way of bending over a tree branch and fastening it down with a sharp pointed bamboo spear in such a hidden way that when the unwary soldier steps on it, it will fly up and pierce him through in the vicinity of the chest.

A NOVEL WEAPON

"Suddenly the scout gave a quick, deep grunt and fell forward on his face. A bolo had gone through him, and when we reached him his intestines were protruding. He was carried a little to one side, and, strange to say, he lived. He had not fallen before the corporal yelled 'Goo-Goos!'

"In less than a second the Cougan grass was literally alive with their brandished bolos, and the air danced with waves of red sashes and caps.

"As soon as the firing began my other men, who were a short distance in the rear, started to our assistance.

"A mad boloman started for me, and I had nothing to meet him with. My knowledge of boxing came in play, and just as he reached me I sidestepped him, so to speak. He sank to his knees on the trail, and I drew my revolver and shot him in the chest, as I thought, killing him.

"At the same time three of them came at me on the other side with knives raised. One of them dropped on his knees and made a dive at my chest. I parried and poured hot shot into them with the pistol, and two of them fell. The other ran.

"I fought on unconsciously, and when my revolver was empty I saw one of my own men, now so pitifully few, lying at my feet. He was conscious, but he had been stabbed near the heart. Death was not far distant. I yelled for his gun and belt and took them. Then, with the help of the few men left and some friendly natives, our bearers, who had simply sunk into the grass from fright when the fight began, we fought like Turks, and saw the remaining bolomen turn and run.

"The arrival of Lang and his men was more than welcome, for we could not by our own efforts make a move to get out of the tall grass. They at once went to work and cut down saplings and made stretchers on which to carry the wounded men down to the boats. I was among the number, for my wounds had made me ill and faint. It was an awful trail, and we all had to be tied to the stretchers. The dead were carried on the natives' backs, and it made the most gruesome sight I ever saw. We got back in our boats to Tanaguan, where Dr. Calhoun, the post surgeon, dressed all wounds."

CHURCH NOTES

At the George street church last night Rev. Mr. Wilson, the pastor, preached upon the subject of music, while the choir rendered a choice programme. There was a large attendance.

The Oddfellows attended divine service at St. Andrews' church last night, when Rev. J. G. Potter preached an eloquent and impressive sermon. There was a large turnout of the brethren.

There was a celebration of the Holy Communion yesterday morning at All Saint's church. Rev. Henry Benoit preached at the morning service.

The pastor, Rev. J. Bastow, preached at the Murray street church yesterday morning on the subject of Paul's Thorn in the Flesh. In the evening he preached on Obedience.

NORTH MONAGHAN

The Township Council met in the town hall on Monday, April 14th, at 1.30 p.m. All the members were present. The reeve, Mr. Bradburn, presided.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Communications were presented and read as follows:

From the Clerk of the County of Peterborough, enclosing statement of assessments made by the County valuators in the Township of North Monaghan.—Received.

From J. H. Foster, applying to have his property placed in Road Division No. 1 for statute labor purposes. —Received and no action taken.

From Jas. R. Bell, asking for damages for rig broken on road.—Received and no action taken.

The following accounts were presented:

R. Sanderson, for taking down and putting up fence on 10 Con., $2.00; John Bell, for cleaning Park street drain, $4.25; Review Printing Co., for minute book, $3.00; R. Revington, for fixing and railing washout on drain road, $6.50.

On motion of Messrs. Dobbin and Madill, these accounts were passed, and ordered paid.

Accounts for opening snow roads during the stormy spells of winter were presented as follows:

Road Div. No. 1, under D. Galloway, Com., $83.25; Road Div. No. 2, under R. Sanderson, Com., $28.25; Road Div. No. 3, under J. J. Bennett, Com., $30.15; Road Div. No. 4, under R. Revington, Com., $12.50.

It was moved by Messrs. Madill and May, that sufficient money to pay these accounts as presented and certified, be advanced to each Commissioner, who is hereby instructed to pay them and to file receipted pay sheets for the same forthwith. Said amount of money to be deducted from the amount of commutation tax due each Road Division respectively for the year 1902.—This was carried.

It was moved by Messrs. May and Smith, that the portion of the Road Division No. 4, consisting of lot 12, in the 13th concession, with the highways therein, and also that portion of the gravel road running through lot 12, in 12th concession, be placed in Road Division No. 1, for Statute Labor purposes, and the clerk is hereby authorized to prepare a by-law for passing accordingly. This was carried.

On motion By-laws No. 505 and 506, appointing certain township officers for 1902 were then introduced, given their necessary readings and passed.

The appointments made were as follows:

Collector, Jas. Barnard; Road Commissioners, D. Galloway, R. Sanderson, J. J. Bennett and R. Revington; pound keepers, W. Williamson, W. Laing, R. Sanderson and Thos. Hooper; fence viewers, George Young, sr., J. Fowler and Fred Stinson; Thos. Hunter, Jas. McIndoo, and J. M. McIntosh; R. Waterman, John Brown and W. Whitfield; N. W. Maybee, A. Cummings and A. Saunders.

On motion the Council adjourned to meet on Monday, May 26th, at 1.30 p.m., as a court of revision, and for general business.

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 13 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 2 1-2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 3 1-2 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After jogging along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented shoals for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing, off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 82. There were 138 new cases in September, 380 in October, 673 in November, 804 in December and 1,385 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. At present the plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

"And she isn't married yet? Gracious, she's well preserved! She is the same Birdie Heppindyke she was fifteen years ago."

"No, she's not the same. She spells it 'Byrdye' now."—Chicago Tribune.

Caught in a Stampede.

TWO years ago, when the cowboys of north-eastern Arizona came together to find out who was the "best man" in various ways, James Evans won the steer-tying championship by roping, throwing and tying a vicious steer in twenty-four seconds. But in a recent round-up the champion did a more remarkable thing, by which, says the Kansas City "Star," he saved his own and another man's life.

While he and some companions were camping for the night on a high tableland, which ended a few miles away in an abrupt drop of two hundred feet, a storm swept through the mountains. Made nervous by the lightning, the herd of fifteen hundred cattle stampeded in the direction of the precipice. Evans and his men mounted hurriedly and, circling to the front of the maddened cattle, tried with whoops and revolver-shots to turn them back.

In the dense blackness of the night Evans's horse missed his footing and went down in a heap, one leg in a gopher-hole. The horse of a cowboy named Davis, running close behind, stumbled over Evans's horse, and Davis, too, came to earth and lay still, unconscious.

Fifty yards away came the herd, and a short flash of lightning showed Evans the situation. The swiftly moving sea of cattle reached one hundred yards each way. Unable to arouse Davis, and never thinking of leaving his disabled comrade, Evans took the only chance of saving both. He emptied his own revolver and his companion's into the center of the herd, cutting a breach in the front of the mass. Then, throwing the inanimate form of Davis over his shoulder, he awaited his opportunity.

As one of the leaders brushed by, Evans, with one movement, put the body of Davis across the shoulders of the steer, and mounted, also. Vainly the animal leaped, bucked and side-jumped. With his legs wrapped tightly around the body of his mount, Evans drove his spurs deep in, and held himself and Davis in place.

The steer, wild with rage, agony and fright, rapidly left the herd in the rear, and, veering to the right in a furious gallop, carried his riders out of danger. Then Evans rolled off the back of his strange rescuer, and a half-hour later, when his cowboys turned the herd at the rim of the canyon, and rode back to look for the foreman and Davis, they found them, both unconscious. The weary steer, with his sides covered with blood, lay exhausted a short distance away.

The outfit ordered a medal for Evans, and the steer has been pensioned for life on the best alfalfa in the valley.

A Revolutionary Age.

Soulless corporations, heartless coquettes and conscienceless rascals of various sorts we have had with us now these many years, and it looks very much now as if a kind of providence was about to even things up a little by providing us with such useful contrivances as wireless telegraphy, heatless light, smokeless powder, boneless shad and seedless oranges. If some genius will rise up now and give us a breed of bitless dogs and stingless mosquitoes, together with some loseless umbrellas and spendless cash, we shall all be happy and content.—"Leslie's Weekly."

When to Get Married.

The astrologers, it is said, have named the following as propitious dates for marriages for 1902: January 2, 4, 11, 19 and 21; February 1, 3, 10, 19 and 21; March 3, 5, 12, 20 and 23; April 3, 4, 12, 20 and 22; May 2, 4, 12, 20 and 23; June 1, 3, 11, 19 and 21; July 1, 3, 12, 19, 21 and 31; August 2, 11, 18, 20 and 30; September 1, 9, 18, 19 and 28; October 1, 8, 15, 17, 27 and 29; November 5, 11, 13, 22 and 25; December 1, 3, 10, 19, 28 and 29.

The Monk's Knowledge of Women.

AN interesting story comes from the French Alps of Dauphiny relating the futile efforts of the Princess of Croy, who desired to enter the monastery of the Grande Chartreuse, a habitation from which women visitors are rigidly excluded.

The story runs that the Princess dressed herself in boy's clothes and accompanied her husband to the institution. The gates were opened to them, and the Prince sent his card to the father superior, with a line to the effect that he was accompanied by a friend.

Just as they were about to make the round of the building the word was received that the father would like to see the Prince and "his friend." Going upstairs they were received by the smiling monk, who cordially invited them to join him in an appetizing luncheon. The Princess endeavored to make the best of the situation, but she was not put any the more at her ease by the fact that the monk kept gazing sharply at her.

At last he exclaimed suddenly: "Catch it, young man!" at the same time throwing at her a large pear. The Princess was startled, and, thrown completely off her guard, made a motion to grab up her skirt, the absence of which she overlooked in her confusion.

Then the father stopped smiling and said with great gravity:

"I beg your pardon, madam, but ladies are not allowed in the monastery. I must ask you to wait outside until the Prince has finished his inspection."

And outside she had to go, the reverend father bowing her from the room with most elaborate politeness.

The Democracy of Children.

ONE amusing trait in children is their unconscious democracy. They are nearly always democratic when permitted any latitude. The desire for playmates levels sense of caste, if any exists. On a street through which I often pass there is a coterie of children who blend with the most thorough harmony, although they are of quite different social strata. One of the boys is a "smart" young gentleman in knickerbockers, always well groomed; another is a little Italian; a third, the thin, restless, wide awake son of a housekeeper. One of the little girls is a negress, with her woolly hair standing out from her head in thin curved-up tails. She is quite a belle in this "mixed" company.—Harper's "Bazar."

For Farmers.

The fact that last year some crop did not bring good prices is often an indication that this year prices may be high, for the reason that such a crop is liable to be discarded this season for something else. A successful fruit grower once stated that whenever he found his neighbors discarding a crop he invariably selected it for himself, as he expected a scarcity of the crop in market by reason of less land being devoted to it.

Poultry and Dairy.

Washing the hands seems a needless task sometimes, but the successful dairyman will find the moments spent in this way are the most profitable of the day. Clean hands lead to clean cows, and with clean cows there will be a clean product.

Experience With Houdans.

I have had fifteen years' experience in breeding Houdan fowls, and am strongly of the opinion that the high favor in which this breed is held by the French farmer and poulterer is not misplaced. I think it a great mistake that the Houdans are not more generally raised by the farmers of this country. They are medium sized, good layers of large white eggs, and are highly esteemed as a table bird. They have no combs to freeze in severe weather—a convenience to farmers who expect fowls to thrive without protection.—Charles Hopper, Ashley, O.

Poultry on the Dairy Farm.

Just why dairymen do not make poultry-raising pay is not a problem hard to solve. The reason is lack of knowledge relating to poultry-raising... How can we make fowls hustle and exercise? First, we must not feed too heavily or make it too easy for birds to get their food. We must get them out of their houses in winter as much as possible. The profit in winter depends on having the hens well housed and giving special care. A house 12 by 20 feet is large enough for 50 fowls. Do not permit any of the floor space to be occupied with nests, roosts or other fixtures. All of the floor space should be reserved for the hens, and a part of it should be used for a scratching floor. Put in only enough glass for lighting purposes.

One reason why some people do not succeed with poultry is that they do not know how to feed to the best advantage. Large fowls require a different system of feeding than small ones. Leghorns are not likely to get overfat. They will leave corn on the ground and run after insects; while the larger breeds will eat the corn that is given them and stand around waiting for more. Chopped clover is good, and should be fed each day, and chopped vegetables will not take its place. On the average farm there is much that goes to waste that the fowls can utilize, and this helps to give profit.—F. M. Munger, in American Agriculturist.

Guinea Fowls for Farm.

There is a difference of opinion as to the profitableness of guinea fowls. Where one person succeeds ten will perhaps fail. Guineas are very like wild birds in habits and it is thought that it is impossible to tame them but this is not the case. On a farm where they have a wide range guineas can be raised to advantage. They begin to lay in April and lay until the middle of October. During this season chicken hens get broody and in August and September moult and a flock of guineas will keep the egg basket filled.

Young guineas are susceptible to cold, and we do not set any eggs until the first of June, and have them coming off from the first of July until the middle of August. Those taken off later will not get grown before cold weather, but will make nice broilers to use in the fall. We set the eggs under an ordinary hen and raise them with the chickens; keep them fastened in a coop with the hen for several days, until they get used to the hen; then turn them out to forage in the day but shut them up at night. We give them the same kind of food as the young chicks, making sure to keep the coop's floor covered with coarse sand. The little guineas are so tame that it is hard to keep from stepping on them when going to feed or to put up at night. Her guineas roost in the fowl house, and, although they make the circuit round the farm every day, they come back to a clover patch near the fowl yard to lay, and nearly always lay near each other. I do not find them any harder to raise than chickens. They are great foragers, bug catchers and insect destroyers, and trouble grain and truck patches less than any other class of fowls.

The meat of the guinea resembles that of wild game in flavor, and is delicious, fit for an epicure. In many sections of the country partridges, quails, etc., are very scarce, and I do not see why guineas could not be hatched by incubators and raised to supply those who know what a toothsome bird the guinea is.—L. G. Holland, Ninety-Six, S. C.

The Water on a Dairy Farm.

The water supply should be even more scrupulously guarded than the food supply. It serves a double purpose, that of water for the cow and for the washing of the utensils. The water for both should be equally pure, and it ought to be made an axiom that water unfit to wash the pails or cans is unfit for cattle to drink. The milking cow requires large quantities of water, and whether it be capable of demonstration that impurities may find their way into the milk, it is safest to take the benefit of the doubt and use only pure water. A shallow dug well in the corner of the cow lot cannot escape contamination at some time. The contamination may not last all the time, and it may be, as is usually the case, that it is of a harmless character. The fact is that any contamination from the surface, no matter what may be its character, marks the well as one that may become infected and the cause of an epidemic. It only remains for the right kind of an infection to enter. It may require one year or forty years.

The special forms which are partial to the water supply are the intestinal germs that cause diarrhoea and the typhoid form. Many of the most alarming epidemics of typhoid have been traced to such source. It is not an easy matter to obtain an adequate supply of water at all places about a city, but as far as possible it should be from driven wells. As far as tested, all driven wells of more than twenty-five feet are supplying pure water. The hard-pan near the surface acts as an effective barrier to the passage of germs, and those that come from below are harmless. A driven well of twenty-five feet is a deeper well from a sanitary standpoint than any dug well. All dairies within the corporate limits of a city should be compelled to use city water.—United States Bulletin No. 88.

When women gets into politics
Reform will just be great,
Five dollar votes will be marked down
[illegible]

When a woman gives up it is because she has gone to the utmost limit of strength and endurance. It is a marvel how women will stagger on under the daily household burdens when the whole body is racked with pain.

For the nervous, run-down condition which so many women experience, as a result of overstrain in household cares, there is no medicine can equal Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It strengthens the weak stomach by curing diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition. It purifies the blood of poisons which cause rheumatism and other painful diseases. It nourishes the nerves, and builds up the body with sound, healthy flesh.

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery" and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

Accept no substitute for the "Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for weakness, nervousness and debility.

"I want the whole world to know what Dr. Pierce's medicines have done for me," writes Mrs. Helen Hardgrove, of Bangs, Knox Co., O. "I had many of the ills of woman's life. My lungs and throat troubled me besides, and I had rheumatism. About a year ago I had to give up work I was so bad. I had heard so much about your medicine I thought I would try it. I took four bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' and by the time I had taken half of the first bottle I began to gain, and kept on getting better. And now I have no more of my old ailments and am entirely cured of rheumatism. I feel like a new woman."

Anecdotal.

When the English barrister, Richard Eve, desired to "take silk"—or, in other words, to become a Queen's Counsel—he sent the usual note to the senior members on the circuit to see whether anyone objected, according to custom. Mr. Adam Walker, one of the senior members, replied as follows:—"My dear Eve.—You may take silk or a fig leaf. I don't care.—Adam."

Shortly after Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, R.A., was knighted, he and Lady Alma-Tadema gave an At Home at St. John's Wood. Everybody present was congratulating them, and one lady was very profuse. "Oh, dear Sir Lawrence," she said, "I am awfully glad to hear of the honor you have received. I suppose now that you are knighted you will give up painting and live like a gentleman."

In an Ohio town last fall, the African Methodist-Episcopal Church of that district held a conference, and for a week the town was filled with colored pulpit orators. A few days after the conference closed its sessions, one of the leading colored women of the town drove out to Pea Ridge to purchase chickens of an old mammy who had supplied the family for years. Aunt Hanna, coming to the gate, said: "I'm sorry, Miss Allie. I ain't got a chicken left. Dey all done enter de ministry."

A story is going the rounds about a prominent Nova Scotia lawyer who is noted for his carelessness in dress, which fact annoys the members of the Bar exceedingly. Entering the court-room one day minus a cravat, the judge reproved him, saying the law required him to wear one. "Oh, yes, your honor. I know it," he answered; "but it does not say where he shall wear it," and as he spoke he pulled it out of his trousers pocket. The matter then dropped.

General William T. Sherman was fond of relating the following story: "When I was with the army in Georgia, a slave-owner about Christmas time missed a fine fat turkey. He suspected a good-looking mulatto, and ordered the man brought before him. 'You have stolen my turkey and eaten it,' said the irate planter. 'I'se not gwine to say I didn't, when you says I did, massa.' 'I ought to have you flogged. What have you to say why I should not punish you?' 'Well, massa, you hain't lost anything particular. You see, you has a little less turkey and a good deal more nigger.' And the master was compelled to acknowledge the philosophy of the slave, and let him go unwhipped."

As a young man Paul Kruger was regarded as an authority on psalm singing, and the farmers used to come to him to learn the keynote for starting the psalms at the next Sunday's service. Kruger, even in those days, was no believer in the policy of giving anything away—not even a note of music—so he had a uniform charge of a double handful of dried peaches for his instruction. Even the fact that the work was in the service of religion did not deter him from resorting to strategy, for he made a point of giving each applicant a different note. The result when the pious Doppers attempted to raise their voices in sacred harmony next Sunday may be imagined. The result was that each man concluded he had lost the key, and had to return for a further lesson. "I nearly bankrupted them of their dried peaches," said the president.

Ford Madox Brown, the artist, once had to be smuggled into his own exhibition. The occasion was a private view in Bond street of the Manchester fresco, "John Kay." The artist being unwell at the time was accompanied in his carriage to the gallery by his doctor and old friend, William Gill. The time passed pleasantly enough en route in conversation, when suddenly Madox Brown's talk came to an abrupt full stop; he started as though struck by some very disquieting thought, and wildly plunged round in his various pockets, blank dismay depicted on his countenance the while. "Good heavens, Gill!" he exclaimed, "I have forgotten my card of admission! What am I to do?" "Your card of admission!" replied his amazed friend, "surely you can get in without that?" "No, no," answered Madox Brown in despair, "they will never let me in—they don't know me!" Fortunately, however, Mr. Gill was provided with the necessary passport, and he thus played the distinctly original role of getting an artist admission into his own show.

Here is a little gem clipped from a small boy's essay on parents:—"Parents are things which boys have to look after them. Most girls also have parents. Parents consist of pas and mas. Pas talk a good deal about what they are going to do, but mostly it's the mas that make you mind."—Chicago News.

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE,

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.

WITH PRIDE.

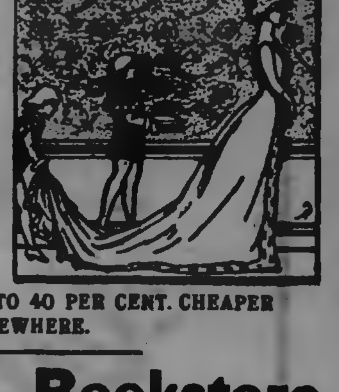
You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the de[illegible]on scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end O[illegible] papers are fit for royal homes.



A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

They Staked Their Lives.

NOT long ago, among the varied pictures of human life which go to make up the daily newspaper, appeared a story as thrilling as fiction, although it was only a part of the plain news of the day. It had to do with the life-savers at the Chatham station which guards the end of Cape Cod. For thirty-six hours Captain Eldredge and his crew, who patrol this point of land projecting far out into the Atlantic, went through as hard an experience as brave men are often called upon to endure. The story is outlined by the "Youth's Companion:"

During a freezing hurricane they saw a schooner in distress off Pollock Rip. Ordinarily there could have been no question as to whether or not they should go to her assistance; for although every drop of water froze as fast as it fell, and the sea was mad, and Pollock Rip is a treacherous place, yet life-savers are used to riotous weather and do not hesitate. But this time there was a special element of danger; a northwest wind tearing down past the edge of the land at sixty miles an hour made it impossible for any boat that should set out for Pollock Rip to return against the gale.

But the men of the Chatham station did not stop to reckon their chances of return. Trusting that the schooner might hold out through the storm if manned and pumped by a fresh crew, they struck out in their life-boat toward the Rip.

Although the wind was with them, it was a hard pull. Three times they were nearly swamped, and when they reached the schooner, they dared not pull alongside of her. It took an hour of hard work to get aboard, and even then the crew of the schooner had to pull them up one by one with ropes, as if they, the life-savers, were the rescued, not the rescuers.

They had won their goal, but it might still be nothing but a goal of death; they knew that when they started. One pump was broken, the crew of the vessel was half exhausted, and the water was pouring into the schooner at the rate of nine hundred pump-strokes an hour.

Sending most of the ship's crew to their bunks, Captain Eldredge and his men manned the two good pumps and fought the inrushing water. After thirty hours of fighting they won. That is how the schooner "Emma D. Endicott," Captain Rogers of New York, lived to be towed up to Boston.

If she had not lived, the men of the Chatham life-saving station, who staked their lives on the chance that they could reach her and keep her afloat, who went to her aid knowing they could not return until the wind abated—well, they would not have lived to hear people tell them how brave they are.

A Cheerful Prophecy.

THE animal that cannot be trained to keep its wits about it on the approach of a motor car must disappear. Its stupidity, filth, sloth, fear of everything and useless size prove to the most conservative that it must go. The horse that will not stand a motor car may be the delight of its owner, but it is a public nuisance and a public danger, and ought to be shot like a mad dog. Horsemen have no right to bring unmanageable brutes into the public highways, to the public danger, and it is time this elementary justice should be recognised. The motor is going to become the means of locomotion for all light transit, and by the ordinary roads as they exist to-day. It is the pedestrian and the horse that have got to give way. The horse in traffic, if he chooses to bolt, is uncontrollable. The motor, from the lightest bicycle to the heaviest car, is perfectly controllable, occupies half the space, and travels now through the congested streets at double and treble the speed of any horse-drawn vehicle. The only thing the two have in common is that at times they both refuse to go.

The unobservant talk of the accidents that would happen. The accidents will be a great deal fewer in number. A conclusive proof of this, to any one with any sense, is the fact that in the thousand miles tour no one, I believe, was hurt, though the roads were lined with spectators. In the race from Paris to Berlin, three days, and the tour around Italy, ten days, but two children were killed, the result entirely of their own carelessness or that of their parents. Suppose, for a moment, that in France a hundred and ten teams, or, rather, droves, of horses—there were a hundred and ten motors—ranging from fifty in a bunch down to two—this was the horse-power of the machines—had been let loose and driven at top speed for three days on the public roads. Will anyone tell me that thousands of people would not have been killed, that hundreds of drivers would not have lost their lives as well? But that would have been described as sport. . . . The only danger to be feared from the motor car is to its own driver, the only drawback is its own imperfection. Read the reports of automobile accidents: proportionately, these are far fewer than from any other form of locomotion, and in nine cases out of ten the accident occurs to the driver or the occupant of the car; in the tenth case it is owing to the stupidity or the carelessness of the person who gets in front. The average pedestrian has simply got to learn to keep out of the way, and that is the end of it.—Joseph Pennell in "Contemporary Review."

The World Lost for Love's Sake

have paid the penalty of my folly with my young life.

"I will live from day to day—forgetting if I can — then the month wanes all will be over."

It was hard to face death so calmly, and she so young and fair.

How long she remained crouching on her knees—giving herself up to the abandonment of her terrible woe—she never knew.

A slight noise startled her; she turned round just in time to see a tall, slender man leap lightly from the balcony through the open window directly into the room, holding up his hand with a menacing gesture indicating silence. It was the French count.

"Hush!" he cried. "Surely you recognize me."

He had sprung forward, stifling with a muttered imprecation the cry of horror on her red lips.

"What are you doing here? How dared you come?" she gasped, recoiling from him in terror.

A merciless smile stirred beneath his heavy mustache, showing his dazzling white teeth.

"Two very good reasons brought me here, my dear madame, the first," with a very low bow, "to pay my respects to your dear self; the other a pressing need of glittering gold which I told you must be forthcoming.

"Your servants refused to take up my card, on the ground that you were in your boudoir ill with a sick headache, and had given positive orders that you were not to be disturbed. I was not to be balked in that way—I knew the location of your room—and leaped without difficulty from one balcony to the other, and here I am."

Daisy fell back into the nearest seat trembling in every limb, gazing at the bold, handsome face that fascinated her with such awful terror. He glanced toward the inner rooms.

"You are entirely alone but for me?" he asked questioningly. "Tell me, is it safe to speak? Are we alone?"

Daisy drew a little quivering breath, nodding a silent "yes," realizing that she was so fawfully, awfully alone with him, yet she dared not, if she would, have aroused the occupants of the house.

He drew his chair close up beside her, despite the fact that she waved him back with a gesture of her white hands pitiful to see.

"In the first place, I must tell you of my wooing," he said. "Fair Olive is to be mine; we are to be married within the coming month. You do not congratulate me, my dear madame; evidently you do not look upon your future brother-in-law with much favor; but be that as it may, the fact remains the same.

"I shall expect you to arrange for a grand banquet, for we must be married in style. And that reminds me to mention that it takes money for a wedding trip, and the amount which you were to hand me last week has not been forthcoming. I will take it now, if you please, dear madame."

"You have goaded me to madness," moaned Daisy. "I have given you every dollar I could raise; you have my diamonds and every article of value I possess. I can do no more."

"There is still another way to raise the amount, since it is a matter of necessity. Your husband has a bank account, and what is the husband's should belong to the wife. You can give your husband's check for five thousand, and he will never miss the amount. I have noticed you are a very clever imitator with the pen; it is a gift, my dear madame, which one should profit by. A few dashes of the pen and we would have such an admirable imitation of Mr. Hamilton's signature that it would puzzle even that gentleman himself as to whether he ever wrote it or not."

"Do I comprehend the full import of your words? You—you ask me—me, Alexander Hamilton's wife, who loves him better than life itself, to forge his name to a check? You dare ask this!"

"I am indeed so brave," he retorted with a smile, for which she could could have struck him dead at her feet; "and not only ask but expect you to comply with so reasonable a request. I assure you no one would think of tracing the matter to you."

She shivered like a poor leaf in an icy blast, or a tortured bird in the sportsman's trap, and he saw it and exulted over his power over the lovely, unfortunate lady.

"And what is to be done, must be done quickly," he observed, drawing a folded paper from his pocket, continuing: "Not anticipating a refusal, I have the check all filled out. It requires but the signature. I see pen and ink on the desk yonder; you will oblige me by signing it."

"I would cut off my right hand sooner than do it!" cried Daisy. "You have made me subservient to your will long enough. Even the timid doe will stand and fight for her life when driven at bay. I repeat, I will never sign it. You have driven me to madness—do your worst!"

"If I were to make it an object to you would you sign it?" he asked. "If I promised to give up Olive—take the money and go quietly away, swearing by all the saints in the calendar never to cross your path again—would you sign it then?"

She drew her breath with a sharp cry—on one side she beheld the two pictures, a respite of life, with Aleck's love still hers; on the other, disgrace, ruin, and death. No wonder the poor child wavered.

"I make no secret of it—wealth is the ruling passion with me—I have met one more beautiful than Olive whom I might love more, and she is an heiress—she left the city—if I had money I would follow her, for I am sure I could win her."

Daisy staggered blindly to the window, and raised her death-white face to the night sky.

"Give me a little time to think," she murmured faintly.

"Consider well," said the count.

She was considering well—only a dash of the pen and she could avert a fate more cruel than death from the sister who was rushing so blindfold to her ruin—only a dash of the pen—it did not seem much compared to the blasting of a young girl's life. And in saving Olive—she could save herself—Aleck's love would be hers for yet a little while, and she loved him so well—with all the passionate strength of her untutored, simple, childish heart—she loved him better than her own life.

Up and down the luxurious boudoir Daisy paced, wringing her little hands in the bitterest woe. The china-

NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organised in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, willl be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 356½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

- A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
- A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and
- A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $650,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 35,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $2.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $5.89 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	286,319.88
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of........................		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends ...		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

Officers Say Goodbye

On Friday evening last the officers of the 57th Regiment entertained Lieut. Bradburn, on the eve of his departure for South Africa, to a smoker. The affair was very enjoyable, and expressive in appreciation of the honor done Mr. Bradburn as well as the regiment and the town, in selecting him as one of the officers of the fourth contingent. Lieut. Bradburn leaves to-night on the midnight for Halifax.

Death of Mr. E. J. Mann

Mr. Everett J. Mann, of Bridgenorth, son of Mr. James H. Mann, passed away on Saturday morning. Last fall the deceased had one of his legs amputated, and it was thought that he would recover from the effects of the operation. Complications set in, however, and heart trouble followed by an attack of pneumonia brought to an untimely end a bright and promising young life. He was a cheerful sufferer and had been confined to his bed for the past seven weeks.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at two o'clock, to the Little Lake cemetery.

A New Tea Store

The Stead Tea Company, of Montreal, has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. W. J. Morrow, as manager of their Peterborough store. Mr. Morrow has had a long experience in the grocery business, and has a large circle of friends. The premises will be No. 382 George-st., next to Messrs. Stinson & Son, boot and shoe dealers, and are now being refitted, and will be opened by the middle of May, carrying a full line of teas, coffee, etc. In Mr. Morrow's able hands, and backed up by the excellent goods, the store should be a popular one with buyers of such staple necessities as teas and coffees.

THE STREET RAILWAY

What the Company Offers in Exchange for Franchise

The new owners of the street railway have outlined their scheme. They propose to extend the road in town along Park street, and down McDonnell street, and build a line to the river within six months, or before August 1st. They promised to maintain a ten minute service, and to extend to Chemong, Lakefield and Young's Point.

A LAKEFIELD VIEW

Regarding the Proposed Street Railway Extension

Mr. George B. Hilliard, one of Lakefield's most enterprising and progressive citizens, was in town on Saturday and dropped in to see The Times. Speaking of the proposed extension of the street railway to Lakefield Mr. Hilliard was of the impression that it would be a benefit to the village. While no doubt some would come to Peterborough to do their shopping, this would be more than made up by visitors to the pretty northern village who would take the delightful trip up the picturesque banks of the Otonabee. He thought the company would find hearty support in Lakefield.

LIEUT. BRADBURN HONORED

Presented with a Gold Watch by the Young men of the Town

On Saturday evening a very pleasing though somewhat informal event took place in the Oriental hotel, when Lieut. O. E. Bradburn, who is to leave this evening for South Africa, was presented with a gold watch, together with an address, from the young men of the town, about forty of whom were present.

The address was read by Mr. F. D. Kerr, and the presentation made by Mr. Dickson Davidson.

Lieut. Bradburn feelingly replied, thanking his friends for their generous gift and kind good wishes.

GEORGE H. NOBLE DEAD

Passed Away Yesterday Afternoon at Nicholls Hospital

The news of the death of Mr. Geo. H. Noble will come with a shock to his many friends in town. The sad event took place at Nicholl's Hospital yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Noble was taken ill several weeks ago with pneumonia, and on Thursday last was removed from his home to Nicholls Hospital, to undergo a critical operation. This was successfully performed, and it was thought by those in attendance that his recovery would be rapid. Yesterday, however, alarming symptoms set in, and he passed quietly away about three o'clock.

Mr. Noble was an old and esteemed resident of Peterborough. He came here about twenty years ago, and for some time was employed by the Water Company. He afterwards carried on business as a plumber, which he continued until his death.

Mr. Noble was about 65 years of age, and leaves a widow, and four children, William, of Pennsylvania, Mrs. John Wood, of Philadelphia, Jas. E. and Mrs. McAndrew of town, who have the sympathy of the community in their great loss.

ILLEGAL FISHING

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir,—The Times is an independent paper, and although it is for Mr. Stratton in this election, it will not let the law be violated without remonstrating against it. Your local item, showing how Jack-lights are being used up and down the river is just what we may expect after the way the fish and game laws have been violated by favorites. The way the law is enforced in this county is rotten, and Heaven help us if we ever get prohibition, which I am sure the liquor men will never allow. Party doesn't interfere with their pocket. No, sir, it is only the prohibitionist who is all cry and no wool. Yours, etc.,

EUROPE IS ALARMED AT AMERICA'S STRIDES

The Whole Continent Seems to Have Become Rattled and Excited

The British Press Call on the Government to Take Action—The Capture of the Shipping Trade by Morgan

Special to The Times.

London, April 29.—The excitement over the great ocean steamship combine is on the increase in England. The leading papers are all sensational, and even go so far as to state that the British flag will soon disappear from the seas, so far as the Mercantile Marine is concerned. But this is mere folly, as the Times points out. The subsidized steamships cannot pass over to Morgan any more than could the British navy. As nearly all the best vessels are subsidized so as to be available in case of war as cruisers there really is little ground for alarm. But in other results things are not so bright: "The Americans will soon send coal to Newcastle and steel to Sheffield," one English writer recently declared. "Can it be that Valencia will soon take its oranges from the United States?" a Spanish paper asked, when noting how California fruit was being marketed in Spain.

In Germany the whole of the great manufacturers and merchants in the tobacco trade formed a league against the progressive American trust. Paris to-day is taking many of its fashions from New York. Paris was long the arbiter of the style of the world; now even Paris is gracefully sinking to second place.

American shoes are coming to the forefront in French shops. In men's attire, especially in shirts and fine underwear, an increasing trade is being done, and the sign of the American tailor is becoming growingly common. But it is in women's dress that greatest advance is secured.

Glancing over the new catalogue of a great French costumier, I see that in article after article where the Paris taste was once supreme Paris is now modeling itself on the Western style. In corsets the big French houses are to-day pushing nothing but the straight front, essentially an American idea. In shirt waists, while the American manufacturer has failed to hold its own, the American style has triumphed.

In Russia the tobacco trade is in terror for its safety. In Switzerland the watch trade has had too hard a lesson not to appreciate the value of the competition now swallowing it up. Some years ago, when manufacturers from the Eastern states began flooding Europe with cheap watches, the Swiss makers who had up to then held the field laughed at them. Swiss watches were so good and so cheap that competition seemed impossible. The Swiss now laugh no longer. They have discovered the qualities which satisfy one generation will not meet the needs of the next. The American watch has won.

On the Continent the American trader is met by one great difficulty which does not meet him in England, the language problem. It is characteristic of English speaking people that they are bad linguists, nearly as bad as the French. The German acquires foreign tongues by sheer hard work, the Russian picks them up, as it were, by instinct, the Frenchman rarely learns at all, and the English speaking man refuses to learn so long as he possibly can.

The Briton is bad enough this way, but the American is worse. "Let them learn my language if they want to do business," is the attitude of many. "We have enough to do without fooling around after their talk, and our language is good enough anyway."

It is this attitude which has hindered much of the possible advance of United States trade in South America, and it bids fair to check it in Europe.

But this is being overcome, for merchants are finding out that they have to learn, and are submitting to the inevitable. Americans are seeing that in many ways the Mediterranean basin presents one of the finest fields for their enterprise. Freight rates from the Eastern French ports are almost as low as the rates from England.

Germany is a dangerous competitor to the United States in many things, but the power of German competition is decidedly limited. In the past German manufactures have been noted for cheapness rather than quality; British have been [illegible] for quality rather than cheapness, but the Americans are coming along combining the two. It is in the Mediterranean that American coal is winning most.

Americans are realizing that the continent of Europe affords a splendid field for electrical investments. There restrictions are less irksome than in England, and throughout Southern Europe monopolies can be frequently obtained for lighting and power and traction.

A year ago it seemed certain that nearly all of these would go to German firms which are backed up by their own banks. But the crash in German banks has left the field free.

The triumphal tour of Mr. Schwab over the continent of Europe—a tour which resembled that of a victorious prince—is significant of the importance Europe now attaches to American competition. The great financial and manufacturing kings of the Old World do not bend the knee to a stranger as they did to him with good cause.

But England still remains, now as before, the favored field of attack. The latest scheme is the creation of a great American pneumatic tube service in London. Needless to say an enterprising man from the Eastern states is at the head of this, but he will mask his attack behind English names.

An English marquis will head his board of directors, and English names will be thick among his supporters. But it will be American ideas, brains and energy behind. The scheme will probably come before the English parliament next session, for its consent will be necessary before a gigantic affair like this can be put through.

In England Americans are going to make their business opportunities over the coronation. The English hotel and boarding house keepers are preparing to reap some spoil by raising their charges three-fold. But the profits earned from the summer visitors will be well repaid by the business schemes which the visitors will mature on the spot.

GIVE THE BOY LONG TROUSERS

If his legs deserve them. But spare the mother's feelings—Give him long trousers that won't make him "A LITTLE OLD MAN." Trousers cut to grace the most ungainly age.

Dress him RIGHT and don't say, "Be careful of your clothes." If he is a lively boy, he will forget your instructions; if he is inclined to be quiet, or if he is not well, he will be in constant fear of soiling or tearing his suit, and he will lose the benefit of the healthful exercise.

BOERS MAY TREK WEST

Irreconcilables Expected to Form New Republic Near German Territory

Special to The Times.

New Orleans, April 29.—Gen. Pearson, Boer agent here, received to-day a letter from Lieut. Haberer, assistant secretary to President Kruger, announcing the establishment of a new Boer Republic in the Langenberg country, composed of Transvaal Boers, who during the present war have trekked across Bechuanaland and British South Africa, crossing the Kalahari, and have wedged themselves in between German Southwest Africa and Portuguese West Africa.

Some Boers went there as early as 1895. Their number has been greatly increased since the beginning of the war, and it is thought that the irreconcilables will move there in the event of peace.

It is the fifth trek taken by the Boers to escape British dominion.

REGRETS FOR BOERS BY NEW YORK PAPER

The Journal of Commerce Sees Good Results From the War

GREAT BRITAIN LEADS THE WAY

A Few Plain Words from a Leading American Paper—Admires the Boers as Fighters

New York, April 29.—The Journal of Commerce, which represents the opinion of the "solid men" of the American commercial metropolis, rejoices that the Boer war is drawing to a close, and that it is ending with the British victorious. "While it is impossible," it says, "not to admire the personal bravery, military capacity and indomitable resolution displayed by the Boers—it is equally impossible from the standpoint of civilization or human progress to regret the disappearance from the roll of sovereign states of the Transvaal and its ally." The Journal goes on to show that the Boer Republics were governed under a system of patriarchal despotism, which plundered the foreigner and prevented progress. "It is certain," it continues, "that some serious obstacles will be removed from the path of commerce since the Boer Governments have no longer the power to cripple enterprise and paralyze productive industry over a large portion of South Africa. As where Great Britain goes, the rest of the world may go, the feeling of the mercantile community, without distinction of nationality, ought to be one of profound satisfaction over the Boer surrender."

"This is the attitude which we may confidently expect the business men of the world to take when once they have escaped from the shadow of the wholly erroneous but not unnatural notion that it was a war between a great power and a weak pastoral people. It is human instinct to sympathize with the small dog; and we Britons would have suffered less in our tempers during the last few years if we had recognized this instinct in much of the talk against us [illegible] of Europe. But, when that delusion fades, the commercial community, no matter what language it speaks, will recognize the vast advantage it will be to the whole world to have British guarantees of a stable government, fair treatment, respect for property and an open door firmly established throughout South Africa.

As a matter of fact, the war never was the attack of a great power upon a weak people. It was rather an effort of a nation of soldiers, splendidly prepared, and fighting in their own country, to drive out of South Africa a commercial power which was wretchedly prepared and compelled to gather its forces from the ends of the earth. Of course the commercial power wins, it had to. It was always only a question of how much it would cost in money and lives. And the self-interest of the world was on the side of the commercial power. As the Journal of Commerce says, the Boer must be "judged to have been on the wrong side of the struggle, which is coterminous with the boundaries of the habitable globe, for the advancement and elevation of mankind."

BOER WAR SWORDS AT AUCTION

Sheriff to Sell Capt. E. Methuen Marshall's Baggage to Pay His Debt

New York, April 29.—Louis Sherry, proprietor of the Fifth avenue restaurant, through his attorneys, Newell & Dechhold, entered judgment yesterday for $191.82 against Capt. Edward Methuen Marshall of the British Army. Capt. Marshall came here last summer from South Africa, where he had commanded a company of the South African Light Horse. He was entertained at Newport and later he took luxurious apartments at the Manhattan Hotel here. When he was departing Mr. Sherry's attorneys attached nine pieces of the Captain's military baggage, including his swords, saddles and uniforms. These will shortly be sold by the Sheriff to satisfy the judgment.

METHUEN'S REVERSE BY ONE OF HIS MEN

One of the Most Desperate Battles of the War

TWO HOURS HARD FIGHT

And Every Gunner Either Killed or Wounded During the Battle.

The True Story of the Battle Told by one of the Captured British Soldiers

London, April 29.—Lance-Corporal Martin, of the 1st Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, who was captured by the Boers during the fight in which Lord Methuen was wounded, has written a long letter to his wife, at Lancashire, from Mafeking under date March 12, in which he describes that action. He states: "On March 7 we got up at two a.m., and moved again at three a.m., as escort to an ox convoy, leaving the main body to proceed at four a.m., with the mule convoy. The main body were all mounted men. About 5.45 we heard very heavy firing to the rear of us. The Boers attacked Methuen from all sides, and completely outnumbered the main body, taking two guns in less than fifteen minutes. Lord Methuen then ordered his men to close up and make a stand. Instead of doing that they ran right through us, closely followed by the Boers, who also dashed through us, firing from their saddles. We had two 15-pounders and a pom-pom, and were left to our fate, with Lord Methuen and the [illegible] Imperial Yeomanry. We fought until there was not a gunner left to fire and there was no ammunition, as the mule wagons containing the ammunition had gone with the main body. Lord Methuen was with us all the time the fighting was going on, after the main body had cleared, and he stood by the guns and helped the men to work them until there was not a man left, everyone of the gunners being shot down. It was a dreadful sight around the guns — just like a slaughterhouse. I have never seen men work as hard in my life. They kept on firing the guns under the heaviest fire that I have experienced, never seeming to heed their dead comrades or horses, because a similar fate awaited them. The last gunner, finding himself alone, was just leaving when he was shot.

"Lord Methuen did not leave the guns till then. He came over to us and stood about fifteen yards from where I was. Five minutes later he got his first wound in his right side, and then tried to mount his horse. I didn't know what he was going to do, but his horse got shot in the leg, and he had to get off. A few minutes later he got his second wound in the thigh, and lay down on the ground as if nothing had happened. His horse was shot dead immediately afterwards, falling on Lord Methuen and breaking his leg. The doctor went to him to dress his wounds, but before he had half finished he was shot too, and our general had to lie until we surrendered. I am telling you this just to show what a brave and good soldier he is, beloved by all his men — those who had been with him from the first. He always had a kind word for everyone, and I hope he will pull through and get all right again.

"We surrendered at 9.10 a.m., after about two hours' hard fighting. There was nothing else for us to do, so we had to admit that we were beaten by the Boers. As soon as the Boers had taken us prisoners they commenced to rob us of everything we had — money, watches, clothes, and boots — leaving us nothing. They then marched us about ten miles to their laager, obliging us with some of our own food. We stayed there until one p.m., and then they marched us back to the field where we fought in the morning. One glance showed what they had been doing. They had picked up all their dead and wounded and carried them away. Ours were still on the field, and they were just beginning to pick them up. They would not let us help our hospital corps with the wounded.

"It was just after we left the battlefield that we heard that the main body had made a stand five miles from us, but most of them had been taken prisoners. Only 241 got away, and the Boers followed them for over twenty miles, shooting them down as they came up with them. We marched about seven miles from the battle-ground, and were then joined by those who had been taken prisoners from the main body at a farmhouse. It was here where I saw the worst sight. They had murdered all our natives—shot them down in cold blood, and then put them in a heap, just as if they had been old rags thrown away. There would be quite thirty, and some of our men stated they had seen the Boers cut the throats of the natives. The Boers think as little of shooting the natives as they do of shooting dogs. Our dead and wounded lay all over the ground for twelve miles. We lost from 200 to 400 killed and wounded, and 300 were taken prisoners. They marched us for thirty-eight miles till midnight, and then we started again at four a.m. In the morning they left us to go where we pleased, without giving us any directions; but we turned up on the railway at Kraaipan at six p.m., after a march of seventy-eight miles in forty hours, nearly dead for want of food and water. We looked nice objects. I had an old suit on which a Boer gave me in exchange for mine, and it was all colors with patches."—London Telegraph.

PLENTY OF MEN TO FILL CORPS.

Recruiting Finished for the Contingent of 2000 Canadians

Ottawa, April 28—A change has been made in the dates of departure of the transports for South Africa. Instead of sailing on the 5th and 12th of May, the Castrian and Winifredian will leave on the 8th and 15th respectively. The reason for making the change is that the dates first selected would have involved working on Sunday, and the Minister of Militia wished to avoid this.

Major Hoomer of the Mounted Rifles, Winnipeg, will be second in command in the regiment from the West. Captain E. F. Mackie of the 90th Battalion and Lieut. A. W. Strange, both of whom served in Strathcona's Horse, have accepted commissions. Captain Mackie may be adjutant of the regiment.

WATERFALLS WILL OPERATE MILLS

And Streams Will Float the Logs for the Pulp to Their Doors

TEAMING TO BE AVOIDED

And Steamers Will Load Paper at the Adjacent Docks for Shipment to Europe

Those who are acquainted with the property of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Co., which is at present offering $850,000 of 7 per cent. cumulative preference stock to the public for sale at par, claim that the company will be able to manufacture pulp and paper more economically than any other company in America. The assertion is based on a number of natural advantages which the company may utilize.

Where the Mills Are.

Firstly, the mills will be situated at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and will be within two or three miles of the limits, which contain a practically inexhaustible supply of pulpwood. This circumstance alone gives the company a marked advantage over other companies who have to haul their wood, sometimes, several hundred miles on trains. Besides, the Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the centre of the limits, and this, with a large number of tributary streams winding here and there, practically does away with the inconveniences and expense of teaming. At the mills there is a large mill-pond, capable of holding several million logs.

Secondly, the company have been fortunate in securing a water power on the Little Cascapedia River. Before finally accepting the site the company had the foremost authority on water powers in America, Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, make an examination. The company proposed to build a paper mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons, a ground wood pulp mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and a sulphite pulp mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons, and Mr. Hardy was asked if there was power enough. He said there was, and to spare. The cost of erecting the mills and developing the power would be, he said, about $850,000.

For Foreign Markets.

Thirdly, the company's mills are exceptionally favorably situated in regard to transportation facilities. Pulp mills are dependent almost entirely upon foreign markets, especially the European and the Eastern States' markets. Other Canadian companies, to reach these markets, are forced to make a long and costly railway haul with their product. The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company can, however, make arrangements with Atlantic steamships lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, if required. During the winter months favorable arrangements can be made with the railway companies to St. John and Halifax.

Large Annual Profits.

The company estimates that it will have an annual profit of over $455,000. Of this amount only $105,000 will be required to pay the dividends on the preferred stock, a portion of which is now being offered for sale. With every two shares of this seven per cent. cumulative preference stock subscribed for, there will be allotted by way of a bonus one share of fully-paid common stock. Further information may be obtained from Sutherland & Cameron, brokers, Ottawa, or from the National Trust Company, Toronto.

MORGAN PLANS IN CHINA

Report of a Project to Build a Railway Out of Pekin

Victoria, B. C., April 29.— Oriental advices brought by the steamer Empress of China include a telegram received by the Tokio Asahi from Pekin, saying that a syndicate of Americans, headed by J. P. Morgan, has applied to the Chinese Government for the right of construction of a railway between Pekin and Chang Kia and Kan, with a capital of 1,500,000 taels.

A Canton correspondent, writing of March 22, says the Canton-Hankow Railway project has been tied up for some time by the Chinese and it seems nothing has been accomplished but the purchase of the new line of reclaimed ground on the riverfront.

"Even J. P. Morgan with his millions will find that things move slowly in China," says the correspondent.

Mr. Denby, an American, has been commissioned by Prince Ching to build waterworks at Pekin, and Mr. Denby will turn over the work to Wood & Co. of Philadelphia. Charles Denby has been engaged in this project for several years and if the present arrangement carries, a preliminary contract only having been signed, the final agreement will be made when the American engineers have completed the survey of the city and through the summer palace, where it is proposed to bring the water, the lake there and the springs from which it is filled affording the water supply.

Speedy Cure for Cramps and Colic.

The most reliable cure for cramps, colic, dysentery and summer complaint is ten drops of Polson's Nerviline in a little sweetened water. 30 YEARS' FRANCHISE FOR THE STREET RAILWAY

Advocated by the Board of Trade at It's Annual Session Last Night

Mr. D. W. Dumble Re-Elected President, Mr. R. Fair Re-Elected Treasurer—Annual Reports—President's Address

The Board of Trade met in annual session last night and after a lengthy discussion of the proposed agreement between the Peterborough Radial Company and the town the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

Moved by Mr. John Carnegie, seconded by Mr. W. H. Hill,—That this meeting approves of the granting to the Peterborough Radial Company a 30 years' franchise with exemption from taxes during that time, and that the Council insist on a provision in the contract providing that the freight rate shall not exceed the rate on the G. T. R. and C. P. R. on like freights for the same distance, and that every caution be taken to provide for keeping the roads in good repair and up-to-date.

MEMBERS PRESENT

There were present amongst others Messrs. D. W. Dumble, president; Robert Fair, treasurer, Mayor Denne, Aldermen Morrison and Hatten, Wm. Aldridge, W. H. Bradburn, Robert McWhinnie, R. J. Winch, O. N. Brown, W. G. Morrow, Jno. Carnegie, S. D. Hall, J. Hughes-Charles, W. H. Hill, T. A. S. Hay, Jno. Sawers, J. H. Bradburn, Reeve Smith of Ashburnham, Peter Campbell, R. B. Rogers and T. Q. THE SECRETARY'S REPORT

Secretary T. Q. Quartermain submitted the following:

Mr. President and Gentlemen,—I have the honor to present you, as Secretary, the thirteenth annual report of this Board.

Meetings.—Since our last annual meeting we have held four meetings of the Board, viz., on the 31st April, 1901, 2nd August, 1901, 30th September, 1901 and 20th November, 1901.

Membership.—The members on the roll last year was 54, a decrease in comparison with the previous year. With the new industries lately established in town, we trust to greatly increase our membership during the coming year.

Attendance.—The average attendance of members of the Board was 20, a marked increase to that of the previous year.

Deputations.—In March, 1901, a deputation waited on the Provincial Government in the interests of the Norwood-Apsley Railway, and in the following month a deputation waited on the Hon. G. A. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals, also in the interests of the Norwood-Apsley Railway, and at the same time urged on the Minister the desirability of opening up the Trent Canal from Lakefield to Peterborough.

Subjects Under Discussion.—The following subjects have been duly discussed:—Sugar beet industry, American Cereal Company, Trent Canal, Norwood-Apsley Railway, Cordage Company's By-law, interests of the town with reference to water power and manufactories.

Council Chamber.—The thanks of the the Board are due to the Mayor, the Board of Aldermen and the Town Clerk for the use of the Council Chamber during the past year.

Local Press.—The thanks of the Board are also due to the proprietors and reporters of the local press for the able manner in which the business of the Board has been published and reported.

The report was adopted as read.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

President D. W. Dumble in a verbal report drew attention to the fact that during the year 1901 the town had enjoyed a year of great prosperity, and expatiated on the advantages which would accrue from the establishment in our midst of such large industries as the Cereal Company and the Cordage Works. No town in Canada, he said, could point to such mammoth industries as those above mentioned, together with the Canadian General Electric Company. The presence of these big concerns advertised abroad the choice of Peterborough as a manufacturing centre. During the past year the Board of Trade had been called on to support the Town Council in measures of great weight, one of which had been interviewing the Ministers at Ottawa with reference to a "conservation" of the Trent Valley Canal waters. He had, he explained, been called on at the last moment to accompany the deputation appointed for the purpose. In the absence of time in which to call a meeting of his colleagues he had assumed the responsibility of responding to the call, believing such course to be in the best interests of the community. Regarding the sugar beet question, Mr. Dumble believed Peterborough would be a very desirable centre for the establishment of such an industry. Turning to the question of canals, he thought that while the Georgian Bay and Ottawa Canal was being boomed by influential supporters, the Trent Valley waterway had been in a measure neglected. The present government was committed to the latter scheme by their predecessors, but appear to be proceeding with the work as slowly as possible. He deplored this fact because the rapid development of the north west as a grain growing district goes to show that that territory will shortly become the granary of the world, in which event all the carrying routes Canada at present owns will not be sufficient to meet her transportation demands. He opined that grain could be transported via the T. V. waters at a much cheaper rate than by any other route. This canal, costing but five or six million dollars, will have a larger capacity than the Erie even after an additional expenditure upon it of eight millions. The capacity of the T.V.C. he believed to be unlimited, and all that is required is concentrated energy to push the scheme along. Turning to the development of power on the Otonabee he rejoiced that there is still remaining a plentitude of undeveloped power, which is being offered at such low prices as will assure its being taken up. And he did not see why Peterborough should not get the power from Burleigh Falls in preference to Lindsay. We have two railways where they have but one, and many other advantages besides. Our aim should be to secure that power. In conclusion Mr. Dumble remarked that as the town is altogether too large for further growth from its agricultural surroundings, it must rely upon a concentration of energy to make it a manufacturing centre. This the mayor and aldermen have done in the past, and he felt safe in placing implicit reliance on their efforts in this direction in the future.

OFFICERS ELECTED

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

D. W. Dumble (re-elected) ... President
W. G. Morrow ... Vice-President
T. Q. Quartermain (re-elected) Sec'y
Robert Fair (re-elected)...Treasurer

Mayor Denne and Messrs. J. H. Burnham, R. Fair and W. H. Hill were appointed a committee to strike the council of the Board of Trade.

GRANTS

On motion of W. G. Morrow, seconded by Mr. Robert Fair, the usual grants were made the three reporters.

STREET RAILWAY FRANCHISE

The President here introduced the main question of the evening, that of a proposed contract between the new street railway company, to be known as the Peterborough Radial Railway, and the Town, by which a 30 years' franchise is to be granted for operating an electric railway in the town, on George, Charlotte, Park and McDonnell streets, with extensions to the river, and to Chemong, Lakefield and Young's Point. The town extensions are to be in operation by the first of August next, but no time limit has yet been fixed for the construction of the suburban roads. The fares to Chemong and Lakefield are to be 15c. for single and 25c. for return tickets, and to Young's Point 25c. for single and 40c for return tickets. Town fares will be 5c., with workmen's tickets during specified hours at eight for 25c., and school children's tickets at ten for 25c.

The President suggested that the Board of Trade advise that the company be restricted in the matter of freight rates, which, he thought, should be limited to the same rates as charged by the railways for similar distances. He could not see that there is any particular inducement for a street railway company to plant its money here on a short franchise. He did not think Peterborough would have any extraordinary growth in the near future to return extraordinary receipts to the company. For the next ten years it would hardly hold its own. After that its dividends would depend entirely on the growth of the town.

THANKS TO KRUGER

It would seem that Mr. Kruger has occupied the part of Balaam towards the British Empire in more than one respect. When his ultimatum was handed to Mr. Conyngham Greene at Pretoria, in October, 1899, it seemed very unlikely that Canada, Australasia and New Zealand would have very much to do with the vindication of the position of the loyalists in South Africa. Events which, at the time, were designated "regrettable incidents" caused the slender ties of sentiment which, up to that period, had bound the self-governing portions of the Empire together, to become strengthened and sealed on many an acre of bloodstained veldt throughout South Africa. The men who, [illegible] for years prior to the chosen moment of hostile action, had plotted to [illegible] the Empire building have thus been the unconscious instruments of late in welding it together more securely and making it more than ever able to withstand the storms of time, at [illegible] in the consolidation of its strength for defence, and, if needs be, for decisive action in the affairs of the world, they, Messrs. Steyn and Kruger, have aided the Empire. Their action has set on foot a movement which will probably be bearing good fruit long after the recent troubles of South Africa battlefields have passed away. We owe the prospects afforded by this last budget statement of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach—which promises to bring the question of preferential trade within the Empire into the level of the political issues—also to the Presidents exiled from Bloemfontein and Pretoria.

It would almost certainly have taken several sessions of discussion and one general election at least to have produced such a healthy reaction against the fetish of Free Trade as is now seen to be seething among the masses which control the British electorate and have grown up in the belief that the conditions which dictated the volte face of Sir Robert Peel were as unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians.

Peck's Bad Boy.

Professor Harry Thurston Peck, editor of the "Bookman," has written a delightful story for children. It is entitled "The Adventures of Mabel." A few days ago a woman entered one of the Chicago stores to buy a book for her little girl, says the "Record-Herald."

"How old is she?" the clerk asked.

"Five."

"Here is a nice tale for a child of that age," the clerk said, handing out Professor Peck's story about Mabel.

The woman took the book, looked at the title page, and then handed it back, saying:

"Mercy! I don't want that in my house. I've read some of that stuff he wrote about that bad boy, and that's enough for me."

A Very Important Business.

Dairying is a very important business, and a herd of good cows is worth more in every respect than any other kind of stock. The bovine is both meat and milk for the human family, without which existence is almost impossible. Note the capacity of each cow and feed accordingly, as some will be found able to pay for better feeding than others. In order to know this, weigh each cow's product; then, knowing what the feed costs, it is a very easy matter to know whether you are feeding at a profit or loss.

Have a silo if possible; if not, then secure an abundance of corn fodder, well cured, with some roots and a good supply of bran, oil meal, corn meal and ground oats. These, with good early cut clover or cowpea hay, will provide a good range of rich milk-producing food. Now, with a warm, well-lighted and properly ventilated stable, with absorbent to save all the manure, both liquid and solid, you are ready to feed your cows for profit. Feed liberally, but not blindly. Weigh and compound a balanced ration.—L. E. Kerr in Agricultural Epitomist.

Nature's Flying Machines.

It is an extraordinary thing that the places where people think that they can invent flying machines are the capitals of Europe. Paris, Vienna, London, Brussels, each takes its turn, in paragraphs in the morning papers and illustrated interviews in the weeklies, at producing flying machine inventors; but the man who will succeed must be more familiar than any townsman or laboratory savant seems to be with the way in which Nature's flying machines, the birds, work. To this the townsman will reply that everybody knows how birds fly. They flap their wings; and what we have to do is to invent a machine which will flap its wings like a bird.

Yes; but which bird? In every one of our undulating Norfolk stubbles there are two birds, among many, that you cannot help observing on the wing. One is the partridge and the other the gull. Let us take the gull first. It is a bird with a very light body in proportion to its expanse of wing; and when it wishes to rise from the ground it raises its wings aloft, back to back, and then with one quick stroke—whiff!—wafts itself aloft. Three or four more similar strokes follow, each one visibly raising the bird higher in the air, and then it sails off. Now it is "coasting" down an inclined plane; now its widespread wings catch the wind like a sail and it curves upwards; then it wheels and "coasts" again, and at the turn one vigorous flap of its wings shoots it up into the wind again. Another sail, another "coast," another flap, and so the gull could go on through the livelong afternoon. The albatross, spreading as much wing-sail as Shamrock II., so very nearly equalizes its sailing power with its coasting momentum that it remains in the air alongside a steamer for, perhaps, half an hour together, without occasion for a flap of the wing. This is the very highest development of one kind of Nature's flying machines.

Now let us look at the partridge. This is a heavy, substantial bird, with great running power, necessitating a muscular development essentially different from the gull's. The object of the partridge's flight is not to loaf about in the air, always ready to descend at any inclined plane that the chance of snatching food from the restless waves may offer, but to put as large a distance as possible in the shortest space of time between itself and the danger which compelled it to take wing. With the partridge flying is, in fact, merely an urgent improvement upon terrestrial locomotion, whereas with the gull it is the highest development of the art of remaining in the air at the poise most suitable for descending like an arrow in any desired direction.

From this contrast it is evident that the model which human inventors of flying machines should set before themselves is that of the partridge and not of the gull. We need aerial locomotion as an improvement upon our existing means of terrestrial progress. Our flying machine must be a weight-carrier because it has to bear up a terrestrial mechanism—i.e., a man; and the partridge gives us a very good idea of the means whereby this can be achieved. In common with all ground-birds—and if man is destined to be a bird at all it is as a ground-bird that he will have to commence his aerial evolutions—the partridge goes off whirring like clockwork. This is because enormous power, comparatively speaking, is needed to raise so heavy a bird from the ground. But when it has once reached an altitude of, say, ten feet, it goes on at a tremendous pace, gliding for twenty yards, then whirring violently again for ten, gliding for twenty, and so on. Thus the partridge can, taking into consideration all kinds of wind and weather, travel between two fixed points faster than a gull, provided that the point of departure is higher than that of destination. This is not generally understood; and it is common to talk of the amazing power of flight of such long-winged birds as gulls and swifts, although their "power" of flight is small compared with that of partridge or pheasant.

A New Vocabulary.

"I SEE," said the wise person, "that some eminent philologist is again monkeying with the language of the world in the effort to combine them in one tongue that no one will want to learn, but everybody can understand. It has always been a matter of surprise to me that none of these word-arrangers has ever grasped the amazing possibilities of baby-talk as a universal, time-saving method of conversation. Instead of delving into the dusty dimness of antiquity for Saxon and Sanskrit roots, and making it necessary for one to master ten languages to learn one, why do they not go into the nursery with an open mind and a notebook and compile a new mother-tongue that will catch everybody?"

Here he paused for a question, but, as none was forthcoming, he went on:

"What I mean is this: You take any baby that has an intelligent, quick-witted mother, and it can make its wants known with less expenditure of breath than a deaf-and-dumb man. If it says "Wow" she knows that a pin is sticking it, or that it wants its dinner, or that it wants to turn over, or that it has colic. If it says "Ah-goo" she makes a rapid-fire translation which proves that the child has said that it wants to see papa or that it feels good. If it says "Gup" she will at once tell you that it means "look at the horse." If it says "Boo" she can tell you without a moment's hesitation that it desires a peep at its picture-book. And so on ad infinitum, and ad infantum, for that matter. By jing! We don't want Volapuk or any other old universal language, but as a time and tongue saver and word-condenser we need the adoption of baby-talk."

Then, with a sarcastic glance at the young father, he concluded:

"Besides, it would keep a lot of people from telling us what their children had tried to say."—W. D. Nesbit in "Judge."

"Is that a historical novel you're reading?"

"That's what they called it at the library, but it seems to me to be more hysterical than anything else."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Must be There Early.

The chosen few who will find seats in the Abbey on Coronation Day are planning their arrangements for this day far ahead of time, and with the greatest precision. One lady, according to The Daily Mail, has already given orders to her hairdresser to be with her at 6 o'clock on the morning of the eventful day. When Queen Victoria was crowned many of those in attendance at the Abbey were compelled to leave their homes at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. London is more than twice as large now as it was 65 years ago, and the difficulties of locomotion on such an occasion will be proportionately greater. Moreover, there are few now who will remember witnessing a previous coronation, none who are well past the three score and ten mark, while in 1838 middle-aged people would easily recollect the coronations of Victoria's two immediate predecessors, Wm. IV. and George IV. The King himself is said to be paying great attention to the details of the coronation procession, and it will doubtless prove a pageant worthy of comparison with the gorgeous scenes that have marked the most notable coronations of the past. One of the most famous of these was the coronation procession of Elizabeth, when England dared once more to breake freely after the horrors of Mary's reign, and the young and charming Queen—charming at least by comparison—was received by her people with a spontaneity of enthusiasm that had been absent at the costly pageantry that attended her melancholy middle-aged sister. Elizabeth herself had been present at Mary's coronation procession, and had sat in her litter, clad in "a goune of purple velvet, furred with powdered ermine, having on her head a kale of cloth of tinsell beset with pearl and stone, and above the same upon her head a round circle of gold beset so richly with pretius stones that the value thereof was inestimable, the same kale and circle being so massie and ponderous that she was faine to beare up her head with her hand." Five years later, at her own coronation in 1558, Elizabeth made her progress from the Tower to Westminster "richly furnished and most honourably accompanied, as well, with the nobilitie of the realme, as also with a notable trayne of goodly and bewtifull ladies richly appoynted." On her entry into the city she was "of the people received marveylous entirely, as appeared by the assemblie, prayers, wishes, welcomings, cryes, tender woordes, and all other signs which argue a wonderfull earnest love"; to all of which tokens of good-will Elizabeth responded "by holding up her handes and merie countenance to such as stoode farre off, and most tender and gentle language to those that stoode nigh to her Grace did declare herself no lesse thankfullye to receive her people's good wyll than they lovingly offered it unto her." Her graciousness was extended to the humblest of the people. "If the baser personages had offered her Grace any flowers or such like as a signification of their good wyll, or moved to her any suit, she most gently, to the common rejoysing of all the lookers on, staid her chariot and heard theyr requests." Thus she passed on amid pageants innumerable through the city, "whiche withoute any forreyne persone of itself beautifyed itself."

The Soldier's Paper.

I was handed the other day some copies of a queer little South African paper, "The Northern Post and Border News," printed at Aliwal North, in Cape Colony. It is printed chiefly for circulation among the soldiers, and Tommy Atkins is only too glad, they say, to buy them at the rate of sixpence each. They are somewhat high at the price, for there is very little news in them. The papers are printed only on one side, and the whole of the matter is contained in one or two columns, and in large type at that. The only news printed, apart from rigidly censored Reuter's despatches relating either to military operations in South Africa or to proceedings in England immediately associated with the war, are the latest prices of Rand shares, and the result of the English-Australian cricket matches in England. So are the three incongruous elements of war, commerce and sport brought under the soldier's eye in the same column. Yet the first place and the biggest type are given to the statement that "when stumps were drawn for the day only four wickets were disposed of, and the score stood at 660 runs. Evidently Kipling's attack on cricketers finds little sympathy in the army, in whose behalf it was in a sense written. "The Islanders" are still islanders, and Kipling will hardly succeed in changing their nature. In the biggest type in the little paper of Feb. 6 last the words, "Bad News! Bad News!" in letters an inch and a half high, catch the eye, and give a momentary impression that the censorship cannot be so rigid after all, when headlines like this are put over British reverses. The second line, "Slaughter of the Innocents," suggests a somewhat flippant view of a presumably serious situation, but that is only what we have been taught to expect of Tommy. Reading on, however, we find the old, familiar phrases: "We must evacuate our present premises. Now's your chance," etc., etc. "Come early and do not miss this last and only opportunity." It is only a dry goods merchants' slaughter, after all. But the name at the foot of the advertisement is instructive. It is not Saxon or Celtic, but good sound Dutch, two of them, in fact, viz., Rascher, Kenst & Co. These burghers are not so slow after all at improving their opportunities or copying our own most advanced business methods. One of the advertisements, printed in both English and Dutch, is signed by S. R. French, Postmaster-General of Cape Colony, and calls for tenders for posts between Aliwal North and Jamestown. Apparently there is no great rush for the work, the advertisement starting, "No satisfactory tender having been received," etc. Driving a mail cart in this region just now is probably a line of work that presents unusually favorable opportunities for being potted by some odd member of a stray commando.

WOMAN'S WEIGH

Does not always keep pace with woman's will. There are energetic, home-loving women who by sheer force of will keep themselves going, and fancy that strength of will can take the place of strength of body. But it can't. Every day will see a loss of strength, and that loss will be indicated by a loss of weight. When the weight begins to fall below the normal it is time to ask, Why?

In general, ill health in women may be traced to those womanly diseases which sap the strength and undermine the vitality. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. Where the disease is marked by loss of flesh, there is a steady regaining of weight coincident with the cure which proves the renewal of health to be thorough and permanent.

"Three years ago," writes Mrs. John Graham, of 2018 Plumb Street (Frankford), Philadelphia, Penna. "I had a very bad attack of dropsy which left me with heart trouble, and also a very weak back. At times I was so bad that I did not know what to do with myself. I came to Philadelphia two years ago, and picking up one of your little books one day began to read what your 'Favorite Prescription' had done for others, I determined to try it myself. I took seven bottles, and to-day I am a strong, well woman, weighing 160 pounds. Have gained 29 pounds since I started to use your 'Favorite Prescription.'"

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse the bowels and stimulate the sluggish liver.

Curious Bits or News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous.' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation."

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE.

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.

WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the decoration scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are enrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD
WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

Literature's Anticipations of Science.

A VERY interesting book might be written, as the "Spectator" observes, by collecting together all the cases in which poets and dramatists and novelists have anticipated the triumphs of later science. A correspondent has just called attention to such a case, in which he claims that the Spanish dramatist Calderon uttered "a very clear prevision of Marconi's wireless telegraphy." Freely translated, the passage in question reads as follows: "They say that when two instruments are properly attuned together they communicate to each other their wind-borne echoes; touch the one instrument and the winds excite its fellow, though none be near it." Calderon's reference is, of course, to the well-known principle of resonance, and can scarcely be used as a prophecy of wireless telegraphy, but in the writings of a contemporary of Calderon there is a much closer approximation to Marconi's discovery. Strada, the learned Jesuit historian, tells us how two friends carried on a correspondence "by the help of a certain Loadstone, which had such virtue in it that, if it touched two several needles, when one of the needles so touched began to move, the other, though at never so great a distance, moved at the same time and in the same manner." Strada goes on to describe how these two friends made a kind of "alphabetic telegraph"—a dial-face with the letters of the alphabet placed around its edge, and a needle in the center which could be made to point at any of the letters at will. "When they were some hundreds of miles asunder, each of them shut himself up in his closet at the time appointed, and immediately cast his eye upon his dial-plate. If he had a mind to write anything to his friend, he directed his needle to every letter that formed the words which he had occasion for, making a little pause at the end of every word or sentence to avoid confusion. The friend, in the meanwhile, saw his sympathetic needle moving of itself to every letter which that of his correspondent pointed at. By this means they talked across a whole continent, and conveyed their thoughts to one another in an instant, over cities or mountains, seas or deserts." Not only had these correspondents no necessity for wires; they did not even need the simple apparatus upon which Marconi depends, although there are scientific prophets of our day who believe that we shall yet reach even a higher standard of simplicity in the future.

"Darling," said Mrs. Kaflippe, "you must quit associating with that Parker girl. Don't ever permit yourself to be seen out anywhere in her company again."

"Why, mamma," the child asked, "what is the matter?"

"A dreadful thing has happened. Her mother called here this afternoon and left her card. It is the style that we abandoned at least six months ago. They must be running dreadfully behind."—Chicago Record-Herald.

DR. GOLDBERG, 208 Woodward Av., DETROIT, MICH.

At last we were sent on our way, the Relic yet unconvinced, and Mrs. Mervine pale and trying to smile. Poor mamma's eyes had fairly popped out of her head, and she held my hand and trembled as if we were going to the guillotine. At the Palais Royal the driver insisted on being paid for the time consumed during the autopsy, but we fled into one of the little jewelry shops, where I talked like a graphophone, from sympathy for poor Mrs. Mervine. At last the Relic came, looking copperier than ever. But there—you're looking tired.

No, I'll not tell you all the details. It was too awful. Poor Mrs. Mervine looked as if she wanted to die then, and how she lived with him for four years after I don't know. You see, he bounced into the restaurant ahead of us and plunged down in the first chair. Then he grabbed the menu and gave his own order to the waiter, explaining that his wife would take the same, but that one order would suffice for both. He fairly drowned himself in his "vin ordinaire," trying to get his money's worth. Before we left, he gathered up the few extra lumps of sugar and pocketed them, declaring that when he paid for a thing he liked to have it. As we prepared to leave, the waiters lined up to receive their customary fee, but the Relic was true to his principle, and not for millions would I again run the gauntlet of their withering scorn as we crawled out, like so many worms.

I don't remember just what happened at the theater. Some of the Revolutionary blood of our ancestors, never before agitated, was stirring in mamma's veins, and she looked like the pictures of frontier women about to attack Indians. I didn't want her to claw the Relic there. And poor Mrs. Mervine. I forgot George then, and the affair, and all her evil gloating over us when she captured the Relic, but I couldn't have felt more wretched for a soul in purgatory.

I remember him scrapping with the woman who takes care of the wraps for a couple of sous, and I remember being marched into the theater, the only ones in the house with hats. I remember him scooting down ahead of us and jumping into his seat. He wouldn't buy a programme, it was another principle of his, and he didn't understand a word. He went to sleep, and when he was folded back over the seat with his mouth hanging open, snoring gently (an usher would have jerked us out if he had snored loudly), Mrs. Mervine looked a bit more natural, and asked me about everyone at home—everyone but George.

I don't remember how we got home. I know mamma said things I had never taught her, and I know I had to put a hot water bag to her feet and an ice-cap on her head.

A day or so afterward I met them again at the Invalides. You know how the Continentals are about their treasures. There are as many cast-iron rules about seeing them as a presentation at court, and one of them is that no one shall enter Napoleon's tomb without removing his hat. Well, the Relic had another principle. He'd have died for it along with the others. That one was not to take off his hat to anything that was not "American." When I saw him at the Invalides that day, he was coming down the marble stairs too rapidly for it to have been spontaneous. I knew he had been trotting out one of his principles, and the French guards had been enforcing theirs.

Poor Mrs. Mervine! I get quite maudlin yet when I think of her face as she stumbled down the steps after him.

Mamma met them once after that, in London. He was puffing along the Strand with an umbrella held over him and one under his arm. The one over him was to protect him from the rain, the other one was to assist him in making a way through the crowd. Mrs. Mervine was following umbrellaless behind, majestically as always, as though she didn't know that his umbrella was pouring rivers over her. Mamma leaned out of the carriage to speak to her, but decided not to do so, which was pretty good for mamma, you know. If it had not been in England, I don't think a e could have resisted it.

We sailed for home a day or so after that, and you know George and I were married right away. In the excitement of getting ready and acknowledging presents and receiving afterward, I forgot the Mervines completely until one day I saw among George's letters one directed in a woman's handwriting. Of course, it wasn't right to open it, but — Well, anyway, I did open it, and it was from Mrs. Mervine.

It just comes to me it isn't right to tell this, but I've gone so far, and anyway, she is in Japan, and the Relic has been dead a year. Well, the letter was all blotchy and blistery, and the writing ran off the lines and the sentences weren't finished. What? Of course I remember it. You don't suppose I just glanced at it! I memorized it.

Friend—You had a very fashionable audience, didn't you?

Pianist—Yes, at one time there was not a single person in the room who was listening.—Somerville (Mass.) Journal.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter ing of the ebony clock on the mantel warned her that time was flying swift-winged from her.

Only a dash of the pen—true, it would be a crime the world called by a hard name—but it would save Olive from this dreadful marriage—ought she to hesitate on that score?

Quietly she turned at length to the count:

"Take a solemn oath, if I sign that check, you will never see Olive again, and never cross my path."

"I have said I would not, and I will keep my word," he replied.

Another moment and the check lay in his hand, with the forged signature of Alexander Hamilton upon it.

"Good-bye, most charming of all charming women," he said; "you have looked your last upon the French count," and, with a low bow, he leaped lightly from the window through which he had gained an entrance, swung himself coolly from the balcony down to the rose garden below, walking jauntily away, little dreaming that a pair of astonished eyes were watching him—watching with amazement and horror too deep for words.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"My Love Turns to Bitterest Hate."

It so happened that Alexander Hamilton, by some impulse he could scarcely understand himself, had placed the ladies in care of friends whom he met in the grove, and had returned at once to the house to keep Daisy company.

Crossing the glade, he saw distinctly in the clear, bright light the man leap lightly from Daisy's window.

His first thought was that he was a burglar, but a second glance had shown him the utter absence of any appearance of ruffianism in the well-dressed, handsome fellow who wore a boutonneire in his coat.

Aleck was just about to spring forward and confront him, when he saw a sight that made the blood turn to ice in his veins.

The man had paused for a moment and glanced back at the window from which he had but just emerged, and at that instant the heavy lace curtains were parted by a white jeweled hand and Daisy glanced fearfully out.

The man raised his hat to her with an elaborate bow, and as he bared his head in the white, clear light, Aleck recognized distinctly the face of the handsome count, but as he recognized him the count vanished.

A numb, hideous nightmare seemed to paralyze every nerve in Alexander Hamilton's body; he leaned back heavily against a tree and tried to think.

He remembered how anxious Daisy had been to send him off with their guests, pleading illness as an excuse for not accompanying them; and now returning home suddenly and unexpectedly, he found the count taking leave of her in this extraordinary fashion. What could it mean? He could find no answer for it.

A sudden, swift storm of sickening despair, jealousy and rage swept over him.

All argument with himself ended where it began, in keen, terrible dismay.

If he had not witnessed this parting with his own eyes he would never have believed it.

A grayish pallor swept over his splendid face. He must know what it meant—yes, he would know.

A laugh, horrible to hear, fell from his lips as he remembered how vehemently Daisy had cried out that her sister Olive should not marry the count.

Great heaven! was it because she herself cared for him? The thought goaded him to madness.

Hurriedly entering the house, he went quickly up the broad stairway that led to her suit of rooms, noiselessly turned the knob and entered, standing motionless in the middle of the boudoir.

Daisy lay face downward on a velvet divan, her face half revealed, half concealed by a veil of golden hair that hung in curling masses around it.

He stopped short and looked at her—so wondrously, fatally fair.

"Great God! how can I think ill of her?" he muttered, great drops starting to his forehead, his hands clinching themselves together like bands of steel. "I will not—no, I will not—and yet——"

He crossed the room swiftly and stood before her in all his dignity of noble manhood and outraged pride—his arms crossed over his breast.

Still she was unaware of his presence.

Thinking herself alone, she clasped her little hands together with a low moan.

"Olive must never marry the count," she murmured, "oh, never, never. Oh, how I tremble lest Aleck should come and find him here—he is to never come again, it would never do," she sobbed, pushing back her golden hair with a bitter sigh.

"Daisy!"

The name was uttered in a harsh stern voice, fairly ringing with repressed rage.

Daisy started from the divan like a fluttering, frightened bird.

Was it Aleck speaking to her in that harsh, terrible voice? Aleck, who had parted from her within the hour, his splendid face radiant with love—tender kisses upon his lips.

"Daisy!" he cried again, "do you hear?"

She sprung forward with a little quivering cry, and would have flung her white arms around him, but he sternly repulsed her.

Had some one revealed to him the dark past—or had he met the count, and had he betrayed her terrible secret?

She sunk down on the nearest chair prostrate and pale. Her heart was beating in great, awful throbs that seemed wrenching it asunder as she sat before him, stricken dumb with terror waiting for him to speak.

"Do not pretend that you are pleased to see me, for you are not. I am back unexpectedly, as you observe, and you are terrified lest I have met the man from whom you have just parted. I did see him, not in time, however, to intercept him and demand from him an explanation, as to what he was doing here, and I am here to learn that from you—I, your husband, command you to speak."

His voice was sharp with repressed, terrible anger that cut poor Daisy to the very soul. She shrunk still further back into the seat in which she had fallen, and he saw the deadly pallor deepen on the lovely, girlish

NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organized in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, will be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 256½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 64 tons,
A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 80 tons, and
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $960,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 30,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $3.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $5.39 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	132,712.00
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund, under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further Information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:— "When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life, but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, if a proper subject for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.

—Warm weather will now be in order.

—The open season for catching votes will close on May 29.

—The water in the Otonabee River is gradually subsiding.

—Go to Whitton when you want the best quality of photographs.

—The [illegible] Co. has launched a [illegible] foot tow boat at Lindsay last week.

—Peterborough has contributed 60 men for the South African contingents.

—The Central Charity Board met last night and passed a number of accounts.

—Housecleaning is in full swing just now, and life is not as pleasant as it might be to most of us.

—The County Engineer states that the gales of Saturday and Sunday did no harm to the Chemong Lake bridge.

—We intend to change the make-up of The Times to a six and eight page sheet. This change will take place in the course of a week or so.

—Five boys were in the police court yesterday, charged with throwing stones. They were warned and dismissed.

—The high winds of Saturday and Sunday did considerable damage. A roof was blown from a barn in Otonabee, and many fences were uprooted.

—The man who knows the least about advertising is the freest with his opinions on the subject—the one who knows only talks on a cash basis. Advertise in The Times.

—The funeral of the late Mr. Noble will take place this afternoon, from the family residence, Simcoe street, to the Little Lake cemetery. It will be under Masonic auspices.

—A sale of useful and fancy articles, under the auspices of the Ladie's Aid Society, will be held in the School Room of St. Paul's Church, on May 8th, commencing at 3 p.m. A high tea will be served from 5.30 to 7.30 p.m.

An appeal has been made to the "Old Boys" of Upper Canada College for funds to equip a gymnasium in connection with the University. On the committee we notice the name of Mr. J. Alex. Culverwell. The project is deserving of the hearty support of those interested.

—We have been handed a copy of the 20th annual report of the Federal Life Assurance Co., by Mr. H. D. McInerney, the local manager of that popular institution. It is neatly printed and the useful features are clearly set out together with the various schemes of insurance.

—A young lady, named Miss Elizabeth Meagher, daughter of Mr. Thos. Meagher, of Emily, was burned to death last Tuesday evening in a fire that broke out in her boarding house in Rochester, she being unable to make her escape. The deceased was well and favorably known in Peterborough.

—A correspondent writes to The Times asking: "How does the sap of a maple tree run in the spring, and how does it run in the autumn?" My dear boy, it runs up in the spring and down in the autumn. We may add that this great family journal is always glad to impart information from its great storeroom of concentrated knowledge.

—The Rockland House, Bobcaygeon, one of the best on the Kawartha Lakes, and owned by Mrs. Goulais, of Lindsay, became the property of Mr. H. Thompson 1st of May, he having purchased from Mrs Goulais. Mr. Thompson has retired from hotel life, and will not resume the business again, but will be an energetic pusher towards increasing the accommodation for the tourist trade, and thus develop the Kawartha Lakes as the summer pleasure grounds of Canada.

A Last Good Bye

Lieut. E. O. Bradburn was given a hearty send off last night by his many friends as he took his departure on the 9 o'clock train for Halifax, en route for South Africa. There was quite a crowd on hand to wish him God-speed and a safe return.

Margaret L. Sheppard Again

Mrs. Margaret L. Sheppard, the woman who claimed to be an ex-nun and raised such a commotion in Peterborough some years ago by her lectures upon nunneries, has turned up again, after having dropped from view for some time. She is now in Vancouver, B.C., giving her famous "Confessions of an ex-Nun."

The Farmers' Picnic

The great annual farmers' picnic, under the auspices of the Farmers' Institutes of East and West Peterborough and East Northumberland, will take place on the second Thursday in June, to Jubilee Point. Mr. Wm. Collins, the energetic and popular Secretary, is making arrangements for some prominent speakers, who will deal with the sugar beet question. Full particulars later.

To Go to Ottawa

Mayor Dunne will join Senator Cox and Mr. Stewart, of the Cereal Co., to-morrow at Ottawa, where they will wait on Hon. Mr. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals, and present the request that the dredging of the Otonabee up as far as Hunter st. be undertaken. The construction of the lower section of the Trent Valley Canal will also probably be strongly urged by these gentlemen, as the development of the Cereal Co.'s progressive plans depends largely on the securing of the water navigation to the front.

Nervous, Sleepless and Exhausted.

Not sick enough to lay up, but you are out of sorts, blood is weak, nerves unstrung, kidneys deranged, vitality is low. You should take Ferrozone at once; it will enrich, strengthen and purify the blood, invigorate and purify the nerves, and increase your energy, vitality and power. Ferrozone will renew your appetite and digestion, make you sleep soundly—in fact will make you well. Try Ferrozone. Price 50c. per box or 6 boxes for $2.50, at druggists or Ormond & Walsh.

A New Tea Store

The Strand Tea Company, of Montreal, has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. W. J. Morrow, as manager of their Peterborough store. Mr. Morrow has had a long experience in the grocery business, and has a large circle of friends. The premises will be No. 366 George-st., next to Messrs. [illegible] & Son, boot and shoe dealers, and are now being refitted, and will be opened by the middle of May, carrying a full line of teas, coffees, etc. In Mr. Morrow's able hands, and backed up by the excellent goods, the store should be a popular one with buyers of such staple necessaries as teas and coffees.

The Highlands of Ontario

From the General Passenger and ticket Agent's office of the Grand Trunk Railway system comes a well illustrated and descriptive circular of the "Highlands of Ontario" giving a general outline of the various arrangements the G.T.R. are making to provide a first-class tourist service to Muskoka, Lake of Bays, Nipissing, Kawartha Lakes, the summer resorts among the 30,000 islands of the Georgian Bay, and points on Lake Huron. Much information is set down in the four pages of the circular, and of such a nature as to be invaluable to anyone contemplating a summer outing. Some of the things dealt with are special arrangements, baggage, sportsmen's baggage, dogs, hay fever, where to get further information. There are as well a number of excellent halftones and a table showing the round trip tourist fares from different points.

—Bobcaygeon Independent:—Mr. Wm. McFarlane and family moved to Lovesick Lock, by Capt. Lewis' steam launch Pearl, on Monday, after spending the winter in the village. Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane wish to thank all the friends who were so kindly and sympathetic in their attentions during the prolonged and anxious period of the illness of their daughter, Miss Veronica. Mr. McFarlane is looking forward to a busy season at the Lock this year, with the rapidly increasing popularity of the Kawartha Lakes.

BOARD OF TRADE.

An electric railway in the town is only a luxury, but one that brings us in closer touch with outside points and will help to build up the town, and a radial railway such as is proposed should be given "both inducements." He would favor binding them to make their extensions within a given time and if they do not do so, why let them forfeit their charter for that particular part of the road.

Mr. J. Hughes-Charles did not think any company could be persuaded to take up the franchise unless given a very long term. An electric road is always more popular than a steam one, and such a line to Lakefield he thought would greatly encourage traffic. Providing the town's interests were safeguarded, it would be wise to grant the franchise asked for.

The President hoped the Council would see to it that the roadbed of the railway is kept clean and in good condition to the width of the tires at least.

Mr. R. Weir remarked that if we want to build up the town we must encourage such enterprises; still, he thought the company should be bound down to construct their suburban roads within a two years' limit.

Messrs. McWhinnie, R. R. Rogers and H. LeBrun all expressed themselves in favor of the measure, although Mr. Rogers thought the Council should not be in too much of a hurry in executing so important an agreement.

Mayor Dunne explained that this company are asked to keep a larger portion of the road clean than the old charter provided for. Should snow be piled up higher than one foot the Company is to draw it away. Then they are bound to install the latest electrical appliances.

Reeve Smith of Ashburnham expressed himself in favor of the measure, and said that should the company see fit to extend their road to Ashburnham, said village, he felt sure, would be willing to grant them the same privileges as the town. Ald. Morrison thought special attention should be given to the kind of rail to be used, and hinted that the town would be saddling itself with considerable expense in agreeing, as was asked by the company, in maintaining the necessary bridges to be crossed by the railway. The bridge at Smith street and one in the vicinity of Jackson's Park would have to be rebuilt.

President Dumble replied that this Board of Trade was simply dealing with the matter on broad general principles, and can safely trust the Town Council to deal with all minor points.

A Handsome Office

Mr. T. E. Buddy, the genial and popular ticket agent of the C.P.R., is being congratulated on the beautiful new quarters which have been secured for him. The office has for some years been located in the market building at the corner of Charlotte and George streets, and has been moved to the Grand Central building at No. 343 George street. The apartments are handsome and up to date, being finished regardless of expense. The large plateglass window is neatly lettered with the words "Canadian Pacific Railway," while on the inside the appearance is in keeping with the general progress of the company. The handsome new counter is of quartered oak and is the product of the Canadian Furniture Company. The walls are attractive looking with the many pictures of Canadian scenery along the road of the C.P.R., whilst the general appearance of the office is most inviting. The heating is by steam and the lighting is of electricity which can at any time be substituted by gas. The new C.P.R. office adds another to Peterborough's list of handsome business quarters.

Paine's Celery Compound Is the Only Medicine That Can Promptly and Permanently Banish All Wasting and Dangerous Diseases

IT RESTORES LOST HEALTH WHEN PHYSICIANS PRONOUNCE YOUR CASE INCURABLE

If, in springtime sick people—young and old—act with promptness, wisdom and decision, suffering, agony and misery would never be carried into the summer months.

To delay the work of banishing disease, regulating the nerves, purifying the blood and restoring perfect digestion is a serious mistake.

When the blood is sluggish, impure and poisoned, when the nervous system is unstrung, when digestion is deranged, and the appetite poor and variable, be assured your condition is critical, and calls for instant attention before the summer months bring additional dangers.

At this time the use of Paine's Celery Compound will do a marvellous work for every rundown, sick and diseased man and woman.

Its life-giving work first commences with the blood, which is made clean and pure; then the nerves are quickly set in order, digestive vigor is fully restored, the appetite is made natural, sleep is refreshing, and the desponding heart is made light and joyous.

It is well to bear in mind that Paine's Celery Compound owes its origin to the most distinguished physician that this American continent ever produced, and his marvellous prescription is publicly indorsed by our best and ablest physicians.

If all sufferers who have been disappointed in the past will promptly start with Paine's Celery Compound, they will be astonished and delighted with the speed with which this wonderful remedy is able to call a halt to wasting and dangerous diseases. It is now making tens of thousands well and strong, and fitting them to enjoy the summer months which, to the well and strong, are pleasurable and happy.

RURSIA AND JAPAN MUST FIGHT IT OUT

This Seems to be The Opinion of the American Newspaper

RUSSIA'S ATTITUDE NOT AT ALL ASSURING

The Combination Between Russia and France Regarded as a Huge Bluff, to Discredit the Treaty With Britain

Special to The Times.

London, April 30.—The feeling is growing that war between Russia and Japan is bound to come in a few months. The immense preparations that are being made in both countries must produce a conflict sooner or later. In Japan public attention is divided between the Franco Russian note in reply to the Anglo-Japanese alliance and the general election which is to take place about the middle of August.

With regard to the first-mentioned question it is evident that no serious importance is attached by the Japanese statesmen and journalists to the declared extension of the scope of the Franco-Russian alliance to the Far East. There is a general tendency in well-informed circles in Tokio to regard that declaration in the light of a diplomatic bluff, intended in the first place, to counteract the favorable effect which the Anglo-Japanese convention produced on the minds of the Chinese and Corean rules, and secondly to warn the Japanese in a vague manner as to what they might expect in the event of their precipitating a collision—a contingency which seems to be a source of constant apprehension to the Northern Power.

The joint note certainly does not say nor, in the opinion of many Japanese thinkers, is it meant to say that France will under all circumstances join Russia in case of war in Eastern Asia. The possibility of what France may do in certain circumstances has never been lost sight of by Japanese politicians, but that possibility is not, in their opinion, rendered in any manner more palpable or clear by the recent simultaneous announcement from Paris and St. Petersburg.

As to the coming general election, parties are busily engaged in selecting candidates. That the "War Party" will supersede all others at the polls, there is no reason to doubt. The feeling is strong in the country against Russia. meanwhile, attention centres on Marquis Ito, the veteran leader of the largest party, the Constitutionists. What policy will he prescribe for his great party to go upon in the coming campaign?

This is the question which everybody is asking in Japan. I say "prescribe" advisedly, for it is a well-known fact that the Marquis is an autocratic head of his party. He has always said to his followers—"This is my policy; if you agree with me follow me; if not, please leave my standard." And they have thus far willingly followed him, and there is little reason to believe they will not do so in the present juncture.

The veteran leader, however, chooses for the present to hold his tongue; he has not taken even his immediate lieutenants into his confidence as to what he proposes to do for the coming campaign.

In the numerous addresses which he has had to deliver at the various banquets held in his honor after his arrival home from his recent foreign tour, the illustrious statesman has confined himself to advising his countrymen never to lose sight of the important fact that the conclusion of the alliance with Great Britain should not alter in the slightest degree the friendly attitude of the nation toward any other Power, and to emphasizing the necessity of their devoting their whole energies to the development of the material resources of the country. He also strongly deprecates the dissipation of his people's attention and energy over paltry questions of party politics.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE SUPREME

In South Africa—Most Important News from the Pretoria Government

London, April 30.—The announcement of a Government Gazette issued at Pretoria on April 15, may be taken to settle some important points as to the future of the Transvaal. It perhaps shows better than any "guesses" at the details of peace negotiations, what the government of the country is to be like, after the war is over. It also shows that order is being already pretty effectually enforced and civil administration established, even though guerilla operations still continue. The Gazette announcement provides, pending the creation of a Supreme Court, for the establishment of a High Court of the Transvaal, to be opened on May 8, and a Pretoria and Witwatersrand District Court or Superior Court for Johannesburg, to be opened on May 30. The same jurisdiction and powers are assigned to the District as to the High Court, except as regards appeals, and proceedings in insolvency. The regulations for admission of advocates and attorneys to practice in the Courts are Imperial in spirit, protecting the prestige of the Transvaal Bar but providing an opening for members of the profession in all the British Colonies, as well as the late South African Republic, although the two branches of the profession are kept distinct.

An interesting point, as indicating a decision of the British on the dual language question in South Africa, is the enactment that the proceedings of the Courts are to be conducted in the English language. The Roman-Dutch law, except so far as changed by legislative enactments, is to be the law of the Colony. Appeals may be taken from the District Court to the High Court, and—in cases where the sum or matter at issue amounts to £3,000—from the High Court to the Privy Council of Great Britain. The special criminal courts in Pretoria and Johannesburg cease on the day the new courts open. The judges appointed are: Sir J. Rose Innes, President; Puisne Judges, W. H. Solomon, J. W. Wessels and Sir William Smith. Another proof of the reestablishment of civil administration is to be found in the announcement that the offices of Registrar of Deeds, of Surveyor General, and for the registration of patents and trade marks will open May 20. New laws on patents and trade marks drawn on English lines have been published. All these signs point to progress in the direction of the pleasant paths of peace as surely as any formal negotiations could.

BRUTAL MURDER OF POLICE

Shot in the Back at a Lonely Spot Near Snake Hill, New Jersey

New York, April 28—Constable Chas. Engelbrecht has been shot to death on a lonely stretch of the Secaucus road, near Snake Hill, N.J. The police are searching for a bartender whom they suspect of the murder.

Engelbrecht was a constable of the township of Secaucus. Accompanied by Constables Doyle and Heflich, he planned a raid on an alleged disorderly house on the Secaucus road.

Engelbrecht and his assistants reached the place shortly before midnight. They found nothing of an incriminating nature, and departed. They started down the road, and had reached a dark stretch near the meadows, when a man opened fire within a few paces of the constables. Engelbrecht fell, with two wounds in his back.

Doyle and Heflich jumped aside until the man had emptied his pistol, and then sprang toward him. He evaded them, and darted into the rushes by the side of the road. The constables searched in vain, and then hurried to Secaucus, where an alarm was spread, and a posse set forth to hunt for the murderer.

BOER WOMEN VERY VINDICTIVE

They Shook Their Fists at the Soldiers as They Passed by.

Norwich, Ont., April 30 — C. J. A. Dunlop, of Norwich, writes home from Fort McReady, South Africa, on March 6th, as follows:

This is the place where General White was defeated. We arrived in Durban after a fine trip, and came on at once up country. It seems strange to be on African soil after reading so much about it, and see the blacks moving about. It was very hot at the coast, but it is cool up here. We saw the places where General Buller was repulsed, which did not appear to me to be so bad as one would suppose, and saw where they lost the guns, and the place where young Roberts fell, over whose grave a monument has been erected. It was most interesting to be in Ladysmith and view all the positions which made it a hard place for General White to hold; he deserves great praise. We had tea there, hard tack and not very tender beef, which is the average fare. I have not had my clothes off since we arrived, as there are Boers about and we have to be ready to turn out at once, having done so twice already. I sleep with rifle loaded at my side and 150 rounds of ammunition, also my revolver charged. It seems strange to here the sentry shout "Who goes there?" and then the rifle's bang and sing of bullets through the air and followed by the whole camp turning out half asleep. We have trenches all around the camp, and which we occupy and await developments. There have been about 1,400 Boers captured during the last ten days, at which rate the end must be approaching. We passed a train load of prisoners on the way up, and they are just what we had read about. They are friendly. They said we could not catch De Wet with such horses as we had. At one of the stations some officers of the Black Watch came and spoke to me; they are a splendid looking lot of fellows. We were inspected on Saturday by Lord Kitchener, who is not by any means the fine looking man shown in photos, but I heard him tell the Colonel something after my own heart, which proved he knew his business. We are in quarantine for smallpox, but expect to be out on Saturday. The Manhattan men are six miles away, and will join us on Saturday, and we expect to leave in about a week. We get no war news, not seeing any papers. About 400 Boers were captured a few days since a short distance from us, who were supposed to be on their way to visit us, when they ran into a regiment of regulars and were captured. On the way up we passed a number of concentration camps, and the women saluted us with doubled fists. Some of our officers have been shot by small boys about six years old. We are in sight of Majuba Hill, where General Colley was defeated.

DAIRYMEN MEET TO-DAY

Prominent Men from All Parts Meet To-Day in Ottawa

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, Ont., April 30.—In response to the call of J. A. Ruddick, chief of the Government Dairy Department, prominent dairymen assembled here from various parts of the Dominion to-day for an important conference. The object of the meeting is to discuss prevailing systems of manufacture, and also to arrive at a more uniform method of dairying, which may be carried on in future.

ENGLAND'S VALUED CUSTON

How a Leading Philadelphia Paper View the Situation

Philadelphia, April 22.—The people who supposed that Great Britain was going to be financially crushed by the burden of the Boer war have been proved mistaken. Great Britain is evidently all right. Both France and Germany, which have not suffered any exceptional drain, have lately confessed to deficits; while, in spite of everything, the "tight little island" is able to exhibit a substantial surplus. The circumstance is gratifying from every point of view, for Great Britain is the United States' best customer.

BROOKS MURDER A MYSTERY.

The Inquest Throws no Light on the Tragedy

Special to The Times.

New York, April 30.—The inquest into the death of Walter Brooks, who was murdered in the Glen Island Hotel two months ago and for whose death Miss Florence Burns was held and subsequently released, was begun to-day before Coroner Brown. During the past few weeks the police have been working assiduously on the case to complete their evidence. They claim to have several new witnesses, but the opinion prevails that nothing of importance has been turned up and that the case is destined to remain a mystery.

CHINA AT CORONATION

Son of Prince Ching Reaches Here on His Way to London

Hong Kong, April 30.—Tsai Chen, son of Prince Ching, who is en route to London, where he will represent the Emperor of China at the coronation of King Edward, arrived here to-day.

He paid a visit to Gen. Sir William Gascoigne, commanding the military forces here, and was entertained at lunch at the Chinese Club. He will inspect the Terrible to-morrow.

MAUD GENTILE'S SLAYER HERE

Brought Back from Canada — Killing was an Accident He Says

Eugene Gauthier, who is accused of murdering Maud Gentile in a Third avenue hotel on March 12, was brought back here last night from Montreal, where he surrendered to the police and was locked up in Police Headquarters. Detective Sergeants Berkeley and Aitken, who brought him from Montreal said that he was taciturn and reticent on the trip. The only thing he would say, according to the detectives, was:

"It was all an accident. I was scared and ran away."

BURNED WITH CARBOLIC ACID

Mrs. Allen, an Important Witness in the Wolfe Case, Attacked

Toronto, May 28—The very complicated case, in which Mrs. Rachel Wolfe, her husband, Max Wolfe, and Mrs. Lucy Allen have been so prominent, had been made much more complex by a sensational turn which matters took on Sunday night, when Mrs. Allen was attacked on Ontario street by some miscreant, who forced a cloth, saturated with carbolic acid, into her face, burning her very painfully.

Mrs. Allen, it will be remembered, was an employe at Mrs. Wolfe's fur store on Yonge st. Mrs. Wolfe assigned and later on Mrs. Wolfe was charged with theft and fraud upon the creditors, and in the Police Court at the preliminary investigation, Mrs. Allen, who is quite young, was a witness for the Crown, swearing to the fact that Mrs. Wolfe had sold a jacket for $65 and had turned in only $40 to the assignee. About this time Mrs. Allen began to be the subject of anonymous persecution, and she went to her mother at Hamilton. After her departure the Wolfes had the house at which she used to board, Mrs. Graceley's, 31 Emily street, searched. The result was the discovery of a quantity of furs which the Wolfe's claimed to have been theirs. Mrs. Allen was arrested and brought back to Toronto. On Friday her trial began before Police Magistrate Kingsford. Very extraordinary and conflicting evidence was given by Mrs. Graceley and her daughter Florence. The case was adjourned until to-day, when it was the intention of the defence to call Mrs. Allen, who, it was promised, would give very sensational evidence.

Last night she was out with a friend named Miss Ella Loftus, who boards at 135 Shuter street. At Sherbourne and Gerrard streets they separated about a quarter to 10 o'clock. Miss Loftus, who, by the way, was another witness against the Wolfe's went home. Mrs. Allen went east on Gerrard street and then up Ontario street. Half way up to Carlton street she was suddenly seized by a man, who slashed her in the face with a towel and then ran away with great speed. When she recovered herself a little she found her right cheek and neck burning, and she at once hastened to Miss Loftus' Dr. McCallum was hastily called in and Sergeant Reburn and Detective Black were notified. The police ambulance was called and Mrs. Allen was taken to St. Michael's Hospital, where she now lies in a private ward.

KILLED GIRL WHO TEASED HIM.

Schoolboy at Kingston, in Momentary Anger Shot Friend

Kingston, April 29 — In Frontenac public school at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Eric Sharp, the 16-year-old son of H. Sharp, a Princess street grocer, deliberately shot and almost instantly killed Beatrice Holland, 14 years of age, daughter of Geo. Holland, an engineer on the Kingston & Pembroke Railway.

A few scholars had finished their daily tasks in the junior fourth class and were in the cloak room preparing to go home. The young girl jokingly tipped the boy's hat off his head. Eric told her to go away or he would shoot her. Almost instantly he drew a revolver from his pocket and fired. The bullet entered the girl's temple and she fell to the floor. In less than five minutes death ensued.

Crazed by the deed, the lad fled, and could not be found. At 7 o'clock in the evening he gave himself up to the police, in a dazed condition. According to his story, he and the girl were good friends, and he had no intention of shooting her when he drew the revolver, which went off before he knew. He says that he went away not knowing where he was going, and finally found himself in the city park, when he told a boy of the affair and was advised to go to the police station. This he did. Young Sharp says he got the revolver under the school steps, but his companions say he had been carrying it for some time, using it to shoot frogs.

An inquest will be held on Tuesday.

THE DOMINION CAPITAL

The Hermer System Becomes Part of the C. P. R.—Social and Personal News from the Capital.

Special to the Times

Ottawa, April 29 — An official of the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway announced that the sale of the road to the C.P.R. had been definitely concluded and will go into effect immediately. The negotiations which for some time have been in progress are concluded, and to-morrow, Wednesday, the old Board of Directors will meet in Montreal to formally hand over the line to the new purchasers.

The local officials of the road have not yet been informed as to what their exact status, in view of the sale of the road, will be, but they have received an intimation that all will be provided for.

The Pontiac and Gatineau line, it is announced, will be amalgamated with the eastern division of the C.P.R. under the general superintendance of Mr. C. W. Spence. Time tables on all of the lines will be changed and a better train service provided. As to whether the old company's offices in the Central chambers will be done away with is not yet known.

Parliament to Prorogue

It is rumored that the session will close about the 15th of May. The session has been uneventful and somewhat disappointing, on the whole.

Social and Personal

Among many members of parliament who are planning to go to the coronation are Messrs. W. S. Calvert, A. F. MacLaren, H. J. Logan and Ralph Smith.

Among the ministers who will go to the coronation besides Sir Wilfrid Laurier are Hon. W. S. Fielding, Hon. Dr. Borden, Hon. J. I. Tarte and Hon. Wm. Paterson. All except the Minister of Finance will be accompanied by private secretaries.

Mayor Dunne, of Peterborough, and Mr. Stewart, of the Cereal Works, Peterborough, are in the city on departmental business.

Gratitude Expressed

Governor Mousette, of Hull jail, has received a letter from relatives of Stanislaus Lacroix, in which they express deep gratitude and thanks for the many acts of kindness shown the unfortunate man by Mr. and Mrs. Mousette and family during his imprisonment. The letter also speaks very appreciatively of the manner in which Lacroix's relatives were treated when they visited him.

Conservative Banquet

The Conservative senators and members of the house of commons will give a banquet to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the veteran opposition leader of the senate, on Tuesday, May 6th, in the dining room of the senate.

News from Foreign Lands

St. Paul, Minn., April 30.—The local representatives of the big packing houses of Chicago and St. Paul, who were arrested last week on complaint of the local meat dealers, who charged them with selling meat preserved by means of borax injections and solution, were arraigned in court to-day for trial. The decision of the cases depends on the efforts of the defense to prove that borax is not injurious. The prosecution arises from the dissatisfaction of the retailers over the dictatorial action of the packers in raising the price of meat and the result of the trials is awaited with much interest.

Berlin, April 30.—According to the calculations of a Hamburg mathematician, Professor Schubert, forty minutes past ten o'clock this morning will mark the passing of exactly a thousand million minutes since the birth of Christ. The event has been celebrated by the issue of a picture postcard reproducing Professor Schubert's chronological calculation.

Salem, Ore., April 30.—A new method for extracting gold from base ores has been developed by a resident of this city. After years of effort the process has been perfected and lately practical demonstrations of its success have been given. The process is said to have yielded three times as much gold as could have been obtained by the usual smelting process. Briefly, the process separates the gold from the ore, which is put through various solutions after crushing. After settling for twelve hours the liquid is skimmed like cream, the gold being taken off the top where it rises like a thick skum. It is claimed by the discoverer that the process matures latent gold, which cannot be secured by other processes. It is believed by experts that the new process will greatly increase the amount saved, especially from ores of a low grade.

Washington, April 30.— The Department of State has been notified by cable from Bogota that fierce fighting is going on near Guatavita, forty-five miles from Bogota, and it is reported that 2,000 men are engaged. According to the Government advices the army of Gen. Uribe-Uribe, revolutionist, has been twice defeated and is retreating, and the Government forces continue to advance.

LEYDS TALKS OF NEW REPUBLICS IN S. AERICA

Will be Established in the Northwestern Section of Cape Colony by Boers and Rebels

DESIRE FOR INDEPENDENCE WILL BE MANIFESTED

By the Establishment of Several Republics in the North-West of The Colony by the Rebels.

London, April 29—A statement by D. Leyds in the Neue Freie Presse is quoted by the Vienna correspondent of the Times. Leyds says the South African peace negotiations must be regarded as having broken down. The demand that the Boers lay down their arms and renounce independence and claim to amnesty cannot be complied with because Cape Colony and other rebels form a considerable portion of the combatants. Leyds alleges that there is profound dissatisfaction in Cape Colony, and asserts the desire for independence will be manifested by the establishment of several republics in the north-west of the colony.

THE DEPARTURE OF THE TRANSPORTS

Change in Date of Sailing Made by the Department

TO AVOID SUNDAY LABOR

Canada Could Easily Have Raised Still Another Regiment—Recruiting Over

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, April 30.—A change has been made in the dates of departure of the transports for South Africa. Instead of sailing on May 6 and 12, the Castrian and Winifredian will leave on the 10th and 14th respectively. The reason for making the change is that the dates first selected would have involved working on Sunday, and the Minister of Militia wished to avoid this.

The selection of officers for the regiment to be commanded by Lieut.-Col. Macdonell has not yet been completed, but some of the appointments have been made. Major Hemmer, of the Mounted Rifles, Winnipeg, will be second in command. Captain E. F. Mackie, of the 9th Battalion, and Lieut. A. W. Strange, both of whom served in Strathcona's Horse, have accepted offers of commissions. Captain Mackie may be adjutant of the Regiment.

The requisite number of men for the fourth contingent has been raised, and there are many to spare, as the applications and those who passed the examinations have exceeded the two thousand required.

The news that Canada could easily have raised another contingent has been received at the Militia Department yesterday. From British Columbia comes word that 222 men have been enlisted; Manitoba 197, and in the North-West Territories about 130 men. This makes 555, which, together with those enrolled in the East, brings up the total over 2,000 men.

Returns of the enlisting for South Africa in Ontario and the eastern provinces have also been received. They show that in Ontario there were 18 men enrolled at Windsor, 62 Guelph, 72 at London, Brantford, 22, St. Catharines 19, Toronto 158, Peterborough 67, Port Hope 23, Kingston 21, Hamilton 64, Ottawa 180.

In Quebec—Montreal 124, Quebec 21 Sherbrooke 18.

In New Brunswick — Fredericton 11 Moncton 30, Newcastle 24, St. John 87 Woodstock 6.

In Nova Scotia—Halifax 82, Kentville 11 Truro 18, Sydney 29, Springhill 20, Yarmouth 2, Middleton 6.

In Prince Edward Island — Charlottetown 37.

This makes a total of 1,224, which, with the 100 to be taken from the permanent corps, brings it up to 1,324.

Recruiting has now been stopped, and when the equipment and arms are all shipped to Halifax, the Canadian boys will will be ready to go to South Africa.

Quebec, April 5—Eight men of the R.C.G.A., quartered at the Citadel, leave for Halifax to-day.

WOODSTOCK'S CONTRIBUTION

Woodstock, April 30.—Among the Woodstock men who joined the fourth contingent and left Saturday night for Halifax is Aylmer Lonald Fraser, goal-keeper for the Woodstock Hockey team. He is one of the best goal men in Canada. His brother Gordon, of Paris, also enlisted. The list of Woodstock men has swelled to about fifteen. Last night James Hamilton, hardware merchant, of this city, received notice of his appointment to a captaincy in the contingent.

KINGSTON'S QUOTA.

Kingston, Ont., April 30.—Eighteen members of "A" and "B" Batteries, picked from the 119 that offered their services and also recruits from outside points will leave for South Africa. They are all unmarried men. The names are: "A" Battery; Br. Mercier and Grs. Mayer, Honeyball, Wallace, Miller, Predett, Manning, Irwin, Aiken, Smith, Walsh—11. "B" Battery—Br. Hannah, Grs. Hardy, Chabott, Rae, Hubley, Henneay, McGuard, 7. They will be accompanied by S. M. Gunblett.

A Labor Candidate

Special to The Times.

Brantford, Ont., April 26—There may be a third candidate in South Brantford for the local house, the labor party having decided to ask Ald. Ham to be its standard bearer. Mr. Ham is a manufacturer, but he has always identified himself with labor movements.

A Great Sufferer Cured

Mr. Benjamin Dillon, of Leeds, Ont. was cured of Muscular Rheumatism by Polson's Nerviline, and says: "I feel my duty is to proclaim Polson's Nerviline as an infallible cure for Rheumatism; it cured me after 20 years suffering, and nothing I know of can equal its penetrating power. Nerviline simply has no equal in quickly relieving and curing Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, and Lumbago. A trial will convince anyone. Price 25c.

NO TRANSFER OF FLAGS TO AMERICAN VESSELS

The Big Scare in Britain not Regarded Seriously in Washington

SCHEME SAID TO BE IMPOSSIBLE

The Idea Ridiculed by Members of the U. S. Congress—Not the Slightest Cause for Alarm.

Washington, April 30.—Members of Congress are inclined to ridicule the fears in London that all the English ships in the Morgan merger may eventually fly the American flag. It requires a special act of Congress for each ship of foreign construction to obtain American registry. No bill has been presented to Congress, such as is mentioned in the London despatches this morning, and none of the leaders know of any intention to introduce such a bill. Senator Frye, of Maine, author of the Ship Subsidy measure which passed the Senate, said to-day that it was hardly possible to get such a bill introduced to say nothing of its passage.

"Such a proposition," continued Mr. Frye, "as is contained in the despatches from London, which say that the steamship combination will urge upon Congress the admission of all its foreign built ships to American registry, is absurd and impossible. Such a thing would not be permitted in either branch of Congress, and I have heard no sentiment whatever in favor of it."

Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, member of the Commerce Committee, said: "The story about granting American registry to foreign built ships comes up every year. The Republican party will not permit anything of that kind to occur so long as it remains in power. Such a proposition could not go through the Senate."

Items of Interes

London, April 29 — The Canadian officials here are highly excited over the proofs received at the Emigration Office that the shipping combination, with two Canadian lines in it, are already interfering with the systematized operations of the highly successful bureau.

Commissioner W. T. R. Preston confirmed yesterday the report that the two representatives of the shipping ring had threatened to divert emigration from Canada unless the work of the sub-agents appointed throughout the United Kingdom for promoting it without prejudice to any line were restricted.

Reported to Ottawa

Mr. Preston told me that important correspondence on the subject would arrive at Ottawa on Thursday, showing that the ring is seeking to control the rates for passage to Canada, and to interfere with the wise policy which has led to the enormous increase of inquiries and departures of British settlers.

He predicted that the interference of the shipping ring with the immigration business would be followed inevitably by the creation of a Canadian subsidized line for carrying emigrants, and that the British government would assist in defence of Imperial commerce.

The subject will be brought up before Mr. Chamberlain at the conference of the Colonial Premiers after the coronation.

The excitement caused here by the shipping deal is subsiding, owing to the mass of contradictions and the lack of authentic information. A sense of irritated uneasiness remains unmistakably, for the independence of the British commercial marine is a national tradition well-nigh sacrosanct, and even if the Cunard and White Star Lines, in joining an American-Canadian-German coalition, keep the same flag afloat, the grip of a foreign money power is dreaded as a source of danger in time of war.

A fresh series of questions asked in Parliament threw little light upon the subject, but disclosed the fact that the Government was fully alive to the importance of establishing safeguards against the transfer of subsidized British ships to foreign flags. The heads of the Admiralty and the Board of Trade have been consulting, and there is likely to be something more than a reappointment of the committee on steamship subsidies. Mr. Arnold Forster is both a naval expert and a man of energy, and important action is foreshadowed.

The most significant feature of the shipping excitement is the silence prevailing at the shipyards of Belfast, the Clyde and the Tyne. There are no outcries from British shipbuilders when it is suggested that the United States may adopt a free ship bill and take over European merchant fleets. The truth is discerned that the Morgan combination is not harmful to the shipbuilding interests at Philadelphia and other American ports, and that the adoption of a free ship policy would be a tremendous gain for British yards.

THE STATE AND CONSUMPTION.

Whensoever two or three philanthropists gather together these days, they discuss the necessity of providing better means for the isolation and treatment of consumptive patients. And they could not well direct their philanthropy to a worthier purpose.

But is it not a question that the state should take hold of, promptly, vigorously, effectively, generously?

Here we have a disease which is a veritable plague in its ravages and universality. And here we have the new knowledge that it is not hereditary but communicable; and so mildly communicable that very simple measures of isolation serve to absolutely prevent its spread. And with that we have too, the knowledge that it is often curable by mere exposure to pure air, coupled with wholesome living.

Do these not constitute a set of facts which justify the whole community—that is, the State—in taking joint and concerted action for stamping out the plague? It is no mere matter of fighting a disease. It is a struggle with an epidemic, from which the people can be set free; and is as much a case for State action as the establishment of a quarantine against cholera, or the provision by the municipality of a fire department.

When we make up our minds to take this ghastly menace by the throat, we will increase our chances of life by a tremendous percentage.

MODERATE DIET.

Good beef having gone up in price, word is being passed that people in general eat too much of that commodity. It is stated as a fact that since the jump in price, the people are using only one-half of what was consumed a couple of months ago. The abstinence on the part of consumers may not suit the doctors, for if people ate less there would be less for those professional gentlemen to do, and the consumers, who think themselves such and victims of the worldly-minded Trust, would be physically and mentally the gainers. It is an old maxim that meat once a day is all that any one needs. Yet most people imagine it a hardship not to be provided with some kind of meat twice or three times a day—"three square meals" in other words. It is astonishing, however, how well one can get along with two. Heavy, or high, living puts too much pressure on the vital forces and shortens life, just as over-stoking a steam boiler is injurious and wasteful. A moderate diet is best.

School Humor.

AN English paper gives some further examples of children's unconscious humor in answering examination questions:

Alexander the Great was born in absence of his parents.

The chief clause in Magna Charta was that no free man should be put to death or imprisoned without his own consent.

Where were the kings of England crowned? On their heads.

What were the three most important Feudal dues? Friendship, courtship, marriage.

What do you know of Dryden and Buckingham? Dryden and Buckingham were at first friends, but soon became contemporaries.

What is Milton's chief work? Milton wrote a sensible poem called the "Canterbury Tails."

Give the names of five Shakespearian plays? Macbeth, Mikado, Quo Vadis, San Toy, Sign of the Cross.

An optimist is a man who looks after your eyes, and a pessimist is a man who looks after your feet.

A man who looks on the bright side of things is called an optimist, and the one who looks on the dull side is called a pessimist.

The Saving of Mrs. Mervine.

PERSONALLY, I never liked Mrs. Mervine. It may have been that she was too pretty for any other woman to like, or it may have been something else. I'm not good at analyzing my sentiments. I like and I dislike, that's enough for me. Some people can't wear a bustle without knowing in what period of our evolution a taste for humps was evolved, but for me, I'd go on all fours without a question if it became the style. And when Mrs. Mervine—she was Miss Henry then—married Mr. Mervine, I did a little quiet rejoicing all privately in my own room. You see, George and Miss Henry had had an affair, and, by the way, I hadn't thought of it before, but maybe that is why I never liked her. But then, according to that, I shouldn't have liked George, either. Two things equal to each other are equal to themselves, isn't it? Or something like that. No, don't explain it to me. I couldn't understand in a week, and, besides, I want to tell you what saved Mrs. Mervine.

You see, she was young and pretty as a picture in an Alma Tadema-esque sort of way. He was about seventy, and he looked like an antique brass. Just the color, you know, and so many wrinkles that they looked as if they had been made by hand with a chisel. He was rich and respected and all that, but he was a man of principle, and of all things I loathe it's a man or woman of principle. I think principles ought to be like the magazines at a man's club—for the use of all, and not to be gathered up and secreted by one, any more than one would try to swallow all the air around him, so no one else should have any.

Mixed? No, I'm not. The metaphor? Oh, well, I'm telling you what saved Mrs. Mervine. But about his principles. They were a good concrete sort, you know. There was nothing Comtian or Kantian about them. A babe in arms could have understood them. One was that servants should not be tipped. Another, that a man should get his money's worth wherever he went. Another, that a woman who had attained her growth was old enough to take care of herself, and so on and so on. Any one of these was a principle for which he declared himself ready to perish at the stake. Mrs. Mervine knew all about these principles before she married him, but she didn't realize their import, and she went up to the altar pink and smiling and thinking how she was going to spill his money about.

How do I know what she thought? Didn't I tell you that I feel things—lots of them—without ever knowing them? We all went down to the station with them. You know they went to New York and sailed from there for Europe. His best man had the tickets bought and the chairs bought, and he shoved them over to Mr. Mervine. That worthy looked at them and bolted back to the ticket-office. He came back puffing and showed us a handful of change.

"She can have a chair," he said, jerking his thumb towards the bride, who was neither pink nor smiling now, "and I'll sit in the smoking compartment. You see, they can't put me out, because I can show them I've paid for a seat in the car. Nothing like getting your money's worth."

Just then the bell rang for the train to start. Poor old Mr. Mervine was born, you know, ages before trains were thought of, and he always had a panic about catching one. Well, he forgot everything except that he was scheduled to catch that train, and he whisked through the gate alone, galloped down the track and threw himself on the platform. Of course, there wasn't anything left for Mrs. Mervine to do but to make a hasty explanation to the gatekeeper and sail down after him. She scrambled on to the rear platform, with the aid of the porter, and never turned to wave us good-by.

We threw the old shoes and rice at a young couple that came in on the local and stopped behind a load of trunks to kiss.

Mamma and I went abroad that year, and I had almost forgotten the old Relic and his bride until one day in Paris I heard an American voice. It was at a kiosk where I was buying a magazine, and there was the Relic flourishing the Paris edition of the "Herald," trying in execrable French to have it exchanged for a "Galignani" of the same date. The old woman who kept the booth imagined herself threatened by a maniac or an assassin, and was about to call a gendarme, when I interfered and explained. The Relic was profuse in his thanks, but begged that since I had already been so kind, would I do yet a little more and see if I could not induce the old woman to take the "Herald," which he had read, in exchange for the "Galignani," which he desired to read. I glanced across the way, and saw Mrs. Mervine seated on one of the public benches watching us with narrowed eyes, which she averted as I turned toward her. She was gorgeously dressed, and I saw she had a hand full of new diamonds, but her face was absolutely colorless and her eyes looked bright and hot as if she hadn't been able to have a good cry for a year. I knew the Relic's principles were getting on Mrs. Mervine's nerves, and I slipped a few sous into the old woman's hand and gave the Relic his "Galignani."

He was quite embarrassing in his gratitude, and summoned Mrs. Mervine with a sort of whistle, such as one uses in emergencies for hackmen or motormen. She had learned the signal well, for she came up promptly, with a look in her eyes as if she expected to see ghosts. She was quietly cordial, saying and acting the correct thing, as she had always done, but it didn't occur to me until afterwards how weakly she had seconded his effusive invitation for us to dine with them.

Mamma, you know, is always quite unhappy on the Continent. She misses her morning oatmeal and ice water, and, most of all, someone to whom she can talk English; so, whenever we meet an American, I have all I can do to prevent her legally adopting him into the family. So, when the Relic insisted on having us dine with them, mamma joyously consented. It was arranged that they should call for us at our hotel, and from there we were to go to the Palais Royal and later to the Comedie Francaise.

Well, they came on time—in an old voiture with a drunken driver who had agreed to take them for less than the regular tariff. The Relic has a morbid habit of demonstrating everywhere that he knows more than any other one or two human beings about him, so we had no sooner started than he began to declare to the "cocher" that he was driving us in a roundabout way in or-

Nobody can tell yet how ideally correct feeding can be practiced. It is less than useless for anybody in New Jersey to tell us how he feeds Minorcas successfully if another man in northern Michigan or Wisconsin is going to copy without change. It is not even advisable to adopt unchanged the rations of one man for a flock of equal numbers, same breed, in the next county, next town, next farm.—Jas. The Origin of the Loving Cup.

THE loving cup is very common nowadays, and we see it everywhere. But many years ago there were no such things as these queer three handled affairs, and the following story tells how they first happened to be made:

Once upon a time centuries before us, there lived a great and powerful king, who was extremely fond of hunting. He was one day in a forest pursuing a stag, but it was so fleet and clever that it eluded him and his band of followers, and led them entirely out of their way. After wandering about in a hopeless fashion they finally came upon a little hut, and the king himself dismounted and rapped smartly upon the door.

A young girl answered his knock, and soon showed the men the right path. The king was about to go, when he saw a well near the house, and at the sight of the clear water immediately felt thirsty, and, going back, asked the girl for a drink. Without hesitation she went into the house and came out with an earthen jug filled with the well water. But, instead of offering his royal majesty the handle, as most people would do, she held that herself, and handed him the cup the wrong way.

The king said nothing, thanked the girl, and he and his band soon found their way out of the wood.

But when he reached his palace he determined to reward the girl for giving him the water and at the same time to teach her a lesson in politeness.

Sending to his jeweler, he bade him make a silver cup, with two handles, and deliver it to the young girl, without a word as to whence it came.

Perhaps a month after this the king again hunted in that same forest, sought the hut and asked the girl for another drink of water.

This time she entered the house and came out with a beautiful silver cup, full of the sparkling water. "Now," thought the king, "she has certainly learned a lesson." But never was he more mistaken, for the poor, ignorant girl took a handle in each hand, and for the second time offered her liege lord nothing save the side of the cup.

The king rode away deeply perplexed. He resolved to teach the girl the polite way to hand a cup without directly rebuking her, and many were the hours he spent in cudgelling his brains for some way in which to do it. At last a bright idea struck him, and he sent for his jeweler a second time. "Make me," said he to the man, "a silver cup, heavily chased, and with my royal crest, and put three handles on it." The jeweler, much surprised—for remember, no such thing had ever been heard of up to this time—did as he was told, and soon the mug was finished. As before, the king had it privately sent to the girl who lived in the little hut.

One day not long after this for the third time he rode into that forest, and, taking the now well-known path, soon reached the cottage. Dismounting, he knocked at the door and asked humbly for a drink of clear water.

The girl immediately came out with the beautiful three-handled cup, and, taking two of the handles in her hands, she offered him the third.

So the king rode away well pleased with his strategy and, reaching home, ordered three-handled cups to be made in every sort of ware, and they became so popular that we now have them in all our shops and stores.

An Unfortunate Experiment.

SOME years ago there lived in Turin a physician noted far and wide as a specialist of brain diseases. Men and women came to him from the ends of the earth. With the development of fortune, for his fees were in proportion to his prominence, he cultivated a pleasing taste for those precious relics of antiquity in which millionaires alone are privileged to indulge. He had in his library a collection of costly objects of art. The fame of his treasures was loud in the world's ears with the note of his skill. One day a rich American banker came to consult him about his wife, a confirmed kleptomaniac. His life was a burden to him, following her from store to store, continually guarding her reputation against the encroachment of her fingers. Though it had cost him thousands, his wife knew nothing, suspected nothing of her own weakness. Nor should she ever know if he could prevent it.

"If I brought her here to consult you as a physician," said the afflicted husband, "I fear she would suspect something and it would kill her. If you will permit it I'll bring her to call on you as a collector of antiquities. Do not be disconcerted, however, if during the interview you find her pilfering, slipping your relics and coins into her umbrella or pockets. That is the ailment, and, of course, whatever she takes will be returned to you at once. My references are So and So, bankers." This with much dignity and the production of documents.

The physician made the appointment, and next day the couple came. The doctor brought out his treasures, wonderful coins, antique jewelry, on which he descanted with much graceful learning. Every now and then the lady slipped into her pocket or dropped into her parasol a coin, a jewel, a vase, and as she did so her husband winked at the doctor to draw attention to her theft. When the physician finally gave the signal that he had learned all he required, she had accumulated the rarest of his possessions.

"I'll be back within an hour," said the Chicago banker, "with the things my wife has taken. Poor, poor girl!" he burst out. "Doctor, my fortune, my life are yours if you can but cure her."

Two hours passed, then three, then the interval lengthened to five. The physician, rather alarmed, sent his servant to the American's hotel. No persons of the name were staying there. The police were called in, descriptions given, detectives went forth. They identified the culprits, who had time to make their escape. They were London pickpockets, two thieves whose characters and depredations were notorious all over England.

"Why do you call the fast bicycle rider a scorcher?" "Because he goes at a hot pace, makes pedestrians boiling mad, warms up the police, gets roasted in court, and then thinks the whole thing is a burning shame."—"Tit-Bits."

Good Boys

Are the bad boys very often. The boy that's good for anything is generally pugnacious. He's a healthy animal, and the healthy animal will always fight for his rights.

When a boy shuns the rough sports of his companions he is apt to be a weakling, and to be conscious of the fact.

A great many mothers have testified to the wonderful curing and strengthening power of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. All strength comes from food after it has been perfectly digested and assimilated. By curing diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, "Golden Medical Discovery" enables the perfect nourishment of the body, which is thus built up in the only way a body can be built up—by food.

There is no alcohol in "Discovery," and it entirely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"Dr. Pierce's medicine has done wonders for my two sons," writes Mrs. M. Hartrick, of Dexter, Oswego Co., N. Y. "Both had scrofula. My eldest son was taken two or three years ago with hemorrhage from the lungs. It troubled him for over a year. He took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and has not had one in over a year. My younger son had scrofulous sores on his neck; had two lanced, but has not had any since he commenced to take your medicine."

Keep Hogs Thrifty.

The hog seems to need some earthy or mineral matter to enable it to digest its food well. For this purpose many give salt, wood ashes and charcoal, allowing them to eat it as they please, and they usually are pleased to eat it pretty freely, especially the breeding stock kept over winter, and it has been found by test that fattening hogs put on flesh more rapidly when they can resort to this mixture as they please. It prevents the gravel eating, which sometimes seems to keep them from growing. The Bureau of Animal Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, sends out the following recipe, which we are not sure is any better than the one we give above. Charcoal, sulphur and black antimony, of each one pound, mixed with common salt, baking soda, sulphate of soda, hyposulphite of soda, of each two pounds. If given in the feed, one teaspoonful is allowed daily to each hog. The hogs also need in winter, especially the breeding sows, either roots or green feed of some kind. We think raw roots are better than cooked ones, but if they are not at hand give every day a lock of clover hay. They will always eat it greedily.—American Cultivator.

The Unproductive Cows.

What to do with the unproductive cows is a question that is puzzling many farmers to-day. Much of the stock on hand will not return the value of the feed needed to keep the animals. If the poorer animals of the herd are old cows, which have passed their period of usefulness for the dairy, I would advise selling for what they will bring as second quality beef. Old dairy cows will not return in their final value the cost of the feed necessary to fatten them. Heifers or cows in the prime of life may pay for fattening. This depends on the amount of feed which must be purchased and used in this way.

Homegrown corn and cottonseed meal are the most economical grains to use in fattening. I would advise feeding animals that are being fattened but little coarse fodder, and of this would use the poorer grades, such as second quality hay and corn stover, but would feed liberally of grain for from four to six weeks, and then sell for what the animals will bring.

A grain ration made up of four hundred pounds of corn meal and two hundred pounds of cottonseed meal should produce a rapid gain. This ration should be fed at the rate of from six to ten pounds a day, according to the size of the animal. All animals will gain faster during the early part of the fattening period, but at the present prices of feeds will probably not gain enough to pay for the feed if the fattening process is followed up beyond a certain point. This point can only be accurately ascertained by frequent weighing, but will probably not be later than six weeks after feeding begins.—Prof. C. S. Phelps, in New-England Homestead.

Grass lands deserve as much attention in spring as any other portion of the farm. Grass is really the mainspring of farming, for wherever there is a good stand of grass there will be an excellent prospect for hay, pasturage and soil improvement. Fertilizer should be applied before grass starts, and the spring rains will carry it down to the roots and give the crop an early start, which will greatly assist in enduring drought in the summer. No pasturage or grass plot should be expected to give crops without manure or fertilizer. Wood ashes make an excellent fertilizer for grass, and a light application of nitrate of soda will give good results. If cattle are given the run of a grass plot when the grass is young they will do more harm to the grass by trampling than can result from any other cause. Grass exhausts the soil the same as any other crop, and the land must be supplied with the plant foods removed. If there are bare places in the pasture use the harrow over them and sow mixed varieties of grass seeds.

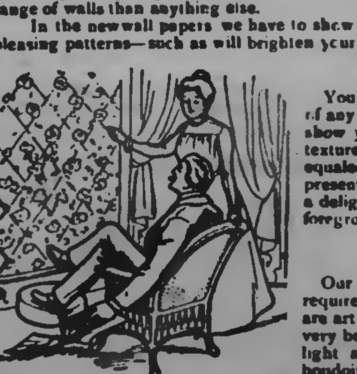
PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE,

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.



WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the on scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous!' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation!"

The World Lost for Love's Sake

face, and the agonized flutter of her hands at his words.

The sharp agony of his suspicion was like death to her pride, she knew what he must think.

She lifted her piteous face and sorrowful, beautiful eyes in a gaze that deep to his anger, went thrilling hotly to his very soul.

"Aleck, you look as though you thought—as though you thought I—I—had——" The sentence was finished by a torrent of tears.

"Tell me what brought the count to this room?" he repeated, in a terrible voice.

Heaven help her! There was no way of evading the direct question, yet she could not answer it.

Again she was like a timid doe driven at bay. She rose to her feet, swaying to and fro like a lily in a harsh, cold wind.

"I cannot tell you, Aleck," she said desperately, knowing that her love, her peace of mind, her happiness, all that made life worth living for was at stake.

His handsome face darkened with terrible wrath.

"I demand your answer, Daisy!" he cried. "Do not tamper with me, I am not the kind of a man to stand it."

"I must positively refuse to answer you, Aleck," she said; "I cannot tell you why he was here."

Again a horrible laugh — terrible to hear— fell from his lips.

"I wonder that you have not attempted to deny that he was here," he said.

"How can I deny it when — you —you saw him?" she sobbed, piteously.

Their eyes met in a look such as had never occurred before, and the anger and icy sternness in his face frightened her into dumb terror, and yet she would suffer everything to keep the terrible truth from him whom she loved better than life.

"Daisy!" this time his voice thrilled with passion and mighty love, "in heaven's name tell me what this means! What am I to think! I ask you plainly. What in heaven's name am I to think?"

"If I had had my revolver with me I should have shot the fellow dead. Do you know?— can you realize what construction the world would put upon what I have witnessed?"

The lovely girlish face did not flush under his stern gaze and cold eyes, but a heart- breaking quiver trembled on her red lips as she looked pleadingly, sorrowfully at him.

"Oh, I know what you must think, Aleck," she said in a pleading, touching way, "but, oh, Aleck, although I cannot tell you what brought him here, you must trust me. I cannot explain myself, I cannot defend myself; but as you love me trust me—believe in me."

She knelt before him in all her fair young beauty, her golden hair falling about her white shoulders like a veil of burnished gold, her blue eyes full of tears, her voice full of anguish.

Aleck turned on his heel with a terrible imprecation.

"If you will not tell what the count was doing here, by heaven! I shall follow him to the end of the world to force it from his lips. This is the end of our love— our happiness, Daisy —in this hour you and I part forever, and my love turns to bitterest hate."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Estranged.

In all the after years of sorrow and pain Alexander Hamilton never forgot the scene which followed.

On the threshold he paused and turned back.

Daisy had flung herself on the velvet carpet, her long golden hair floating about her, half revealing, half concealing a face so deathly white it startled him. His heart ached to see her terrible anguish, but the thought rose up darkly in his heart— was she innocent or was she terribly guilty?

"I give you one more chance," he said hoarsely. "Will you tell me all —clear up this horrible mystery—or must we part?"

She stretched out her trembling arms to him and caught his hand in hers.

"Do not turn from me, Aleck!" she moaned. "Better kill me instead. I cannot live without you!"

She raised her eyes with a piteous pathos in them that would have touched a heart of stone.

There was no relenting in those proud eyes, no softening of the haughty lips; he was as stern as a judge who unwillingly administers justice.

Many women have knelt upon the gibbet, and have suffered less with the bright knife suspended over their heads than she endured in that hour.

"You must not leave me, Aleck!" she prayed. "Spare me the shame and disgrace of that. Spare me because I am so young, and the disgrace would kill me!" she repeated with dry, burning lips. "Before you were out of the sound of my voice I should fall down dead. For God's sake, save me!"

He was only human, this stern, proud man, and her anguish touched him keenly.

A sudden thought came to him; he paced hastily up and down the room a few moments, then turned to her abruptly.

"There is but one alternative," he said, slowly. "To save appearances, I will spare you the shame of desertion and the publicity of the divorce court, but on one condition."

"And that?" faltered Daisy, piteously.

"Is that we are to live as far apart —although under the same roof— as though the whole wide world separated us," he repeated. "Never more shall you be wife of mine until this galling and infamous mystery is cleared up. I can never again touch your hand, look upon your face without thinking of it."

"Aleck, my love!" she moaned, but did not appear to hear.

"This villa will still be your home and mine if you prefer having it so, and the terms on which we reside here are these: You can choose any suit of rooms that you prefer for your own use. I have mine. Unless we have visitors, it would be painful for us to meet at lunch or dinner. You can have what you want, at what hour you want, and I shall do the same. Our friends need never know of our estrangement. Before them we will be as we have been in the past to each other. When the door closes upon them we will go back to our new mode of life. I shall consider myself at perfect liberty to go and come when I like, staying away as long as I will. You have the same freedom."

He paused and looked at her.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organized in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, willl be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 356½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $950,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 35,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $2.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $5.89 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	286,319.88
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of..............................		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends ...		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.]

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—Go to Whiten when you want the best quality of photographs.

—The formal opening of the Liberal Committee rooms, Lindsay took place last night.

—The rain last night interfered with the regular march out of the 57th Regiment.

—A lady's bicycle, as good as new, for sale at a bargain. Apply at the Times Bookstore.

—Yesterday the wind blew up clouds of dust, greatly to the annoyance of everybody.

—The body of Paddy O'Donoghue, who was drowned in the Lindsay river on March 3rd, was rescued Monday afternoon.

—There was a break in the machinery of the Cement Works at Lakefield, which occasioned some loss. The damage was promptly repaired by the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Co.

—The Canadian General Electric Co. have purchased the old Upper Canada College grounds in Toronto and purpose erecting a building thereon for the exhibition of their varied manufactures.

—Mr. John Nugent has had his pretty residence on Brock street entirely repainted on the outside. It now shines like a bright star in the firmament of lovely homes in that district. Mr. Ralf Carton did the job, and, as usual, it is first class.

—Cards are out for the annual Olympic excursion, which will be pulled off this year on the first Thursday in June. The destination this year will be Burleigh Falls, where Mr. Darcy, the new proprietor, will provide the buttermilk as well as the other marvelations.

—The Men's Union of All Saints' church entertained the men of the church last night. Rev. Mr. Langfeldt, the popular rector of St. Luke's, Ashburnham, delivered an exceedingly interesting address on "Life in the German Army." A most enjoyable evening was spent.

—At the final meeting for this year of Mr. Jeffries' Reading Circle, held at the residence of Mr. T. W. Robinson, George street, on Monday evening, the leader and Sheriff Hall, vice-leader, were presented by the members with handsomely-bound copies of Oliphant's Makers of Florence and Makers of Venice and Carlisle's French Revolution, respectively.

—The Auburn Power Co. has purchased the large electric generator of the Belleville street railway. This will about treble the present direct output of current. The purchase indicates that the company is far from the death that some were inclined to expect. The generator will be brought hither and installed as soon as possible.

—Talking to the Provincial Board of Health in Toronto, Dr. Bryce was very severe on the doctors who, in their certificates, gave the cause of death as "heart failure." In the vigorous words of Dr. Bryce, "They use the term 'heart failure' to cover up their own ignorance, seeing no apparent cause." In England, he said, such returns would be refused. Heart failure there meant a mode of death, not a cause, and it should be the same, here.

—The Orillia Times mentions a Plymouth Rock egg measuring 8x6 1-2 inches. We'll take our esteem's word for it, but it's hard to swallow. Apparently the hens in the district are sacrificing quality and size to speed of production, and are turning out eggs so small that house-keepers would be justified in insisting that they be sold [illegible].

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—The Times had a pleasant call yesterday from Mr. Jos. J. Brignall, one of the staff of the C.P.R. Passenger Department, Toronto.

—We had the pleasure of a call yesterday from our old friend, Mr. John Whyte, of Campbellford, who spent the day in town. He leaves this morning for a week's visit to friends in Toronto.

There will be quite a colony of Peterborough ladies at Clifton Springs, N.Y., in a few days. Mrs. J. R. Stratton and Miss Alberta Gooding have been sojourning there for a fortnight or more. In a day or two they will be joined by Mrs. R. R. Hall, Mrs. W. G. Ferguson, Mrs. R. S. Davidson and others.

—Mr. J. Galvin and his mother departed on the early C.P.R. for Sault Ste Marie Michigan, where they will remain to enjoy the pleasant breezes of Lake Superior during the hot weather. Mr. Galvin has spent two seasons in the vicinity of the Soo and he highly recommends it as a summer resort. Mr. Fred Garden has taken charge of the local branch of the International Correspondence Employment Association during Mr. Galvin's absence, and they will be closely connected by correspondence through their daily report system which is attaining such fame in securing positions all over the Dominion. Mr. Galvin promises a letter to the local press, which will contain a complete report on the demand for common and skilled labor in the vicinity of the Soo

Married in Toronto

The marriage took place at Bond street Congregational church, Toronto yesterday of Miss Sarah Britton, fourth daughter of Mr. John Britton, Peterborough to Mr. E. C. Southerland, Toronto. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. J. S. Gordon.

Mr. Burnett's Lecture

The lecture delivered last night in the Y.M.C.A., before the Fortnightly Club, was fairly well attended, considering the wet weather. It proved to be exceedingly interesting and instructive, and well repaid those who were fortunate enough to attend. At the conclusion of the lecture the usual vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Burnett.

OBITUARY

Death of Mr. Elias Thompson, a Well Known Citizen

Yesterday morning another of our old and honored citizens passed away, in the person of Mr. Elias Thompson, at the age of 67 years. The deceased was born in Antrim County, Ireland, in 1835. He came to Canada in 1849, and settled in Peterborough, where he resided ever since. He carried on an extensive lumbering business, which he conducted successfully for many years.

In 1859 Mr. Thompson married Miss Esther Parnell, daughter of the late Richard Parnell, who, with a family of five children, are left to mourn his death. The sons are R. H., H. L., and Arthur. The daughters are Mrs. R. E. McKee, Smith, and Miss Birdie, at home. The deceased was a Methodist in religion, and was greatly esteemed by all who knew him. A kind and indulgent father and husband, as well as a warm friend, he will be sadly missed. The funeral will take place to-morrow, Thursday, afternoon, from the family residence, No. 601 Water street, at 3 o'clock, to the Little Lake cemetery.

THE LATE MR. ROSEBOROUGH

The death occurred in Smith on Monday of William S. Roseborough, a well known farmer of that township. The deceased has been ailing for upwards of seven months and his death was not unexpected. The deceased was 61 years of age and was a native of Smith, being the son of the late James Roseborough. He has lived in Smith, on lot 16, con. 4, all his life and was highly respected by a wide circle of friends. He married Sarah Innis, daughter of the late Mr. Innis, of Norwood, who together with one daughter survives him. The following are brothers of the deceased: Messrs. Daniel, of town; Andrew, of McGregor, Man.; John, of Man.; Samuel, of British Columbia; and Alex., of Smith. Sisters of the deceased are: Mrs J. Northey and Mrs. Thomas Diver, of Smith; Mrs. Samuel Sherin, Lakefield; Mrs. James Bell, of Glenelg, Grey County; Mrs. George Preston, Man., and Mrs. J. G. Armstrong, Smith.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock to Lakefield cemetery.

Items of News

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 30.—Lord Kelvin, the eminent scientist, visited Niagara Falls to-day. Lord Kelvin was greatly interested in the power development of the falls since the inception of the scheme, for he was one of the men consulted preliminary to the work of harnessing the waterfall. At one of the plants he saw, to his delight a process whereby nitric acid is made from the air. The subject of very high temperature attained at Niagara interested Lord Kelvin. "There is practically no limit to the temperature the electric furnace can get." After a pause he said when told of the process whereby almost valueless carbon was turned into valuable graphite: "It ought to be easy to manufacture the diamond."

London, April 30.—The mysterious Italian movements which have been so persistently asserted and denied as directed against Tripoli are now explained in despatches from Rome. They have been due to the discovery of what is practically a plot, it is said, to proclaim a British protectorate over the Tripolitan hinterland.

Portraits of King Edward and small British flags were, it is alleged, distributed by wholesale in towns and villages all through the hinterland, and negotiations were opened by the British agents with the saintly Senousis, whose influence is so great over the African Mahommedans that the Sultan would pay a good deal, even in these hard times, for his holy head.

When Italy remonstrated against these unbrotherly proceedings the British government, so the story goes, placed them to the credit of their own zealous agents in Egypt and entirely repudiated the latter.

The incident is closed, but it has left considerable uneasiness, both in Rome and Constantinople, which France is doing its best to increase.

Niagara Falls, April 28 — John S. Clark, a negro employed as a powder-monkey by Contractor Anthony C. Douglas, on Friday night discovered a plot to dynamite the tunnel being constructed for the Canadian Niagara Power Company, and by his discovery 36 men were saved from possible death and entombment. The Canadian Niagara Power Company is developing electric energy, and is popularly supposed to be working in affiliation with the Cataract Construction Company at Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Clark discovered that the electric wires used for the purpose of discharging blasts had been diverted to a shelf where 75 pounds of the explosive was kept. The tunnel is being cut 165 ft. below the surface of the earth, and averages 20 feet in diameter, and is supported strongly by beams and heavy timbers. The dynamite was stored about 40 yards from the shaft and hoist for carrying the men up and down. Four gangs of men of 17 men to each gang were used in the work, which goes on day and night. Clark had charge of the dynamite, and on Friday night about 7, when he went to see if he had enough to last over night, noticed a stick of dynamite had been taken from a box and dropped between two cases. Looking closer, Clark saw a wire attached and leading to the main wire which discharged the blasts.

The blast was practically ready to be fired, and if the discovery had been made five minutes later a terrible tragedy would undoubtedly have been recorded. The tunnel and machinery would have been thrown into chaos, and those who were not killed outright would have had a poor show of rescue in days, or perhaps weeks. Had the outrage have been successfully carried out, besides the great loss of life, Contractor Douglas of Niagara Falls, N.Y., would have suffered great financial loss.

Mr. Douglas is president of the Niagara Falls, N.Y., Council, and seems to think that Clark planned the scheme in order to make a hero of himself in the eyes of the men. There is little talk of Fenian agency. The workmen come from many nationalities, and had the charge exploded, blacks and whites would have been included in the catastrophe.

The electric light was diverted to the stored dynamite between 6 and 7.30 on Friday afternoon, and although at a time when the hoist would not be used, John Davis, a walking boss, recalls the fact that he heard it going down the shaft about this time.

Chief Maine, of Niagara Falls, is on the case, assisted by Chief Wilcox of the Queen Victoria Park police.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied as to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in affecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

BOERS WILL AT LAST BE FREE

Late Chaplain of Transvaal Congress Tells Americans This

AN APPEAL FOR BOER CAUSE

"Peace Talk Manufactured to Aid in Getting Recruits in England."—So Says This "Divine" Humbug and Liar

Special to the Times.

Milwaukee, Wis., May 1.—Rev. Herman D. Brockhuyzen, late chaplain of the Transvaal congress, made an impassioned appeal for the Boer cause before 1,150 Milwaukee people at the Exposition building last night.

In the course of his remarks the speaker said,—

"All this talk about peace in South Africa is manufactured for the purpose of getting recruits and money in England. It will end with the Boers fighting harder than ever. We will fight on to the happy end for the liberty of all South Africa, and you will live to see it free under its own flag."

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Great Britain and imploring the government of the United States to maintain its sense of justice and fair play, as shown in its intervention in similar conditions on the island of Cuba, and presently to take the initiative in an endeavor to secure the united action of all nations to stop this unholy mode of warfare.

A liberal collection was taken up.

Items of Interest

WILHELMINA'S CONDITION

The Hague, April 30—The morning bulletin issued from Castle Loo, regarding the condition of Queen Wilhelmina, says she passed a quiet night and that the feverless periods were more frequent.

Both Chambers of the States General, on receipt of to-day's bulletin from Castle Loo, charged their Presidents to convey to the Queen an expression of joy at the glad news of Her Majesty's improvement.

RUSSIAN REFORM

St. Petersburg, April 30—There are reports in circulation to the effect that the Czar will shortly issue a rescript giving Russia a constitution similar to the scheme for administrative reform drawn up by the late General Loris-Melikoff, when he was Minister of the Interior, and which was sanctioned by the late Czar Alexander II some six months before his assassination, which occurred on March 13, 1881.

CAUGHT THE SMUGGLERS

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 30—For years past tailors in town and at Niagara Falls South have been doing a big business with Niagara Falls, N.Y., men. The clothes were made here and smuggled across the river. On Saturday Officers Lewis, Deitrich and O'Meara of the United States Secret Service, seized a horse and rig and three men engaged in smuggling clothes across for P. G. Latour, the Clifton avenue tailor. This will put a damper on the business.

A FAKIR EXPOSED.

London, April 30.— Lord Cromer in his annual report on the Soudan says—

"In February a certain Ali Abdul-Kerim gave himself out to be the true Mahdi. This man had been known for some time to be eccentric, and, being gifted with a certain amount of 'legerdemain,' he was able to pass off as miracles a few tricks on an ever-ready and easily gullible crowd. He collected a small following. His removal, however, to Halfa and his inability to free himself from a Government gaol soon dispersed the belief in him."

REMNANTS OF MAHDISM.

London, April 30.—Lord Cromer's annual report regarding the condition of affairs in the Soudan says:—"The small remnants of the Dervishes who proceeded after the death of the Khalifa to Dar Kara are stated to be still in that neighborhood, where they live by plundering and brigandage. They are so far away as to be of little consequence, and will probably in time become merged with the local inhabitants. Sir Rudolf von Slatin, who is now travelling in Western Bahr el Ghazal, will endeavor to communicate with the leader, and extend to him the following pardon which he is understood to be seeking.

"There may be a little trouble in another direction:—

"A few tribes—notably the Gemilab, inhabiting the mountainous districts south west of Suakin, the Kababish to the west of Omdurman, and the Kenana, in the Sennar Province, between the Blue and White Niles, all of these being powerful and wealthy tribes—have shown considerable reluctance to comply with the moderate demands of the Government and it may be necessary, sooner or later, to resort to measures which will oblige them to understand that the authority and orders of the Government must be respected."

A CLEVER BRITISH STROKE.

London, April 30.—The future role which Wei-hai-wei is to play in the Far East is attracting great attention in both China and Japan; but there seems, from the comments of some of the papers, to be a belief that the colony is merely in a state of transition, and that any commercial development might be proved, by subsequent events, to be ill-judged. The real significance of Wei-hai-wei's future is guarded in Japan. The Kobe Herald remarks:—

"Without doubt the new move is of importance. The scheme, as we take it, is to introduce Wei-hai-wei to the commercial interests of the Far East as the most desirable distributing or trans-shipping centre for North China and Manchuria.

"The scheme, therefore, is a clever stroke at both Japan and Russia."

HOMER'S ISLAND DISCOVERED.

London, April 30.—Dr. Dorfield, the director of the German Archaeological Institute here, acting on his conjecture that Homer's Island of Ithaca, of which Odysseus was King, was that now known as Santa Maura (Leucadia), which lies to the north of Thiaki, has been making excavations there. He believes that some of the remains he has already discovered, including objects of art and traces of monuments and aqueducts, dated from the Homeric epoch and confirm his theory. Dr. Dorpfield is expected at Athens during the week, when he will communicate the result of his discoveries.

112 YEARS OLD

Glens Falls, N.Y., April 29 — John Morris of West Day, Saratoga county, thinks he is the oldest man in the State. He was born in Canada, and while he thinks it was in 1790, he has no way of proving it. He lives on a small farm with his wife, who is almost a centenarian. He has lived in the town for many years, and when the oldest men in Day were boys Morris was an old man. He still does more or less work on his farm, is an inveterate user of tobacco, but draws the line at liquors.

ATTACKED A RESCUE WORKER

Portland, Ore., April 30—Miss Faith Stewart, a rescue worker among the denizens of Portland's slums, is in a dying condition at her home, as the result of an assault made upon her Sunday night by five men. Several dive-keepers are known to be bitter against Miss Stewart, as she had induced a number of girls to leave their places.

Memory of Heroes Honored

Special to the Times.

Ephrata, Pa., May 1.—On Zion's Hill, where are buried 200 Revolutionary heroes who died at the Ephrata cloister hospital from wounds received at the battle of Brandywine, there will be unveiled to-day, in the presence of patriotic thousands, a handsome monument in commemoration of their valor. The unveiling will be carried out with interesting ceremonies, civilians, military and office holders uniting to make it a gala day never to be forgotten. The principal oration will be delivered by Ex-Governor Robert E. Pattison, and other addresses were made by General John E. Roller, Colonel J. A. Southgate and Congressman J. A. Stober.

McKAY CONSULTS QUIRK'S SPIRIT

The Brantford Murdered Man Himself Tells the Story

A FUNNY YARN IN WINDSOR.

A Gold Cure Manager Says Spirit Did Not Presume to Know the Name of the Murderer.

Windsor, April 30 — Herb. McKay, manager of the Munro Gold Cure Institute on Pitt street, makes the rather startling statement that he has held communication with the spirit of Jim Quirk, the victim of the mysterious murder in Brantford, and that in that interview the spirit of the dead man revealed to him (McKay) the manner of his killing.

McKay has for some time past been attending the spiritualistic seances in Detroit, and has become greatly interested in the study of the occult art. During one of the seances recently, McKay asked the medium to introduce him to the spirit of James Quirk. According to McKay's testimony, Quirk's spirit gave the following account of the experiences met with by its earthly tabernacle before body and spirit were separated by the hand of the assassin:

"On the night I was killed," said Quirk's spirit, "I had occasion to go out to the barn, a thing I didn't very often do, for I am rather nervous at night. I had no sooner got inside than a man came out of the shadow.

"'What are you doing here?' I asked.

"'You will soon find out,' he replied, and with that he struck me over the head with a hatchet. I fell to the floor and then the murderer again struck me several times on the head with the instrument."

Mr. McKay says that in this remarkable interview the spirit did not presume to know the identity of the murderer. All it could tell was the fact that he had met the man in the barn and that death was inflicted in the manner described. McKay says, though, that just before the spirit took its departure it said:

"However, it's all right, I guess; I got what I deserved."

FRED LEE RICE ON TRIAL

Charged with the Murder of County Constable Boyd

Toronto, April 30.

The second trial of Fred Lee Rice for the murder of Constable William Boyd, who was shot to death while conveying Rice, Rutledge and Jones to jail last year, was commenced in the Court of Appeal this morning before Chief Justice Armour and Justices Osler, Maclennan, Moss and Garrow.

At the previous trial before Mr. Justice Falconbridge the prisoner was arraigned on two charges, first, that of murder, and, secondly, conspiracy to murder. On the first count the jury brought in a verdict of "Not guilty," and on the second the prisoner was found guilty. Mr. T. C. Robinette, counsel for Rice, took objection to the verdict, and demanded the submission of a stated case to the Court of Appeal, which was accordingly done by Mr. Justice Falconbridge.

WAS THERE A CONSPIRACY?

In opening the case this morning Mr. Robinette claimed that there was no evidence to show that there had been conspiracy or common design between Rice, Rutledge and Jones up to the time that the parcel containing the revolvers with which the shooting was done was thrown into the carriage. He could only be shown to be guilty of conspiracy if at the moment the parcel was thrown into the carriage he had made up his mind, with his companions, to escape, and Mr. Robinette held that this was not so.

THE FATAL SHOT

As to who fired the fatal shot, the evidence showed that he had not secured possession of one of the revolvers until after the second shot had been fired, and had not fired until he had left the carriage. Consequently he was not the person who killed Boyd. Mr. Robinette said that from the evidence given by Rice the affair had passed too quickly to allow of any collusion between Rice and his comrades. There was absolutely no evidence of common design.

JUDGE DIFFERS

Chief Justice Armour was inclined to take a different view, and pointed out that the circumstance of the pistols being thrown into the carriage and each prisoner grabbing for one seemed to be evidence of common design.

Mr. Robinette replied that one might guess design, to which the Chief Justice made answer that it was more than guessing. Rice having taken a pistol, and Rutledge having taken a pistol, he wished to know if they were not actuated by common design.

Mr. Robinette adhered to the view that there was no collusion, and Mr. Justice Maclennan asked why they wanted the pistols.

"That," replied Mr. Robinette, "is the question." Continuing, he said that there was nothing to show that they knew what was in the parcel.

"But," said the Chief Justice, "Rutledge opened the parcel at once, and passed a pistol over to Rice."

Mr. Robinette denied that this was so. Rutledge had, according to Rice's evidence, passed the pistol to Jones, and it was only after the second shot had been fired, and Jones had been hit by Boyd, that the former had handed his weapon over to Rice.

STEWART REFUTED RICE.

Mr. Justice Moss pointed out that Rice's evidence on this point was contradicted by Constable Stewart's statement, and that the jury had accepted the evidence of the latter.

Mr. Robinette demurred at this, and still insisted that there was nothing to prove that Rice was assisting Rutledge to escape. He thought of escaping himself, and there was the further fact that Rutledge had got out of the carriage first, and had dragged the others after him. All that happened must have been in a flash, far too rapidly to permit of the prisoner coming to any understanding with the others. It had been shown that there was no common design previous to the incident of the parcel, and he claimed that it was impossible that there should be any afterwards. There was no denial that Rice had made up his mind to escape, but his counsel held that he had taken the revolver mechanically without any clear idea of what he was to do with it, and that his plan for escape had been formed independently, and after he had got out of the cab.

The case is being continued this afternoon, and after Mr. Robinette has presented his side, Deputy Attorney-General Cartwright will give the case for the Crown.

A PROPOSED TEST WELL

Letter From Mr. Joseph Harvey, the Oil Expert

He Proposes to Sink Test Well in Peterboro for Coal oil or Natural Gas—or Both—The Matter Referred to the Mayor

Last fall Mr. Joseph Harvey, of Frazer & Harvey, contractors, Peterborough, was in town looking over the ground to see what the prospects were for sinking a test well for natural gas or coal oil. He visited the lift lock, where pockets of natural gas had been struck during the excavation there. He was persuaded that natural gas exists here, but whether or not in paying quantities, he could not say. This could only be ascertained by the sinking of a test well. Mr. Harvey now writes the Times as follows:

To the Editor of The Times,

Dear Sir.—I have not heard anything from you since Mr. Frazer was up to see you last November, so I suppose you must have given up the idea of sinking a test well in Peterborough. I have been over the ground most of the way from Port Hope to Collingwood, this spring, and I am afraid that Peterborough is a little too far to the east, still it may be that you are in the right place as you have the same amount of Trenton in Peterborough as they have at Collingwood, and they have some very nice little gas wells there. I was over the ground from Collingwood to Beaton last week. We got no permanent supply of gas in paying quantities at Port Hope on account of the lime-stone there being too open, and the gas is escaping instead of accumulating in the rock. I explained that to them when I first went to Port Hope, but I was in hopes that there would be a strata of close rock that would confine the gas at the 80 ft. level.

Now, the reason I write you is this. I have a light plant at Garden Hill that would do the work at Peterborough nicely. We were sinking some water wells there, and we have plenty of casing there, so if you people want a test well I could do it at a small cost. I will go to Peterborough myself to do the work, and will furnish all the casing needed for the work for $400, and will go as deep as the granite if there is no gas in paying quantities before going that far.

We are so close to you now that I would like to make the test before we take the plant away, and we have the necessary amount of casing with us which we might not have at some other time. The cost of a test does not amount to very much, and it would be well to find out if there was any gas below the town.

I will be in Peterborough for a few days and would be pleased to hear from you before leaving.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH HARVEY.

The matter has been handed over to Mayor Deane, who will no doubt take some action.

CROWNING SERVICE APPROVED BY KING

Royal Pair to be Welcomed at Abbey by King's Scholars

THE REGULATIONS AS AMENDED

How the King and Queen are to Receive the Crown of Great Briten and Ireland

Special to the Times.

London, May 1.—The form of the coronation service, as finally amended and approved by the King, was announced to-day. It consists of twenty-six distinct sections.

The King and Queen will enter the great west door of Westminster Abbey, to which a large canopied approach is already being erected. They will be welcomed by the shouts of the King's scholars of Westminster School and by the anthem "I was glad when they said unto me. We will go to the house of the Lord."

ROYAL PAIR WILL KNEEL.

Instead of going direct to their thrones the royal pair will kneel in private prayer on footstools in front of their chairs. Then the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord High Chancellor, the Lord Great Chamberlain and the Garter King of Arms, each in turn, will formally present the King, the lords carrying the regalia will step up and the Dean of Westminster will place the regalia on the altar.

The abbreviated Litany and part of the communion service will follow.

Then the Archbishop will recite the Nicene Creed and the Bishop of London will preach a short sermon.

Just before the sermon the King, who up to that stage of the ceremony will have been uncovered, will put on a cap of crimson velvet trimmed with ermine.

OATH-TAKING AND ANOINTING.

Then comes the oath-taking, after which the King will be anointed.

Then the King's cap and crimson robe will be removed and four Garter Knights will hold over him a rich pall of silk or cloth-of-gold, the Dean of Westminster will pour holy oil into a spoon and the Archbishop of Canterbury will anoint the King, making the sign of the cross on the top of His Majesty's head, thus consecrating him "King over this people, whom the Lord your God hath given you to rule and govern."

The King will then kneel and the Dean of Westminster will invest him with the super tunica.

Next will come the ceremonies which caused so much discussion, including the presentation of the sword of state, the standards and the spurs, and then the orb will be placed in the King's right hand, he will again be divested of the crimson robe and will be enveloped in a purple robe of state, and the Archbishop of Canterbury will give the sceptre to the King, while the Lord of the Manor of Worksop supports the King's right hand and a ring is placed on His Majesty's fourth finger.

THE CROWNING.

Then will come the actual crowning. The Primate will take the crown from the altar and place it on King Edward's head, a fanfare of trumpets will be sounded and guns will fire salutes.

The Archbishop of Canterbury will next address the King, exhorting him to be strong and of good courage, so that he may receive the crown of righteousness; the peers will put on their coronets and, the presentation of the Bible having been made, the King will be enthroned by being led to the hitherto unoccupied throne. Another solemn admonition from the Archbishop of Canterbury will be followed by marks of homage from the archbishops, bishops and peers.

After this ceremony the Queen will be crowned. She will be anointed on the head, four peeresses holding a magnificent pall over her, the King will put a ring on her finger, the Archbishop of York will place the crown on her head and the sceptre and ivory rod and dove will be placed in her hands.

Prayers will be offered, the peeresses will put on their coronets and the service will end with the communion.

On leaving the Abbey their Majesties will go direct to Buckingham Palace.

BILLON DOLLAR TRUST

That is What American Packers Talk of Forming

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 30.—A billion dollar packing trust is among the possibilities if the United States Government should succeed in maintaining its contemplated injunction proceedings, says the Tribune. The prediction is made in La Salle Street official circles that the large packers who may be made defendants in the Federal Court will be forced formally to combine if the prosecution against them under the Sherman anti-trust law should be successful.

The combination would be formed along the lines followed by the United States Steel Corporation, and would be made to comprise practically all the beef packing companies in the country. In the formation of such a combination, continues the Tribune, all the powers now denied the packers, with one exception, could be legally exercised. The single exception, in the opinion of corporation lawyers, would be the adoption of an arbitrary and unreasonable schedule of prices.

Trial of Mrs. Hooks

Special to The Times.

Memphis, Tenn., April 30.—The case of Mrs. George Emma Hooks was called for trial in the criminal court to-day. The defendant is charged with the murder by poison of her husband, the late Cerro Gordo Hooks. The trial promises to be one of the most notable that has taken place here in recent years. The defense is represented by eminent counsel including George B. Peters, Major R. F. Wright and C. M. Bryan.

TOWN SWEPT BY A TORNADO

Six Dead and Forty or Fifty Injured at Glenrose—Quarter of a Million Loss

Houston, Texas, April 30—The small town of Glenrose, the county seat of Somerville county, has been nearly swept away by a tornado. As a result of the fearful windstorm six are known to be dead, and between forty and fifty persons are injured.

Glenrose is located on the Paluxy River, in a valley. The tornado came down the valley, sweeping everything before it. It struck the town in the business district, and about one-third of the stores were wrecked.

A hard rain succeeded the storm, and the stocks were ruined, damaging what had not been destroyed by the wind. The western portion of the residence section of the town was struck. Here were located most of the fine residences.

The frame houses were simply torn asunder and scattered. Their inmates had no warning of the impending calamity, and it was here that all the fatalities occurred. How many cannot be told until communication has been reopened. The residence of Mrs. Council, one of those wrecked, caught fire, and with two others was burned.

The property loss is roughly estimated at one-quarter of a million dollars. It may prove to be much greater when all the facts are known, for there are undoubtedly other sections which have been devastated up and down the river. It may be several days before the entire story of the disaster is known.

The town is cut off from wire communication, and all the facts have come from neighboring towns which have been reached by refugees who cannot tell all of the facts as they are in quest of assistance for their stricken people.

Glenrose had a population of about 800 people.

EASY TERMS WILL AID TO PEACE

Correspondent of the Times Says Great Britain Should be Lenient

Special to the Times

London, April 30—Mail advices from Pretoria to the Times urge the abandonment of the Englishman's cry for "unconditional surrender." The correspondent, who remarks that the vast majority of the Boers are now either prisoners, on parole, or inmates of burgher camps, also urges a broad-minded and generous conduct of South African affairs after peace is declared. He suggests that Great Britain on her own initiation promise representative government within five years, and in the meantime making Crown government easier and less restrictive every year.

IS SHE MRS. LUETGERT?

Police Believe They Have Found Wife of Dead Sausage Maker

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 30.—Mrs. Mary Robbins, who is believed by some to be Mrs. Adolph L. Luetgert, the supposed murdered wife of the sausage maker, was taken into custody last night by Detective Blais, because of the strong suspicion that attaches to her case. Mrs. Robbins had intended leaving the Alma Mott Home on Austin avenue, to which she was taken about six weeks ago, but the chain of circumstantial evidence seemed so strong to Attorney Lawrence Harmon, who defended Luetgert, and to a number of other persons interested, that a hurried conference was held and it was decided to hold the woman until further investigation was made.

The woman told apparently conflicting stories, but insisted that she is not Mrs. Luetgert.

Mr. Harmon asserts that he is more than ever convinced that she is Mrs. Luetgert, and Detective Blais also declared that he believes she is the widow of the sausage maker.

Boy's Body Found

Special to the Times.

Kingston, May 1.—The bodies of Martin and Babcock drowned at Sharbot Lake during last Wednesday's gale, have been found. Martin had an insurance of $1,000 on his life. He had recently made a payment that kept the policy effective until May 26. In a pocket was found a notification from the company about the next payment, and with it was a letter he had written in reply, notifying them of his intention to allow the policy to lapse. The insurance meantime is valid.

Notable Wedding in London

Special to The Times.

London, April 30.—A notable wedding to-day was that of Miss Violet Kerr, daughter of the late Mr. Charles W. R. Kerr and Mrs. Charles Kerr, of Hyde Park Square, and the Rev. Hon. Nigel Campbell, son of Earl and Countess Cawdor.

Second Class Fares Abolished

Special to the Times.

New York, May 1.—Second class passenger fares between New York and Chicago will be abolished to-day by action of the Trunk Line Passenger Committee. The reform is one for which efforts have been making for a long time. Hereafter the minimum rate is to be $18 via the Erie, Lehigh Valley, Lackawanna, Ontario & Western and the West Shore in connection with their connections at the Western termini. The standard lines are to charge $20.00.

Crushed to Death

Special to the Times.

Montreal, April 30.—Charles Hugron, 40 years of age, an employee of the Dominion Bridge Company of Lachine, was instantly killed in the works of the company at about 9 o'clock to-day. While engaged at work, by some means he became entangled in revolving machinery, and was crushed to death. The deceased was a hard-working and industrious man, and was very highly esteemed by his fellow-workers. He was married and leaves a widow and four small children. The coroner has been notified of the accident and will hold an inquest to-morrow afternoon at Lachine.

CHINESE LABOR FOR SOUTH AFRICA

The Chinese Merchants of Vancouver Embark for S. Africa

COOLIES ARE ON THE WAY

Two Hundred Arrive at Vancouver and will be Taken to South Africa Under Contract

Vancouver, B.C., April 30—A syndicate of Chinese merchants of Vancouver has entered into a speculation that connects the two ends of the earth. The plan is for the invasion of the labor market in South Africa. Several of the business men of Vancouver's Chinatown have decided to go into large operations in Johannesburg.

By the Empress of China two hundred Chinamen were brought over by the local syndicate and are now in the Dominion Government detention shed near the C.P.R. station. The Orientals come under contract to proceed to South Africa at once and to remain there for five years. A contract rate of wages is paid them, which is guaranteed by the Chinese Six Companies.

OPENINGS FOR CHINESE

When Johannesburg was taken by the British Government it was found that almost all the mines that had been in operation before the war had been abandoned, and in many places had caved in from want of care and rotting timber supports. The Kaffir laborers have become scattered, and there is a great demand for cheap employees. Now that things are in the control of the British in Johannesburg it is expected that the mines will be immediately reopened and worked, and that Chinese laborers will be in demand. To satisfy this expected demand, and also as a matter of speculation, the present bunch of coolies have been brought over. Should the venture be a profitable one, more will follow, and operations throughout the entire country be pushed forward. There is no Chinese restriction in the Transvaal country, and when the war is finally concluded, the director of the local syndicate believes that there will be an opening for Chinese labor of all kinds, laundrymen, market gardeners, underground men and every other kind.

READ BAD NOVELS

Carried a Pistol — Jury Took a Merciful View of Eric Sharpe's Offence

Kingston, April 30—The jury appointed to consider the death of Beatrice Holland, who was shot to death by young Eric Sharpe, a playmate, reached the conclusion that the cause of death was accidental homicide.

It is supposed that the lad pulled the revolver quickly more for the purpose of frightening the girl than anything else, and that it was discharged before he knew it. Others have the opinion that he did not know it was loaded. The revolver was found in pieces near the school, where the youngster had hidden it after the shooting.

The lad had been a reader of dime novels. The revolver was purchased for him in a second-hand store by an older lad named McDermott. In their verdict the jury called attention to the number of second-hand stores in the city, and advised licensing them and having a closer inspection. The Crown Attorney has the matter in hand.

Your Blood in May Must Produce True Vitality for Disease

Paine's Celery Compound

EXPELS ALL WINTER IMPURITIES AND POISONS FROM THE BLOOD AND BUILDS UP THE ENTIRE SYSTEM

True health can only be maintained by keeping the body free of acid and sluggish blood and morbid waste matters. The blood that is pumped through the heart to all parts of the body, carries nourishment and health, or poison and the seeds of death.

Close confinement in badly ventilated offices, stores and workshops during the winter months, has lowered the vitality of tens of thousands. Poisons and impurities have been implanted in the blood; these agents of death must be expelled, if health is maintained during the coming summer.

The month of May should be renovating and building-up time with the vast army of weak, debilitated and brokendown men women and young people.

If the work of purifying and vitalizing the blood be longer deferred, eruptions, blotches, sores, eczema, scrofula, erysipelas and other dangers are sure to be your portion.

Paine's Celery Compound meets successfully at this season all unhealthy conditions of the blood. It is the only medicine that can guarantee perfect purification of the vital fluid; that can give true nutriment to the nerves and tissues; that can bestow new life, vigor and strength for the enjoyment of summer or the prosecution of life's duties. Mr. D. McMahon, Peterborough, Ont. says:

"I have great pleasure in testifying to the fact that Paine's Celery Compound has caused a remarkable change in my condition. I was troubled with a very bad type of eczema on my face, and in patches over my body for four years; and was under treatment of three doctors at different periods. I had also tried other remedies, but all proved useless. At last I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and [illegible], as recommended on the label. The one bottle did me so much good that I bought five bottles more, and now am happy to say I am perfectly cured, and completely free from the troublesome disease."

WEATHER NOTES

Probs to-day—Fresh northwesterly winds, fair and cooler.

The general outlook in both provinces is for cool weather, and on the lakes the winds are likely to be northerly.

GIVE THE BOY LONG TROUSERS

If his legs deserve them. But spare the mother's feelings.—Give him long trousers that won't make him "A LITTLE OLD MAN." Trousers cut to grace the most ungainly age.

Dress him RIGHT and don't say, "Be careful of your clothes." If he is a lively boy, he will forget your instructions; if he is inclined to be quiet, or if he is not well, he will be in constant fear of soiling or tearing his suit, and he will lose the benefit of the healthful exercise.

DRESS HIM RIGHT AND GIVE HIM HIS FREEDOM

If you want to know how to dress him right, bring him to GOUGH'S and we will show you suits that will not show the dirt; suits that are stronger in the seams than the boy; suits that will wear "like iron" and every one of them handsome and stylish. In everything somebody must be first. We choose to be first in BOYS CLOTHING—FIRST IN STYLE—FIRST IN QUALITY—FIRST IN FAVOR. The larger the business, the smaller the cost of doing business.

HISTORICAL NOTES

A weird faculty of scenting the approach of death within forty-eight hours is claimed by a London physician, who accounts for it by the supersensitiveness of a sense of smell, which detects the commencement of mortification of the body while life still exists. The physician says the age of the patients, their cleanliness, hygienic surroundings, duration or nature of the illness have nothing whatever to do with the odor, which can only be described as an earthy smell, and which is apparently imperceptible to others.

The closing of British ports against Argentine cattle and sheep during the whole of last year and part of 1900 has been severely felt in Argentina. It has brought the export of sheep from the River Plate to the verge of extinction, as for every twenty sheep shipped alive in 1899, only one was shipped in 1901. In 1899 Argentina exported 312,-150 head of live cattle, and last year the number so exported was 119,189, or a little more than one-third. The number of live sheep exported in 1899 was 543,458, and last year only 25,746. The enforced restriction in the shipment of live animals has thus seriously crippled the trade of Argentina in one direction, but it has given an impetus to the frozen meat industry, the expansion of the frozen beef trade being greater than that of the frozen mutton trade.

It is to be feared that the Prohibs. are making a mess of their cause. By sending pledged men to Parliament something might be hoped for, but nothing can be hoped for from the Local Legislature beyond what they have the opportunity given them to ensure by a popular vote next December. By organizing in favor of that measure they might help to carry it, but by putting candidates in the political field they are wasting ammunition and discouraging the real work to come later. They forget that the referendum must be ended before it can be mended. The voting day is fixed, and the vote will be taken before there is another meeting of the Assembly.

A Tribute to Father Pat.

Writing from Rossland, B. C., in reference to a recent paragraph in "Saturday Night" on the career of the late "Father Pat," the Rev. Charles W. Hedley says that the main point of this remarkable ministry was not eccentricity, but a quite unique self-sacrifice in the service of any who needed him. "Unconventional he certainly was to a degree which might indeed, as you suggest, shock some strait-laced [illegible] in Toronto, but in an age of [illegible] and self-seeking he sought nothing [illegible] nor ease, but gave freely and utterly his time, comfort, strength, money, even at times the clothes off his back, to those in need. The best proof of the man is to be found in the warm regard with which his memory is treasured over the wide area in which he labored as a pioneer missionary. He did adapt himself as few could have done to the tone of the men among whom chiefly his work lay; but while seemingly indifferent to conventional details, he stood for the main elements of religion — faith in God the Father, the redemption, and the practical brotherhood of man—and he lived out his creed. The vices which Christ most sweepingly condemned were, as far as possible removed from his character, while on the other hand the pre-eminently Christian virtues were his to a remarkable degree. It is due to no mere eccentricity on his part that a memorial church is to be erected in Rossland, and that immediately on receipt of the news of his death a spontaneous movement was made to erect a public memorial, a movement which has been widely supported by hundreds [illegible]

The Friend of M'dame.

Here is a little story which was told me in the twilight, when we had finished our tea and still sat, cups in hand, loth to say good-bye. We were talking of a town far down east, near which there is a queer old gray stone house which has not been inhabited in twenty years.

Once, said the visitor, it was one of the prettiest places in Canada. A handsome young mistress ruled over it and over two of those old-fashioned loyal family servants who are now out of vogue. The master was a traveler, often away for a month at a stretch, but Jean and Jacqueline and "M'dame" were as happy and contented as three people could be. "M'dame" had her dogs, her horses, her pigeons, her books, her piano and her needlework. She was convent-bred, and had married from school—an orphan, who had never been to a dance or a play or a race meet, nor even a big dinner. The Cure dined sometimes at the Stone House, the doctor came to smoke a pipe with the master and play cards; the master invited no one else, and the mistress withdrew herself from the few gentlefolks who would have entertained her in the neighborhood. She was gently born and convent-bred—you know how that type can be happy in a seclusion that would madden you and me.

One day Jean and Jacqueline were made anxious by the delay in the return of m'dame from her drive. Long after the simple little dinner of fish and fruit was spoiled by waiting m'dame came home—was brought home, rather—by a strange gentleman who had startled her ponies in an unfrequented road, and after a time stopped their runaway career and taken them in hand. The gentleman came up to the verandah with m'dame, and because it was so warm, and he a bit tousled and dusty, Jean took him into the dressing-room of monsieur and brushed him, and Jacqueline made him a famous drink of fruit-syrup and ice, with a dash of something French and liqueurish.

"I shall look in to-morrow, if I may, to see that you are none the worse," they heard him say, as he lifted his hat in farewell to m'dame, and Jean said to Jacqueline: "He is not Canadian, nor of the Republic, but English," and Jacqueline nodded, "So it appears to me, my friend."

To-morrow and on many other morrows the stranger sat on the rose-wreathed verandah, Jean and Jacqueline always watchfully chaperoning their mistress. M'dame read and played and sang to the stranger, who was courtesy and compliment personified, and Jean and Jacqueline agreed that never had they served a finer fellow than this one whom they always mentioned as "the friend of m'dame."

Monsieur was away on a long trip, somewhere in that region vaguely known as the North-West, but just before he might be expected home the servants heard the Englishman regretting that home news had arrived calling him back to England.

So he went away, and monsieur duly returned. M'dame drove to meet him, and on the verandah, in the hearing of Jean and Jacqueline, detailed the story of the runaway, mentioned that the stranger had called, and had gone to England. It was strange how her story gave the impression that he had only called once! Jean and Jacqueline thought it strange, though neither one made any remark, each being secretly a bit ashamed of having noticed it at all.

It was about this time that Jacqueline began to be anxious about the health of m'dame, and ventured to give monsieur a few timid words in that connection.

"M'dame not strong?" cried monsieur heartily. "Nonsense!" Monsieur was a very big, very robust and very slow-witted person, it seems. Jean was also moved to remark that m'dame needed change of air, did not sleep well, ate less than formerly, and rarely sang those brilliant and somewhat "risque" French songs which monsieur preferred. Monsieur protested. "You and Jacqueline have absurd fancies," he said, testily.

And then he told m'dame, and she, wonderful to relate, grew suddenly furious at her two servitors, and rated them for officious meddlers. You could not picture the horror and chagrin of those two! M'dame, their cherished, petted, adored one, abusing them in wrathful tones! "Certainly she is ill," said Jean, with sorrowful pigheadedness. "We must be very, very good to her, until she is quite recovered."

When monsieur went away again, this time on a shorter trip, he asked m'dame to come with him. She promptly refused. "In this heat I should die of the railway train, smother in the country inns and fall ill of the viands," she said with a wave of her pretty hands, consigning the whole scheme to limbo.

"On the way to the train, monsieur met the physician. "I wish you'd take a look in occasionally at my wife," he said; "she's not ill, but silly old Jean and Jacqueline persist she is, and I think she is suffering from the heat."

"She has been driving about so much and walking too far. The English are such walkers, and that young man has made her walk too far every day in the sun," said the doctor testily, for he had not once been asked to smoke a pipe while monsieur was this time at home.

Monsieur was boarding his train at the instant and scarcely comprehended the remark. It went in at his ears and did not at once reach his brain. But when he had settled himself, some moments later, suddenly it arrived. He started. "Young Englishman—walking in the sun every day!" the physician's words jostled each other to the tack-a-tack of the train over the rails.

Monsieur turned a very deep red. "Good thing he's left the country!" he said in a very ugly tone, and then got redder yet, for his next neighbor "pardoned" and asked what monsieur had remarked.

"Oh, nothing! nothing!" he shortly replied, nervously unable to think of a tactful improvisation.

Meanwhile m'dame and Jean and Jacqueline were living in the old gray stone house, the same equable lives as before, only always m'dame growing more and more difficile, passing Jacqueline's tastiest soups and entrees and sitting much in her hammock under the arbor from which one could see a long way down the dusty country road.

The old French people grew very sober and silent. Even when Jacqueline went down the orchard to milk her Jersey cow, she quite forgot to sing and call Bijou, the poodle, to trot at her side. She prayed often to her good Saint Anne, and upbled her fat little savings bank and took out her coin and bought four big candles, which burned gaily the next Sunday before the altar of Bonne Ste. Anne in the church of the village.

One day m'dame came in from her drive a bit late, and as she pulled up her ponies at the gate she cried: "Jacqueline, ma bonne, hast thou a good dinner? I am hungry again!" And Jacqueline, hastily crushing herself and sending a sort of telegraphic "mouth" [illegible] to Bonne Ste. Anne, said as she [illegible] on the tea, with Devonshire cream, and then, in gratified tones, mentioned that m'dame's favorite potage was just ready to serve.

It was the old merry dinner-hour, when Jean and Jacqueline almost quarrelled about who should serve m'dame, though it was well known that it was to Jean to serve, to pour the wine, to enquire if the dinner was as m'dame liked, while Jacqueline stood humbly by the door until it was time to remove the different services.

Jacqueline was a bit bumptious when she remembered her four candles and the evident complaisance of Bonne Ste. Anne, and so far forgot herself as to march in with the roast chicken and actually place it herself before m'dame. Only the exceeding content of Jean with m'dame's appetite and spirits made him overlook this breach of privilege!

After dinner m'dame and Bijou strolled down the orchard as usual, and Jean gently reprimanded Jacqueline, who immediately demolished him with the revelation of the four candles and the complaisance of Bonne Ste. Anne.

Then Jacqueline trotted busily down the orchard with a little shawl, for m'dame had gone out with her beautiful shoulders bare. She, good Jacqueline, paused at the prettiest of pictures, m'dame reading a letter, Bijou sitting up before her, begging; then m'dame kissing the senseless sheets of paper and crushing them to her bosom and crying: "He comes, Bijou, my little one! Only you must know it! He comes! He cannot leave us, Bijou!"

Jacqueline came forward all smiles. "A little shawl, m'dame," she said, archly. "Monsieur will not be pleased to find m'dame with a cold," then shrank back from her flushed and frowning mistress. In one instant the letter was in m'dame's pocket and she had recovered herself.

"Some day, Jacqueline, you will frighten me to death. Don't follow me about, my good soul!" she said quickly. "I am going in. I shall not need the little shawl, and you know I never take cold," and, like a flash, m'dame swept by, calling to Bijou to come in for his forgotten lump of sugar at once.

There was an envelope on the grass, which Jacqueline picked up. It was not addressed, and it was crushed and a little rubbed and dirty. The old woman dropped it as if it were hot.

"I have wasted my four candles," she sighed, as she went hurriedly back to her kitchen.

That night m'dame slept like an infant, as the anxious old woman assured herself by many visits to her bedside, but Jacqueline slept not at all. Instead she prayed, but not once to Bonne Ste. Anne.

For several days m'dame came home from drives or walks in famous appetite and spirits. Jean chortled, and teased his glum companion, enquiring if she begrudged the four candles now, and being overcome by her fierce rejoinder that she did.

At last one evening Jacqueline's forebodings were realized; the rustic gate swung on its hinges with a bang, and the tall form of the friend of m'dame came to the verandah. Jacqueline stood behind the shutters and remarked the meeting. M'dame was neither flurried nor surprised. Indeed, she barely held out her hand, but Jacqueline could see how her whole frame trembled.

The old woman hurried out to the kitchen garden, where Jean was picking some herbs for drying.

"See here!" said she, explosively. "This will not do. Here is that cursed Englishman back again!"

Jean dropped his tray of herbs. "Where?" he gasped.

"But there on the verandah. What must be done?"

"Calm thyself, good Jacqueline. I have not been kind with thee lately. Is it no new thing, this idea of thine?" Jean's voice was trembling with confusion and distress.

"New! New! And I vowing candles to Ste. Anne and spending one whole night on my knees, while thou in bed snored and snored! It is this cursed Englishman, only him! She was so content and happy here. He has ruined us all!"

Jean put his hand over her mouth. "Shut up! you are dreaming!" he said, fiercely.

"Oh, am I, indeed? Well, one awakes! Let me tell you—" and in a torrent of whispers she told of the letter, the changed spirits and the words to Bijou. "Now, isn't this too much for us?" she cried between sobs.

"If only monsieur were here!" said Jean distractedly. A heavy hand fell on his shoulder.

"Well, my good Jean, he is here," and so was he, in traveling dust-coat and valise, having come up between the ranks of vegetables and herbs from the back gate. "Don't be frightened, you two. You, at least, need not fear," said monsieur, kindly. "I gather from you, good woman, that the serpent has entered my Eden. Well, I shall put the serpent out. It will not be a mighty task, never fear. Jacqueline, will you very quietly give me a biscuit and a glass of wine, out here?—as quickly and as quietly as you can—not to disturb m'dame. Jean, take my valise into your own room and return here to me directly."

Monsieur sat down on a rustic bench amid the vegetables and herbs, while Jean and Jacqueline stole into the house.

"I shall tell m'dame," said Jean, "if monsieur shoots me for it."

"You will do as you like," said Jacqueline, rooting in her biscuit-box. "I know enough to obey." Jean hung his head and softly mounted to his own chamber with the valise and coat.

Monsieur drank two glasses of wine and ate a biscuit.

"I am going out as I came, and shall meet the serpent outside paradise," said monsieur. "Unless m'dame rings for you, you will remain here, you two." Then he went back down the narrow path between the vegetables.

"Hold my hand, Jean!" said Jacqueline in a shrill child's voice.

"I am sore afraid, too!" sighed Jean.

Outside on the dusty road monsieur paced to and fro. Presently, an hour or so later, the rustic gate swung back and two figures came out.

"You will come with me to-morrow?" said the strong English voice. "Promise me!" Then monsieur listened as one listens to the nails driven in his scaffold.

"Not to-morrow," said m'dame, pleadingly. "It is not possible!"

"But the ship sails next day, beloved, and if he returns." M'dame slipped inside the gate, trembling, warned by some psychic current, who knows? and faltered:

"I cannot go to-morrow! I must think. I will tell you in the morning, at the old place, when I can go," and then her white dress and pale face flitted under the trees, up the verandah steps and into the shadows.

In a moment her bell tinkled and Jacqueline's voice was heard crying, "A l'instant, m'dame!"

The Englishman laughed.

"Cursed French tricks," he said, loudly. "I've a good mind to sail without her."

Monsieur strolled down the road; the Englishman stared at him curiously.

"Bonsoir, monsieur! Could you oblige me with a light?" said monsieur. The Englishman handed him a match-box.

ONE WOMAN

With two faces; one face bright with health, the other face pinched and drawn by illness. Many a woman can take the portrait of herself made but a few years ago, and holding it by her face in the mirror realize a similar change.

Behind this change in form and feature is always disease, and generally disease which affects the womanly organism. The backache and bearing-down pains put a heavy strain on the nervous system. There is loss of sleep, lack of appetite, and, as a natural result, loss of strength and flesh.

Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures diseases of the womanly organs. It establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"Words cannot tell what I suffered for thirteen years with womb trouble and dragging-down pains through my hips and back," writes Mrs. John Dickson, of Grenfell, Assiniboia Dist., N.W. Ter. "I can't describe the misery it was to be on my feet long at a time. I could not eat nor sleep. Often I wished to die. Then I saw Dr. Pierce's medicines advertised and thought I would try them. Had not taken one bottle till I was feeling well. After I had taken five bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' I was like a new woman. Could eat and sleep and do all my own work. I would entreat of any lady suffering from female weakness to give Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription a fair trial, for I know the benefit she will receive."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure biliousness and sick headache.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's Tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvellous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS, CANADA

WELLAND CANAL

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sealed Tenders addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for substructure of Bridge," will be delivered at this office until 16 o'clock on Monday 5th May, 1902, for the substructure of the new Bridge at Marlatt's Crossing of the old Welland Canal.

Plans and specifications of the work may be seen on and after Wednesday, 23rd, April, 1902, at the office of the Superintending Engineer of the Welland Canal, St. Catharines where forms of tender may be obtained.

In the case of firms there must be attached to the tender the actual signatures of the full name, of the nature of the occupation, and residence of each member of the same, and further, an accepted bank check for the sum of $500 must accompany the tender. This accepted check must be endorsed over to the Honorable the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines to enter into contract for the work at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The accepted check thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

L. K. JONES,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 23rd April, 1902.

Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the Department will not be paid for it.

For the Farmer.

Poultry Ailments and Remedies.

For Roup—Separate the sick from the well, put former in warm, dry quarters, inject camphorated sweet oil into their nostrils and throat. Give fresh water and nourishing food.

For frosted wattles or combs, prepare a salve of vaseline (one pound), spirits of turpentine, kerosene, oil of tar, and oil of sassafras, one spoonful each.

To prevent egg eating in fowls, make a paste of flour, red pepper, mustard and water; put into some empty egg shells, and place them where the hens will find them. One dose is enough.

For feather-pulled fowls, make an ointment of lard and sulphur, and rub on the bare spots if the feathers have come out because of parasites. There is no "positive cure" for fowls that pull feathers except the hatchet applied to the neck.

What is frequently supposed to be cholera is nothing more or less than indigestion. It may be caused by feeding too concentrated feeds and lack of grit and the drinking of impure water. Sharp grit is a necessity, and oyster shells furnish it.

Leg weakness is brought about largely by an unnatural forcing system. It is sometimes caused by improper feeding, lack of exercise, lack of variety in foods, dampness and cold. The converse of all this is the remedy.

Colds are prevalent in fowls at this time of year. Coughing, sneezing and watery eyes and nostrils are sure indications. A simple cold can be dealt with effectually by putting the fowl in a warm place, and giving small doses of castor oil, say a scant teaspoonful. Canker is the worst form of cold or roup. Give water to drink into which a few drops of a solution of copperas has been put. Give no hard grain. A real case of roup is incurable, and the fowl might as well be killed first as last. It doesn't pay to doctor it unless worth its weight in gold. —Agricola.

City Editor—Why do you say, "he was run into the police station, puffing and blowing?" "Puffing" and "blowing" are synonymous.

Reporter—Not at all. There's a vast difference, for instance, between puffing a man up and blowing him up.—Catholic Standard and Times.

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE,

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.

WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the color scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD
WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

Give the Cows Sunlight.

The one thing that we think quite as important to them as either fresh air or exercise is that of which they are most frequently deprived in the old-fashioned stables of those who believe in having them out of doors during the day, and it may be that it is so necessary to their well-being that a few hours' outing may do them good enough to counterbalance the injury done by being out in the cold.

Sunlight is as necessary to the thrifty and healthy growth of animals as of plants. Every stable or place where they are kept should be well lighted upon the south side, not only by having plenty of glass, but that glass kept clean enough to allow the sun to penetrate it freely. We have seen glass so opaque with cobwebs and dirt as to admit only enough light to allow one to grope his way about in semi-darkness. The "dim religious light" of the ancient and some modern churches is not good enough for a barn. We do not care for blue glass or other stained glass, but want a clear, clean, transparent glass, that will let in the full rays of the sun. Even double sashes of glass now cost but little more for the space they occupy than the siding and painted clapboards, or a single sash with a curtain to shut out the cold at night.

Not every one can afford new barns with the modern improvements, but many old ones could be so changed at small expense as to make the stables much warmer and lighter, and when this is done they will be found a better place for dairy cows than the barnyard when the temperature is below freezing or when there is a cold wind or rain.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Curious Bits of News.

Jeanne de Villeneuve has been appointed secretary of the French consulate in New York. This, it is believed, is the first appointment of a woman in the consular service. Mlle. Villeneuve is only twenty-five years old, and belongs to an old family of Provence.

McKeesport, Pennsylvania, has a bookless library. The fine stone building was erected with the $50,000 Andrew Carnegie donated, but the entire donation was used to build the library, as the directors expected Mr. Carnegie would give more. He has declined to do this, and the board has no money to buy books.

The mountains end a greater number of lives every year than is generally supposed. An official report states that in 1901, in Switzerland alone, accidents to mountain-climbers amounted to 118, and that death occurred in all of these. This figure is double that of 1900, and represents the highest total that has hitherto been recorded.

At Uelzen, in Luneberg, the authorities have passed a by-law which is more popular with the fair than the sterner sex. Husbands must be home by eleven o'clock. A fine equal to ten shillings is the penalty for infringing this regulation, half of which goes to the person—presumably the wife—who brings and proves the accusation.

One of the eccentricities of the late Duke of Portland was to subscribe for all the ordinary newspapers and magazines of the day and have them wholebound in beautiful crushed morocco coats of many colors. Each of these volumes he put in a perfectly fitting oak box lined with white velvet and fitted with a patent Bramah lock and duplicate keys. The cost of each volume worked out at about £40.

As the result of studies on New Jersey mosquitoes last summer, Professor John B. Smith of Rutgers College says that not only will the insects travel long distances from their breeding-place, but on favorable evenings large swarms rise and are carried during the night by winds. The direction in which they go is often seaward. Swarms have been met fifteen miles from the shore, and they are common five miles from shore. Migration of mosquitoes with the aid of the winds Professor Smith regards as of much importance, and as rendering the control of the mosquito nuisance much more difficult than has been supposed.

Miss Florence K. Jewell, a wealthy young Jewess, who attained notoriety in August, 1899, by marrying Lobengula's son, while he was on exhibition at the Kaffir Kraal at Earl's Court, London, has applied for a divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty and misconduct. She testified that he had given her black eyes, and stabbed her with an assegai, when the judge, Sir Francis Jeune, broke in with: "That was what you expected in marrying a savage, was it not?" The judge reserved judgment, as he doubted whether it could be shown that Lobengula's domicile was in England. He said, too, that he only behaved like a savage, and that the petitioner had insisted on marrying him, and now saw the result of it.

The old proverb about honor among thieves has had a staggering blow in St. Louis. The thieves were certain members of the city council and a number of street railway men, and it was because neither side had any confidence in the honor of the other that a remarkable case of bribery was most amusingly disclosed. The railway men desired certain franchises, and put up one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars as a corruption fund. They were afraid, however, to pay it to the councilmen until the council had voted as they wished. The corrupt councilmen, on their part, would not vote until they had the money. By a compromise, therefore, the fund was placed in a safety-deposit box which had two keys, one of which was held by each party. Neither could open the box without the cooperation of the other. The councilmen voted as they had agreed, and it was through the quarrel over their attempt to get the funds that the whole matter became public.

How Long to Keep the Dairy Cow.

The answer is short to the question, "How long should a dairy cow be kept?" Keep the cow only so long as she pays a gratifying profit. If no record is kept of profit and loss on the farm, neither man nor beast will get credit for services rendered. Every animal should have a ledger standing account. Even justice to man and beast alike is honorable. The farmer's methods in bookkeeping are not always commended by expert accountants. Business demands system, and that system must be correct. When the leaf is turned over in correct bookkeeping, the profitless live stock will be got rid of at the earliest possible moment. Profitless stock is the heaviest tax the farmer, dairyman and breeder is imperiously called upon to pay. The tax on real estate in comparison is only a feather weight in the balance. The farmer's son should be sent to a business college, if only for three months. The investment will pay a good interest for life.

It is more than probable that men who keep no profit and loss on stock have mortgages to pay interest on—that perpetual source of annoyance. No man of fine feelings lives as long or is so happy under the strain of interest paying as he who is free from debt. Small incomes pay off debts too slowly for much joy. Possession without debt is ennobling to manhood, and a rich mine of happiness for the home. Milk the cow only so long as she is profitable, then quickly turn her into beef and cash. —E., in New York Tribune.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

"It is a most miserable compromise, Aleck," she sobbed, "but I accept it. The sentence you have passed is heavier than death, but I submit because I cannot live apart from you. You may repent, Aleck, and take me back to your heart again. You cannot mean all that you have said. Look into my face that you have found so fair, and tell me that your love is still mine, in spite of all."

"Your beauty took me by storm," he answered slowly, "but mortal beauty pales before nobility of soul. I gave you the deepest, truest love man ever gave to woman, but it died when I found that you were false as you are fair. The soul has gone from my love, there is but the corpse of it left, nothing can reanimate it. Do not think me harsh— do not think that I judge you from a pinnacle of self-complacent goodness; I humble myself before heaven for my many faults and sins while I speak to you of yours. You have transgressed beyond all forgiveness. I will not turn from you, I will spare you from disgrace, but my love for you is dead."

He was deaf to her entreaties to be more merciful, he turned and left her— left her lying prone on her face on the velvet carpet more dead than alive.

"And this is the end of it all," she moaned, in a terrible voice, "the whirlpool has drawn me down and ingulfed me, Aleck's love is dead. What is there left to live for."

All the long night through she paced the floor, and the young moon in all its rounds never looked upon a sadder sight than the death-white face that passed ever and anon before the window and was raised to the night sky.

The stars died out, a faint, gray line in the eastern horizon heralded the approach of another day; still Daisy lingered by the window, her thoughts in pitiful chaos.

Her maid came to her at the usual hour but she sent her away again. The girl was greatly startled to see the bed had not been slept in, but she made no comments.

An hour later there was a hurried tap on the door, and before Daisy could say "Come in," Olive burst like a whirlwind into the room with the morning paper in her hand.

"Oh, Daisy!" she cried breathlessly, "you would never guess what has happened; oh, it's something perfectly horrible."

Daisy stood quite still; she had believed she had reached the depths of human misery. What new sorrow could come to her now?

"It is about the count," continued Olive; "just think what a fearful escape I have had. He was coming this very morning to arrange with me about our approaching marriage; now, the first thing that meets my eyes as I open the paper is that he is under arrest charged with the robbery of Mrs. Dillingham's diamonds. You remember about that, don't you? How on the night of the ball they were taken from the safe by some one who had smuggled himself in at the ball?

"It seems that the detectives had been watching him long before he was suspected, and when he attempted to dispose of them early this morning— after keeping them in his possession all this while until the excitement had blown over — well, they pounced upon him at once, and the consequence is he is in the tombs, and there in searching through his pockets, guess what was brought to light, Daisy!"

A terrible gasp broke from Daisy's lips. Of course it was the half-burned letter revealing that terrible past. She could have uttered no word.

"It was a forged note bearing Alexander Hamilton's signature for a large amount.

"Aleck was sent for in great haste a few minutes ago, and went up there post-haste. I suppose he did not tell you of all this for fear of frightening you. Didn't I have a narrow escape, Daisy? I shall never dare to look at a so-called titled foreigner again. I have had a lesson that will do me for life. Thus fades my roseate dreams of becoming a countess."

As she spoke she raised her eyes to Daisy's face; then a terrible piercing cry rang through the room.

"Oh, my God, Daisy is dying!"

Servants were quickly summoned.

She had not fainted, though her face was the hue of death. They carried her to her couch, and in a voice that sounded like nothing human, she begged them to leave her.

It was the only kindness they could do her, she said; leave her quite alone with her face turned toward the wall.

At that opportune moment there was the sound of an arrival.

It was Farmer Gordon. He had just arrived in the city. Wishing to surprise them, he had not apprised them of his coming. He had taken a coupe to the villa, and here he was, he explained to Olive, who had hurried down the corridor to meet him, hearing the welcome sound of his cheery voice.

"And where is my little Daisy?" he exclaimed eagerly. "Why is she not here to welcome me?"

In a few brief words Olive told him how strangely Daisy had been taken ill— how she had begged them all, as the greatest kindness they could do her, to leave her by herself with her face turned toward the wall.

"I will go to her at once!" declared Farmer Gordon, hoarsely. "She will always be pleased to see her poor old father."

Olive led him to the door of her boudoir, and he entered alone.

With faltering steps he approached the slim figure, lying on the couch, her face buried in the pillows, and laid his hand heavily on the golden head just as he used to do when she was a little dreaming child.

"Daisy, little one," he called softly.

She sprung up with the most piteous cry that ever was heard, and the next moment two soft white arms were around his neck, and the golden head was pillowed on his breast.

Her old father's love had never failed her no matter what she had done.

Here was the heart that would always find pity and forgiveness for her no matter what her sin had been.

"Papa," she wailed out sharply, "I——"

The sentence never was finished. She fell back in his arms in a dead faint.

CHAPTER XXV.

A Painful Discovery.

It was quite an hour afterward that Aleck, returning to the villa, learned from Farmer Gordon, who came out to meet him, what had happened — Daisy was lying ill, nigh unto death.

But much to Farmer Gordon's dismay, Aleck did not spring past him

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organised in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, will be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years' experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 364½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—
A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $350,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 35,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $2.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $5.89 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,274.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	132,712.00
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both dividends and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund. under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA, CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

The fruit grower should know every tree in his orchard, and he should go over the orchard frequently and satisfy himself that everything is favorable to the trees. Some trees may be backward in growth and he should endeavor to learn the cause. It may be due to a lack of plant food in the soil, to the pruning, to too much grass, to the mode of cultivation, or to insects; but a thoroughly competent fruit grower will discover the cause if possible, and remove it.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter: "When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

Municipal and Legislative.—Thos. Richardson, Thos. Stanton, F. F. Garden, T. W. Lowry, John Murray.

To draft the by-laws—Wm. Menzies, T. G. Anderson, Chas. H. J. Mitchell. The latter was also appointed auditor in place of G. Y. Gerrard, resigned.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.

—Mr. J. H. Brandon, Fenelon Falls, was in town yesterday.

—Mr. B. O. Britton, of the Gananoque Reporter, and Mrs. Britton, are visiting friends in town.

—Mr. Wm. Shenden left yesterday for Preston Springs, where he will remain a week or ten days.

—His Honor Judge Weller and Mr. H. LeBrun left last night for Preston Springs, where they will remain a couple of weeks.

—Mr. E. B. Stone leaves on Monday for Sault Ste Marie and the Manitoulin district, where he will hold a number of political meetings in the interests of the Liberal party of Ontario.

—Major W. J. Neill, of Omemee, is understood to have been offered an appointment with the fourth contingent, C.M.R. He will go either as a Captain of a Squadron or as a veterinary Captain. Major Neill holds a first-class Royal School of Instruction certificate. Major Neill was senior Major in the 45th Victoria Regiment of Lindsay. He lately passed the final examinations with honors at the Ontario Veterinary College, Toronto.

Rev. Mr. Yule Called

A unanimous call has been extended by the Presbyterian congregation of Springville and Bethany to the Rev. Mr. Yule, late assistant pastor of St. Paul's, Peterborough. The call was the result of a special meeting of the two congregations, held at Springville on Tuesday. The call will be presented at the meeting of the Presbytery to be held in Toronto during the meeting of Synod, May 11th and 12th, and will no doubt be confirmed.

An Election Story

Mr. E. B. Stone tells a good story of a man who kept a pig. The time came when the pig had to be killed. He killed it and split it down in two halves and hung it in the barn. Next morning he went to look at the pig, when lo and behold half the pig was gone. He told a friend who was passing that those d—— Grits had stolen half of his pig. The friend replied, "How do you know the Grits stole half of your pig?" The man answered, "Because if it had been the Tories they would have taken it all."

Old Friends Heard From

Mr Dick Simons, son of our esteemed fellow-townsman, Mr. Peter Simons, has returned home for his summer vacation, having left his company at Atlantic City, N.J. Dick looks the picture of good health, and is in fine spirits, having, with his brother, Mr. Danny Simons, completed a very successful season. Dick will remain till July. Danny is staying in New York, and may not be over this summer. He has as a room-mate Mr. Carson LeBrun. Mr. LeBrun is doing well, being employed as one of the city representatives of the great Heintz pickling house. Through Dick, Danny and Carson send their regards to all the Peterborough boys of their acquaintance, and their love to all the girls.

Canadian Writers

Really noteworthy is the progress now being made by Canadian writers. With the expansion of the country, the old isolation vanishes. A big country grows big people. Then again, the brightness of treatment is increasing and the style of writing improving. This is especially noticeable in the Canadian Magazine, where our leading writers place their best work. The May number, just to hand, contains some excellent material. John Innes' beautifully illustrated article on the Buffalo Hunting, L. S. Channell's profusely pictured description of the Eastern Townships, and Mr. Colquhoun's masterly delineation of Lord Rosebery, are three worthy contributions. The stories and lighter features are as entertaining as usual. All booksellers.

Death of Mrs. Richard Sheehy

It is with sincere regret that we record the death of Mrs. Richard Sheehy, which sad event took place yesterday morning at the family residence, 43 Lake street. The deceased lady was eighty years of age, and succumbed after a brief illness, passing peacefully away at the last. Mrs. Sheehy was born in Ireland, coming to Canada 40 years ago with her husband and a family of nine children. She was a good woman, and was beloved and esteemed by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. She leaves the following family: William, of Nevada, Richard of Peterborough and James J., of Chicago; the daughters are, Mrs. Flynn, of Boston; Mrs. John Corkery, Mrs. M. O'Brien and Miss Mary Sheehy, of Peterborough. The funeral takes place tomorrow, Friday, at 9 o'clock, from the family residence, 43 Lake street, to St. Peter's cathedral.

How It Happened

A good story was told The Times the other day about a certain merchant, whose place of business is not far removed from the office of this great family journal. The gentleman in question recently ordered a pair of trousers from his tailor. On trying them on they proved to be several inches too long. It being late on Saturday night, the tailor's shop was closed, and the merchant took the trousers to his wife and asked her to cut them off and hem them over. The good lady, whose dinner had perhaps disagreed with her, brusquely refused. The same result followed an application to the wife's sister and to the eldest daughter. But before bed-time the wife relenting, took the pants, and cutting off six inches from the legs, hemmed them up nicely and restored them to the closet. Half an hour later her daughter taken with compunction for her unfilial conduct, took the trousers, and cutting off six inches, hemmed and replaced them. Finally, the sister-in-law felt the pangs of conscience, and she too performed an additional surgical operation on the garment. When the merchant appeared at breakfast on Sunday the family thought a Highland chieftain had arrived.

A Delicious Diet for the Banishment of Dyspepsia and Stomach Troubles

The value and importance of Malt Breakfast Food as a diet for dyspeptics is becoming more apparent each day. The happy record of dyspeptics being cured by Malt Breakfast Food instead of nauseous drugs, will cheer the heart of many a poor sufferer. Indigestion and dyspepsia are results of overtasking the stomach and digestive organism with indigestible and faulty nourishment.

Malt Breakfast Food soothes and strengthens the inflamed and irritated stomach. It has a most beneficial influence on the torpid liver by quickly giving new power and life to this organ; it enriches the starved blood, and brings the whole digestive machinery into one harmonious combination. The happy results may be summed up as follows: healthy appetite, increased energy, greater vitality and good health. If dyspepsia is making life a misery for any member of your family, have the sufferer use Malt Breakfast Food for a couple of weeks. Your Grocer will recommend it.

A PRETTY WEDDING

Nuptials of Mr. J. W. Botterill and Miss Caroline H. G. Payne

A very pretty wedding was celebrated in the George street Methodist church yesterday afternoon by the Rev. J. C. Wilson, pastor of the church, when Mr. John W. Botterill led to the marriage altar Miss Caroline Helena G. Payne, daughter of Levi Payne, Esq., of Lakefield. The groom is also a resident of that village.

The bride was assisted by Miss D. Bickell, of Lakefield, while Mr. W. B. Girvin, of the same place, acted as best man.

The bride looked charming in a dress of taffeta silk trimmed with pearls, while the bridesmaid was also daintily attired. The wedding march was played by the organist of the church.

The bride was the recipient of a number of beautiful and costly presents, amongst which were a purse of gold from the groom and a gold watch from her father.

They left on the C.P.R. on a honeymoon trip to Niagara Falls and points west. On their return they will take up their residence in Lakefield.

The Times joins in extending Mr. and Mrs. Botterill its hearty congratulations.

Catarrh for twenty years and cured in a few days.—Hon. George James, of Scranton, Pa., says: "I have been a martyr to Catarrh for twenty years, constant hawking, dropping in the throat and pain in the head, very offensive breath. I tried Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. The first application gave instant relief. After using a few bottles I was cured. 50 cents.—5

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

THE CRITICAL CONDITION OF EUROPE THE BEST GUARANTEES OF PEACE

It would be Impossible for Russia or France to Engage in War with Great Britain or Japan at the Present Time

London, May 2.—The Standard, in discussing the outlook for peace says,—Great Britain is not the only power that is giving hostages for peace in its internal troubles. People have been saying for the last three years that the South African war crippled Great Britain for taking an effective part in the high politics of Europe. Some have wondered why her enemies did not take advantage of the opportunity to follow, with more frankness and vigor, ambitious prospects in Asia and elsewhere. The reason is that the enemies of Great Britain have troubles of their own, hidden as carefully as may be from the public eye, but always imminent and occasionally acute.

Evidences have been plenty for the last two or three years of discontents and menacing popular purposes among the subjects of the greatest European powers. Germany has been going through a financial crisis which would weaken her for war, were it not that her greatest possible enemies have been still more fatally weakened. Labor and Socialists outbreaks in Italy and Belgium, on either side of France, put down only by society in all these allied populations. France is a republic, and feelings that find vent in rioting in Italy and Belgium seek an outlet at the voting booths there. In the elections of Sunday the French government was completely defeated in Paris, and received a severe check throughout France. Not one supporter of the government was elected in the capital, and most of the successful candidates are avowed revolutionists of one kind or another. Here is the plainest kind of warning that France could not endure the shock of foreign war without a change of government.

The ally of France, whether against Germany on the continent or against Great Britain in the East, is in still more cruelly crippled for effective foreign war. It is difficult to trust any news from Russia, between the home censorship on one side and unfriendly British exaggeration on the other; but some news is certain. One minister has been assassinated and others are living under daily menace. This might be the result of the Nihilist movement among the educated classes, which has been going on for many years without making much impression on the people. But there are evidences of popular discontent in the present riots in the south of Russia, which tell a different story. Our ambassador at St. Petersburg cables that these reports are exaggerated; but he has no other information than that furnished by the government. The significant thing is that the heretofore submissive peasants are thinking of rebellion at all. When such a class rises, the result is terrible. It was the peasantry that really made the French revolution.

It is possible that the rise of industrial centers and the establishment of mills and factories in Russia have wrought a fatal change in the population by bringing the peasants together for discussion and giving them the dim sort of half education which breeds the most dangerous discontent. Whatever the cause and whatever the result, there are indications that Russia is likely to have her hands as completely tied at home, between money troubles and popular discontents, as those of Great Britain have been tied in South Africa. All this increases the assurance of the world's peace.

KRUGER HEARS THAT THE WAR WILL CONTINUE

Report that the Boer Chiefs Have Rejected the British Peace Terms.

Paris May 2.—The Rappel says that Mr. Kruger has received a communication by way of Lorenzo Marques, to the effect that the Boer chiefs have rejected the British peace terms by a unanimous vote.

London, May 2.—A despatch to the Telegraph from Johannesburg, dated Saturday, says that Gen. Delarey's commandoes under Commandant Kemp will meet early next week to discuss the question of peace.

A despatch confirms the statement that a general meeting of representatives of all the Commandos will meet on May 20th and determine whether it will be peace or war. The Liverpool Globe's correspondent wires from Pretoria that a rumor is abroad that the present peace talk of the Boers is simply a trick to gain time, and that they have no thought of surrendering. A concerted line of action will be agreed upon by the enemy, as a result of the conference of the leaders.

CORONATION INVASION

Great Folks who are Going to the Coronation Next Month

London, May 2.—It is expected that more royal personages will be in London at the coronation than England has ever before seen together. When Victoria was crowned not a European court sent a representative with rank higher than Ambassador Extraordinary; but, in the years between that occasion and her Jubilee the Queen fortified England against another such slight, by becoming grandmother to most of the ruling monarchs of Europe.

There will be some attractive and interesting women among the royal guests, and incidentally, there should be, too, a marvellous display of jewels. The Grand Duchess Serge of Russia will be perhaps the handsomest of the foreign Princesses.

She is King Edward's niece and was, before her marriage, Princess Elizabeth of Hesse. She is a sister of the Czarina. She has been called the most beautiful of Queen Victoria's descendants, and her jewels and costumes are a proverb. With her will be her cousin, the Duchess of Sparta, daughter of Empress Frederick.

The Duchess of Aosta, wife of the heir presumptive to the throne of Italy, will be the Grand Duchess Serge's chief royal rival in the matter of good looks. She was married, when Helene d'Orleans in the Catholic Church at Kingston on the Thames, and she made her social debut at a Marlborough House garden party, and a visit to England will be rather like a homecoming to her. The Duke of Genoa, uncle of the King of Italy, will also attend the coronation and command an Italian man of war in the great naval review.

The Princess of Asturias is not a beauty, but her husband, Prince Charles of Bourbon, is sufficiently good looking to strike an average, and the Princess is both pleasant and agreeable. She was Queen of Spain from November, 1885, when her father died, until the following May, when her brother Alfonso XIII, was born; and now, as heiress presumptive to the throne she is, next to the King, the most important personage of Spain.

Many charming stories are told of her devotion to her brother and to her country. She refused to marry any Prince who would require her to live outside of Spain, and when it made a love match in spite of opposition from family and public. She has never been in England, but like all royalty in Europe, speaks English perfectly.

The Crown Princess of Roumania is King Edward's niece and spent her childhood in England.

Prince Henry of Prussia and his wife are doubly related to the King, through Prince Henry's mother, Empress Frederick, and Princess Henry's mother, Princess Alice. Prince Henry is now known to Americans. His wife is famed for her sweetness of disposition and charm of manner.

Prince Rupert of Bavaria and his pretty young Austrian wife, who was a granddaughter of Francis Joseph, will represent Bavaria. They are not related to the English royal family, but the feeling between England and Bavaria is particularly cordial.

Another young couple destined for a throne are Prince Albert of Flanders and his bride, who is an uncommonly attractive young woman, daughter of Duke Theodor in Bavaria. Prince Albert has spent much time in England, but was named for the Prince Consort and was a favorite of Queen Victoria.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark have been frequent visitors at Sandringham and Marlborough House, since the day when the Crown Prince with his parents and brothers took Alexandra to her wedding at Windsor. The Crown Princess is the only child of the late King of Sweden. This couple will undoubtedly be the favorite guests of the King and Queen.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Sweden are also popular with the royal family of England. The Princess is a granddaughter of Emperor William I.

There is a rumor that the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland will attend the coronation. The Duke, now King de jure of Hanover, is a Prince of the British blood royal and his wife is Queen Alexandra's sister, so their welcome would be a hearty one, but the chances are that they will be represented by their son, Prince George, and their daughter, Princess Max of Baden.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, youngest of Germany's rulers, will return to his old home for the coronation and be uncommonly glad to get there on any pretext, for rumor has it that he is a homesick, though conscientious and exemplary young ruler. His sister, Princess Alice of Albany, and his mother will be with him.

The list is not complete and more prospective sovereigns may be added to the collection. Gossip names the genial Duke of Oporto, brother of the King of Portugal, as Portugal's representative, but Servia and Bulgaria are known quantities; and, unless the Boer War ends speedily, Holland will doubtless send only an Ambassador.

The accommodation of so much royalty is giving the royal host some anxious moments. London has no such assortment of colossal royal palaces as most of the great European capitals. Marlborough House and Buckingham Palace will not lodge comfortably any save the privileged close relations of the King and Queen. It is said that a large hotel near Buckingham Palace has been taken for the King's guests, and that several noblemen have placed their London houses at King Edward's disposal.

After the coronation week many of the royal guests will visit Windsor and Sandringham, and partake of the great country homes of England; so mighty preparations for elaborate entertaining are being made throughout the length and breadth of the land, as well as in London, and the amount of money that will be hospitably spent during the season is beyond ordinary calculation.

Pleasant Cure for Weak Lungs

The best remedy for sore, weak lungs, is the soothing vapor of Catarrhozone which traverses every air cell and passage of the breathing organs. WANT MORE MONEY

Montreal, May 1—The Gazette publishes the following special despatch this morning from Halifax:

The 3rd and 4th Regiments of the Canadian Mounted Rifles held a special indignation meeting this evening in the Halifax Hotel, to decide on united action with reference to the way they are being treated on the subject of pay. The result was a decision to wire the Minister of Militia, asking that the Government guarantee that they receive Yeomanry instead of cavalry pay, as they are now rated, and if an unfavorable reply be received, they will resign in a body rather than accept commissions under the present terms.

DEATH OF A NOVELIST

Paris, May 1 — Xavier Aymon De Montepin, the novelist and playwright, is dead.

Dr. Harbottle, who was convicted at Burford some four months ago for shooting with intent to kill, was released from the Central Prison to-day as the result of a petition to the Government.

During his four months' confinement under the care of Warden Gilmour the doctor has improved the opportunity to look around him for reforms necessary at that institution. He has no complaint to make regarding the conduct of the institution, and he says he was accorded the very best treatment throughout his term. One thing absolutely necessary, he thinks, for the preservation of the lives of the prisoners, is a higher railing on No. 2 gallery, over which John Burk fell to his death on March 9 or thereabouts. He says that the wooden buckets used at the prison are disease transmitters; galvanized iron buckets should be substituted.

Dr. Harbottle says that the "violent perversion of judgment and justice" caused him to shoot. He wanted to bring the "rottenness" of the judicial system before the Dominion Government. The Village of Burford, he says, is overrun by rowdies who do all in their power to make the [illegible] respectable people miserable.

RUSSIA WAR MINISTER QUITS?

Report in Vienna that he has Resigned—Disturbances in Finland

Vienna, May 2.—The Neue Freie Presse says that Gen. Kouropatkin, Russian Minister of war, has resigned.

St. Petersburg, May 2.—There are disturbances daily in Finland in connection with the conscription law. Crowds collect in the chief towns and sing patriotic songs, but the police disperse them, generally without much trouble.

SHEMAKHA SHAKEN AGAIN

Severe Earthquake at the Devastated Town in Transcaucasia

St. Petersburg, May 2.—The town of Shemakha, in Transcaucasia, which recently experienced a disastrous series of seismic disturbances, was severely shaken again last night. A slighter shock followed the first earthquake.

Early last February a series of earthquakes devastated a vast area in and about Shemakha. More than 200 people were killed, and thousands were made homeless. The shocks are said to have changed the levels of the Caspian and the Black seas.

DEFENDS SHIP COMBINE

Lord Brassey Discusses it Before Australian Chamber of Commerce

Special to The Times.

London, May 2.—At a meeting of the Australian Chamber of Commerce to-day an address was made by Lord Brassey who took occasion to refer to the shipping combination. He said there was no reason to apprehend that the combination would be disadvantageous to trade. The public had no right to object to the steps taken to prevent the cutting of rates, which had proved so disastrous in the past.

Services which did not pay could not long be kept up to their full efficiency. A combining of interests and management under a due sense of responsibility to the public should secure reasonable, not excessive profits, while giving advantages in respect to continuity and succession of sailings not hitherto enjoyed.

SENSATIONAL MURDER TRIAL

The Assassins of Marquis de Mores now on Trial

Special to The Times.

Paris, May 2.—The sensational career of the Marquis de Mores is recalled by despatches from Tunis stating that his alleged murderers are to be placed on trial to-day. Few names were more familiar to the public a decade ago than that of the Marquis de Mores. On both sides of the Atlantic his eccentric ventures attracted widespread attention. He is probably best remembered in America for his disastrous attempt to establish a mammoth packing industry on the Dakotas ranges.

De Mores was murdered by members of a band of Touaregs in 1896 while on a military expedition into the interior of Africa. Since his death his relatives, particularly his widow, who was a daughter of the millionaire New York banker, L. von Hoffman, have been endeavoring to obtain the arrest and punishment of his murderers with the result that several of the band have been arrested finally and brought to trial.

GEN. SMITH'S DEFENCE

How Capt. Connell was Killed by a 15 Year Old Boy in Samar

Special to The Times.

Manila, May 2.—At the court-martial of Gen. Jacob H. Smith, who is accused of violating the rules of war in the campaign in Samar, the Filipino mascot of Company C, Ninth Infantry, described how Capt. Connell, when overwhelmed by the natives, leaped out of a convent window. As he landed a fifteen-year-old Filipino boy stabbed and killed him.

Gen. Smith's counsel prised Col. Guevarra, who, he declared, was respected, patriotic and honorable.

The court is displaying a disposition to admit all testimony tending to prove the conditions prevailing in Samar for the benefit of the readers of American newspapers.

The Chamber of Commerce has adopted a resolution expressing confidence in Gen. Chaffee, and declaring that he is earnestly substaining the civil authorities. The resolution deplores the spirit displayed in some quarters in the United States in unfairly charging the army with loose warfare, when in reality the actions of the troops have always been brave and humane.

DON'T FAIL TO TRY

Malt Breakfast Food

The immense popularity attained by Malt Breakfast Food in the homes of this country, has induced certain speculators to put up cheap preparations which they style "health food." While these poor foods pay handsome profits to the speculators, they are positively worthless to consumers, as they impart neither nourishment or health.

Don't fail to try Malt Breakfast Food if you are a stranger to it. It is the only true health giver—the one preparation that fully meets the ideas of such food experts as Fothergill, Williams and Henry.

To-day, physicians depend upon the virtues of Malt Breakfast Food for the nourishment of weak stomachs and frail bodies. The entire medical profession recognizes its worth as a builder of flesh, bone and muscle. Malt Breakfast Food makes the weak strong; it is now the chosen breakfast food of all who desire to maintain a full supply of energy and vitality. Your Grocer sells it.

COURT RETURNS TO PEKIN

Empress Dowager Calls to One of the Foreigners at the City Gate

Special to The Times.

Pekin, May 2.—The court returned to Pekin to-day from its pilgrimage to the Eastern tombs by way of the Hunting Park, escorted by 1,200 cavalry and infantry. The imperial party entered the palace at 2 o'clock.

Nearly all the foreigns in Pekin with the exception of the soldiers were present to witness the spectacle. They assembled at the top of the Chien Men gate where despite a dust storm they awaited the coming of the court for four hours.

Before burning incense at the gate of the temple the Dowager Empress leisurely scanned the foreigners. She called to a lady belonging to the Spanish Legation and questioned her concerning her health, a former professor of the Imperial University acting as interpreter.

A large number of high and low officials accompanied the court. The pilgrimage entered the city quietly. The alarming rumors caused by the absence of the court have now subsided.

TO RUN ROADS IN NORTHWEST

Incorporation of the Great Northern o Canada Consolidated Company

Special to The Times.

Trenton, N.J., May 2.—The Great Northern of Canada Consolidated Company, with a capital stock of $10,000,000, was incorporated to-day to operate railroads in the Northwest. The incorporators are Benjamin F. Moore, John McNaught and Arthur L. Meyers. The registered agent of the company is the Corporation Trust Company of 15 Exchange place, Jersey City.

According to a report which accompanied the filing of the charter to-day, the new company is backed by James J. Hill and the Northern Pacific and Canadian Pacific railroads. The specific purpose of the corporation, according to this report, is to construct a railroad from Duluth, Minn., to Dawson City, Alaska. The plan as outlined is to bring freight to Duluth from a great area in the Northwest heretofore tapped by no railroad and load it on boats at Duluth for shipment to Eastern points and Europe.

A large portion of the projected line, it is said, will be through a wilderness in some cases hundreds of miles from any other railroad. It was further asserted that the cost of construction would be considerably in excess of $100,000,000.

These reports lacked positive confirmation.

CLAIM EIGHTY MILLIONS

Cuban Soldiers Want More than the Country Can Pay

Havana, May 2.—Generals Rabi, Lora, Salcedo and Capote have tried to obtain from President-elect Estrada Palma an assurance that the Cuban army would be paid. Replying to the Generals, Senor Estrada Palma said he was disposed to pay the army, but to do so more resources would be needed than Cuba now has. He never suspected, he said, that the list of those to be paid contained 70,000 names, and the estimate of the amount due the soldiers—$80,000,000—frightened him. "The payment of this enormous sum would annihilate us," said the President-elect. "I would have to lease Cuba to raise this amount."

Senor Estrada Palma's idea was to revise the lists and to negotiate a loan of $10,000,000, providing for the interest by a sinking fund, as outlined in the Constitution. He expressed regret at the fact that no provision had been made to pension the widows of war heroes, mentioning particularly in this connection the widows of Generals Maceo and Marti. He proposed also to do something for those injured in the war.

GREAT SHIP COMBINE EXCITING GREAT BRITAIN

Managers of the Great Trust to Try and Control the World's Shipping

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT TO TAKE ACTION

Conference To-Day with Mr. Morgan and Statement of Each Steamship Line's Position will Follow in a Few Days

Special to The Times.

London, May 2.—It is said that an official statement will be issued in a few days to English steamship owners regarding the combination. This will define the exact position of each company which has joined the trust.

Regarding the White Star Line, the official statement will prove that neither a change of ownership nor flag has taken place, and that the company is simply bound by the regulations of a tight pool.

Belfast, May 2.—Mr. Pirrie, chairman of the Harland & Wolff Shipbuilding Company, told a representative of the Central News to-day that he would start for London to-night and would meet J. Pierpont Morgan to-morrow for the purpose of settling details of the shipping combination and preparing a circular which will be issued to the shareholders of the various companies within a week. This circular would clear the air of the many rumors now current.

Mr. Pirrie added that the deal had been entirely favorable to England. Although the Cunard and some other companies had not yet joined the combination, the arrangement would certainly benefit them.

London, May 2.—The Shipping Gazette states that it is informed on the highest authority that, while there will be no sale of the shares of the White Star Line, there will be an exchange of the present shares for those of the new trust. The real intention of the companies concerned, it explains, is to enter into a pooling arrangement.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer made an important announcement in the House of Commons this afternoon in the matter of British shipping as subsidized by the Government. He announced that a committee had been appointed by the Admiralty with a limited reference, to ascertain and report in what way and at what cost steamships of greater speed and greater efficiency than those now employed may be secured for naval service in return for the Government subsidy.

The chairman of the committee is the Earl of Camperdown, and the other members are Vice-Admiral Penrose Fitzgerald, Prof. J. H. Biles, M. D. Chalmers, representing the Treasury; a representative of the General Post Office, and Capt. Stafford. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach said that the Government would not promise at present that the reports and evidence would be presented to the House.

Gerald Balfour, President of the Board of Trade, said that the Government had no official information as to whether the English shipping companies had entered into the new combination on the same terms as the German and American lines. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, declared that whatever may have been the original policy which led to the subvention of merchant cruisers, it was considered by the Admiralty that definite functions could be assigned to such ships in time of war, and they were to be retained.

Gerald Balfour added that the Board of Trade had no power to compel the disclosure of any agreement in reference to the transfer of any British ships. The Board had no reason to think that further powers were required for preventing the evasion or infraction of the Merchant Shipping Act. The possible effects of the American combination were engaging the serious attention of the Government.

France and Venezuela to Arbitrate

Special to The Times.

Paris, May 2.—The Journal Official will publish to-morrow the text of the agreement between the Governments of France and Venezuela with regard to the claims of French citizens for indemnity. Each Government appoints an arbitrator and these will sit at Caracas to consider the claims. The referee will be the Spanish Ambassador in Paris.

HE WISHES TO GO INTO POLITICS

The young man who writes us the following letter needs not only instruction, but admonition also:

"I am 24 years old. It has been my earnest wish for years to make politics my profession. I have received a common school education. I am considered by my friends to be smart and full of push. Some of my former schoolmates have entered politics, and have made it a success. I have been unable to find out the secret of their success (they seem to be jealous of me). I am sure it is not from the fact of their being better educated than I am. "The advice I desire is this: What steps must I take to bring myself forward and to become conversant with political matters? How long does it generally take a young man starting in politics to secure a nomination?"

Every young man ought to take an interest in politics. If he fails to do it, he neglects the most important duty of a citizen of a republic. He has the privilege of voting, and, in order to exercise it intelligently, he should inform himself in regard to the political principles of the parties which seek his vote, and establish his own political principles on a firm foundation of conviction.

And the more earnestness he shows in behalf of just political convictions, the more chances he has of success. Let him eschew bitter party papers, reading only such literature as is found in The Times and his morality will be all right.

PURE MILK

The subject of pure milk supply is one which is commanding the attention of the leading scientists. Dr. A. D. Chapin discusses the subject in the current number of the Forum and points out that according to the milk dealers, the great trouble is that the public cannot see any difference between perfectly clean milk and the ordinary article. For this reason people are not aware of being made sick by milk, and will not pay the price which extra cleanliness necessitates. This state of affairs has led to the organizing of milk commissions by medical societies, to stand between the milk dealers and the public, examine the milk at stated intervals, and issue certificates of cleanliness to those dealers whose milk contains few bacteria. The use of milk thus certified is to be recommended for infants, invalids, and all who wish an extra clean article. Even milk sold at a price that barely exceeds the cost of production, when the least possible labor is expended, is generally safe for adults with healthy digestions. It is true that disease has been transmitted by such milk, but it must be confessed that this is the exception, not the rule. Many people are frightened by alarmist reports into giving up a nutritious and valuable article of food. What is needed is public education as to the value of good food and general willingness to pay for it. Honest and conscientious producers will then be encouraged to supply the best article.

A New View of Braddock.

There have doubtless always been those who realized that history had dealt too harshly with the unfortunate Braddock, but it is difficult to change a settled conviction with regard to one who has become either a popular or an unpopular figure of the past. It is interesting, therefore, to find in the latest volume in which the Braddock campaign figures, Mr. A. G. Bradley's "The Fight With France for North America," that he author departs slightly from the beaten track, and presents the British commander in a somewhat more favorable light than we have been taught to regard him. "No name," he says, "has been more irresponsibly played upon, and few reputations, perhaps, have been more hardly used, than Braddock's, by most writers of history and nearly all writers of fiction. His personality, from its very contrast to the wild woods in which he died, has caught the fancy of innumerable pens and justice has been sadly sacrificed to picturesque effect. One is almost inclined to think that the mere fact of his name beginning with a letter which encourages a multiplication of strenuous epithets has been against him. By all American writers he is depicted as the typical redcoat of the Hanoverian period—burly, brutal, blundering, blasphemous, but happily always and without a dissentient note—brave, brave indeed, as a lion. This familiar picture of our poor General, as a corpulent, red-faced, blaspheming bulldog, riding roughshod over colonial susceptibilities, tones down amazingly when one comes to hard facts." Mr. Bradley goes on to show that what is really known about Braddock is in his favor. Vanquished in a duel, he had been too proud to ask his life.

When in command at Gibraltar he was "adored by his men," and this though he was notorious as a strict disciplinarian, a quality which Wolfe at that very time was declaring to be the most badly needed one in the British army. The simple truth about Braddock is that he was the first British General to conduct a considerable campaign in a remote wilderness. He had no precedents furnished by the experience of others to guide him, and he found little help in the colonies, where he had been taught to look for much. He has been accused of disparaging the colonial irregulars and of neglecting to utilize friendly Indians. As to the first taunt, Mr. Bradley submits that, in view of the appearance and discipline of the provincial troops that were paraded before Braddock, he would not as a soldier trained on European fields have been human had he refrained entirely from open criticism. As to the second taunt, the facts brought forward in this book demonstrate that it has no foundation. Robert Orme of the Thirty-fifth Regiment, who was one of the General's aide-de-camps and who himself was highly thought of by the provincials, gives no hint in his diary that Braddock was the violent, unreasonable, foul-mouthed person who has since figured in magazine articles. Orme was as much disheartened as his chief by the appearance and seeming temper of the colonial troops and dwells on the trying conditions which Braddock had to meet, and the energy and honesty with which he endeavored to do his duty. It is certain that Braddock quickly appreciated Washington, and to save the Virginia Colonel from the indignity of ranking under a British ensign placed him on his personal staff. Braddock appreciated Benjamin Franklin also, and in a despatch to his Government described him as the "first capable and sensible man I have met in the country." Mr. Bradley contends that in no proper sense of the word can Braddock be said to have been surprised at Fort Duquesne. Throughout the march thither, on the contrary, admirable discipline was maintained, and every precaution that prudence required was observed. When the attack upon him was ultimately made it succeeded simply because Braddock's soldiers were not backwoodsmen.

It is with some indignation, says The New York Sun in an admirable review of the work, that the author of this book points out that "even the dying moments of the gallant bulldog have been made the theme of much fanciful dialogue and garnished with fictitious utterances of grief at the disaster and remorse for his supposed obstinacy and rashness. That he twice tried to arrest the stampede and then took measures for the comfort of the wounded is all that we know for certain of his last hours." It is not, of course, here pretended that Braddock was a great General. The plain truth is that he was sent to carry out an undertaking arduous and unprecedented in British experience, and did his best in the face of immense difficulties, human and physical. Both he and his soldiers had, perhaps, grown a little too confident after crossing the second ford of the Monongahela. Till then, however, he had been entirely successful in avoiding ambuscades, and even the scene of the final engagement was no ambush in the ordinary sense of the term. Had his scouts been pushed farther forward, he would have been notified, no doubt, a little earlier of the impending attack; but under no circumstances would his regulars have been qualified to face even a lesser number of Indians in their native woods. Of provincial combatants on the field of battle, there were not 200 on the British side, and many of these had had no backwoods experience whatever.

The London Daily Chronicle pays the following pleasant compliment to the new Minister of Justice for Canada:—"The Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, who has become Canadian Minister of Justice, in succession to Mr. David Mills, is young enough to have a future ahead of him both as a lawyer and a statesman. A modest man, and with nothing of the 'loose tongue' which Disraeli attributed in an angry moment to lawyers, he has not, perhaps, made apparent to distant observers the large part he has played in the successful Laurier Administration. Mr. Fitzpatrick, as Solicitor-General, has made his mark, and in the more difficult paths of diplomacy he showed his mastery when the Manitoba school question disturbed the relations between a State Government and the Federal Ministry, with ramifications in the Privy Council and at the Vatican. Mr. Fitzpatrick dealt with the vexed question at Ottawa, in London and in Rome. He was a welcome visitor to our own capital so lately as in last December."

Curious Bits of News.

It is somewhat humbling to our pride to know that the greatest speed attained under sail is that of the flying proa of Pacific savages. Until the advent of the turbine motor these tiny craft could outsail any steamer afloat, even the modern German liners. Their lowest estimated speed is twenty knots, and many travelers credit them with more.

Since March 1 the torch in the hand of the Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, in New York harbor, has not been lighted. This does not mean that the statue has lost its significance as the symbol and personification of the broad political and industrial freedom which is enjoyed in the United States. It simply means that no satisfactory method of lighting the torch has been devised, and that the Lighthouse Board does not think it worth while to continue an inadequate electric lamp. The other harbor lights serve all the needs of the mariners, and the statue itself, without its own light, will show more plainly in the darkness than before.

The reputation of Germany as a country where life is regulated as much as possible in accordance with the behests of science is borne out by the regulations of the German military authorities concerning the marching and physical training of troops. The "physiology of marching" has recently been the subject of careful investigation, and the results obtained are taken advantage of for the benefit of the German army. Among the conclusions reached is that during continuous heavy marching the rations supplied are not sufficient to replace the waste of carbohydrates, and that a day's rest is required after every three days' marching, to enable the body to recover its normal power.

In typewriting 500 letters you waste one hour in writing "Dear Sir" and "Yours very truly." Now, the total annual number of letters sent through the post all over the world is 8,000,000,000. Of course this is not all commercial correspondence, nor is it all typewritten, but for the purpose of having some statistical starting-point it will be assumed that it is. To write "Dear Sir" and "Yours very truly" for this number of letters would take one typist 16,000,000 hours, allowing 300 working days to the year, about 6,700 years. To translate this into an approximation of its money value, allowing $12 as the salary of the typist and eight hours as the average day's work, the cost would be $2,250,000.

The Wiarton (Ont.) "Echo" records a remarkable instance of affection between dumb brutes. A Mr. Robertson lost a team of horses through the ice on Colpoy's Bay. It appears that the gentleman mentioned is the owner of a dog—an ordinary collie dog—that was passionately fond of the animals drowned, and they were in constant companionship whenever possible. After the accident occurred, and when the horses were delivered from their watery graves and pulled out on the ice, the large crowd that had gathered quickly dispersed, the horses being apparently "left alone in their glory." It transpired later on, however, that the faithful dog, in his grief for his lost companions, refused to leave the spot where they were, and was tenderly licking the animals' heads and giving vent to his sorrow in various other ways. Efforts were made to console the bereaved canine and to attract him from the spot, but he went not, and refused to be comforted. He remained, it is said, near the scene of the accident till the bay was completely enveloped in darkness. The poor brute then solemnly and sadly wended his way to his master's home.

The other night Thomas J. White, a Brooklyn butcher, found it necessary to remain in his store until after midnight, to finish making up his accounts for the week. Miss Maria Jacobs, his fiancee, was waiting for him to escort her to her home. White took six hundred dollars from the cash drawer and placed it in a wallet, which he put in his pocket. He was just about to don his coat when he was seized with a fit and fell to the floor. Miss Jacobs tried to raise him up, but failed, so she ran out of the store for assistance. The first persons she met were two frowzy-looking fellows, who readily responded to her appeal for help. They rushed into the store, and while one of them lifted the prostrate White the other lifted the wallet out of the butcher's pocket and fled. Miss Jacobs gave pursuit. The other stranger promptly dropped White, ran to the money-drawer, and, finding no money there, looked about him for something of value to seize. There were juicy steaks and toothsome chops, but he selected a big bologna sausage and ran out with the booty. The first stranger, in the meantime, had succeeded in eluding Miss Jacobs and getting away. When she returned to the store the second thief had also disappeared. A policeman was finally called to hunt for the robbers, and a physician to attend White. The doctor succeeded in bringing White out of his fit, but the policeman failed to bring back the thieves or the money.

Onions and Epidemics.

A READER of "Marmaduke's" letters in London "Truth" has sent him the following:

"Whilst turning over some old books in my library last week I stumbled upon the following paragraph in the 'Rural World' of 1869. As there is an epidemic of smallpox in London, it has occurred to me to send this to you, for some of your medical readers may be either able to prove or disprove the statements it contains:

"'Onions and Epidemics.—In the spring of 1849 I was in charge of one hundred men on shipboard, with the cholera among the men. We had onions, which a number of the men ate freely. Those who did so were soon attacked, and nearly all died. As soon as I made this discovery their use was forbidden. After mature deliberation I came to the conclusion that onions should never be eaten during the prevalence of epidemics, for the reason that they absorb the virus, and communicate the disease, and that the proper use for them is sliced and placed in the sick-room, and replaced with fresh ones every few hours. . . . After maintaining the foregoing opinion for eighteen years, I have found the following well attested: Onions placed in the room where there is smallpox will blister and decompose with great rapidity; not only so, but will prevent the spread of the disease. I think that as a disinfectant they have no equal if properly used. If needed, the foregoing (which I have greatly abbreviated) can be attested on oath.'"

It is a curious echo of a bygone preventive, and it is given here without much hope that the suggestion can be valuable.

Epitaph.

Here lies Luke Longpenne, the distinguished historical novelist, who died at the age of eleven years in the full height of his fame, three weeks after the publication of his first book.—"Life."

CONSUMPTION

Is like the constrictor which drops its coils around its victim and slowly tightens them until life is extinguished.

Once the coils are drawn tight there is little chance of escape. The one hope of safety is to break loose at the beginning of the attack.

Those who are showing symptoms of lung disease should instantly begin the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It will cure obstinate coughs, bronchitis and bleeding of the lungs. It increases the nutrition of the body, and so restores the emaciated form to health and strength.

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"I feel it my duty to give my testimonial in behalf of your great medicine," writes Mr. John T. Reed, of Jefferson, Jefferson Co., Ark. "When I commenced taking Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I was very low with a cough, and would at times spit blood. I was not able to do any work at all, was weak and my head was dizzy. The first bottle I took did me so much good that I had faith in it and continued until I had taken twelve bottles. Now I do not look like nor feel like the same man as I was a year ago. People were astonished and said they did not think that I could live. I can thankfully say that I am entirely cured of a disease from which had it not been for your wonderful 'Discovery' I would have died."

From the Times Greatest Poet

Standing one day on the golf links,
  He was weary and ill at ease;
And he baffed and foozled idly
  Over the whins and tees,
He knew not what he was dreaming,
  Or where he was rubbering then
But Myles swiped that ball, of a sudden
  With the force of two-score men.

It sped through the crimson twilight
  Like a shot from a 16-inch gun;
And it passed from my fevered vision
  To the realm of the vanished sun;
It chanced over the bunker,
  It caromed hazard and hill;
It went like a thing infernal—
  I suppose it is going still.
  With infinite nerve and ease;
And bored right on through the land
It shied each perplexing stymie
  [illegible]

  As if it were loath to cease
I have sought—but I seek it vainly—
  That ball of the strenuous pace,
That went from the sole of Myles' niblick
  And entered into space.

It may be some blooming caddy
  Can sooner or later explain;
It may be that only in heaven
  We shall find that ball again.

And I slowly trudged along homeward,
  With Hamilton, Burnham and Ray,
And wondered if Garvin had done it,
  How much he would have to say.

No Breach of Discipline.

THE colonel was entertaining some of his friends with stories of army life, and the talk turned to the infallibility of orders. That reminded the colonel of Tim Murphy's case.

Murphy had enlisted in the cavalry service, although he had never been on a horse in his life. He was taken out for drill with other raw recruits under command of a sergeant, and, as luck would have it, secured one of the worst buckers in the whole troop.

"Now, my men," said the sergeant in addressing them, "no one is allowed to dismount without orders from a superior officer. Remember that."

Tim was no sooner in the saddle than he was hurled head over heels through the air, and came down so hard that the breath was almost knocked out of him.

"Murphy," shouted the sergeant, when he discovered the man spread out on the ground, "you dismounted!"

"I did."

"Did you have orders?"

"I did."

"From headquarters, I suppose?" with a sneer.

"No, from hindquarters."

"Take him to the guard-house!" ordered the sergeant.—Detroit "Free Press."

Winter Uplands.

The frost that stings like fire upon my cheek,
The loneliness of this forsaken ground,
The long white drift upon whose powdered peak
I sit in the great silence as one bound;
The rippled sheet of snow where the wind blew
Across the open fields for miles ahead;
The far-off city towered and roofed in blue
A tender line upon the western red;
The stars that singly, then in flocks appear,
Like jets of silver from a violet dome,
So wonderful, so many, and so near,
And then the golden moon to light me home;
The crunching snowshoes and the stinging air,
And silence, frost, and beauty everywhere.

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE.

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.

WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive [illegible].

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the [illegible] scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

Revolutionary Proposals.

It must have struck many of the admirers of the melodramatic stage that the various outrages to which the hero is subjected during the course of the four acts, when he is "up against it" good and hard, are as like each other as a row of Japanese dolls. The locomotive, the fire-reel, the buzz-saw, the mine explosion, and the shipwreck, have been worked over and over again. What we need is novelty. And if I might make a suggestion, some new and startling climaxes could be worked up from the modest incidents of our daily life. For there are climaxes in the domestic circle just as distressing as any depicted on the stage. Even when the canvas buzz-saw is advancing on him with all the energy a perspiring stage carpenter can impart to it, the hero does not suffer the agony of apprehension that convulses the soul of the average man when he arrives home at three o'clock in the morning and hears the contemptuous sniff which apprises him that the wife of his bosom is awaiting him at the top of the stairs. Nor does the heroine, when starving to death in the latest black cashmere "Daily Hint from Paris," evince more trepidation than does the average matron, when the leader in her particular brand of "sassiety" drops in and finds her in a cotton wrapper with her store teeth in a tumbler of water and her magnificent chevelure lying on top of the bureau. There are calamities just as soul-harrowing in the domestic circle as in the drama. The trouble is that the playwrights have never taken hold of them in the true spirit of discovery.

We will take as an example one heroic incident that lately happened in this city when a prominent citizen induced a small girl to save her life by jumping from the windowsill of a burning house on to the tails of his ulster, which she accomplished without even breaking his flask. We can easily picture to ourselves how this could be worked up for the stage. The Angel cheeild is backed up on the windowsill with a pound of red fire burning on a tin shovel behind her. The hero comes tearing on from the side scenes. He sees her, and clasps his hand to his forehead. (Heroes always do that. It is a kind of a send-off.) He seizes a handful of clustering locks from his wig and tosses it into the air. It comes down "Tails!" The cheeild must be saved. With a wild wrench he whips off his liver-pad and holds it outstretched in his strong arms. The cheeild jumps and rebounds from it like a half a brick from a book-agent's cheek. Once more she springs; and again he is foiled. With a cry of anguish he hurls the liver-pad at the sneering villain and catches her on his breath. And as she is lowered in safety to the ground we see the quivering body of the villain nailed fast to the blazing ruins by the faithful liver-pad.

There is another point to which I would like to draw attention. And that is the way in which inanimate objects are neglected. We have dogs, geese, chickens and poultry in melodrama. But that is all. I was once acquainted with a gentleman who played a cake of ice in the river scene in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." And the barrel in "Panjandrum" was a most lovable personage off the stage. Many friends of mine have also formed part of the "hoarse gathering murmur" which always arises in the wings when the hero is getting into a remarkably tight place. But these were not strictly inanimate objects. They drew salaries, and wore red neckties on Sundays. What we need is a further extension of the drama from the farmyard to the grocery counter, and the hardware store. And we shall get it. We shall yet see a drama in which the leading comedy part is played by a tin of canned salmon and the heroine is saved from the villain's clutches by a barrel of patent glue. And why should we not? There are many comedians now on the stage who would compare unfavorably from an intellectual standpoint with a tin of canned salmon. And there are heroes beside whose personal charms a barrel of glue would shine as a paragon of pulchritude. A tin of canned salmon would prove far more useful to the heroine when she is lost on the sandy desert, or afloat on the lonely raft in mid-ocean, than a comic Irishman with a Coney Island brogue. If she did not care to tackle it herself she could feed it to the villain and tie him up in so many knots that it would take a traction engine to straighten him out. And the dramatic possibilities of a barrel of glue are simply illimitable. She could use it for sticking to everything from the angel cheeild to the papers proving her to be rightful heiress to the old baronial home. When the villain sprang upon her, hissing out "At last I have you in my pow-er-r-r!" she could paste him to the kitchen stove and go out for a walk. How would the band of Moorish brigands look if she stuck them all to the adjacent rocks by the slack of their loose trousers, while the manly hero went through their pockets? A dab of glue on her windowsill when the murderer was creeping, knife in hand, into her lonely bed-chamber, would compel him to stay there all night or complete his crime in a costume which the management would not stand for even for a moment. And then how useful it would be to help her to adhere to her salary. It is true that they might have to soak the hero in hot water to get him away from her. But then he often richly deserves to be soaked. In every other instance the faithful glue pot could give cards and spades and little casino to the most useful comedian who ever trailed the villain to his lair.

These are only two of the instances in which the use of inanimate objects in the cast would increase the novelty of the drama. But their number could be indefinitely increased. We have long had the wooden actor. Why should we stick at the inanimate tragedian? Herein we have a bright idea for the budding playwrights who have dramatized every book that has a circulation of over ten copies, until the principal value we place on the dictionary is the fact that even the most ambitious of them have never used it as the basis of a romantic play. And we charge nothing for this hint to dramatists. It is all absolutely free gratis.—Montreal "Sunday Sun."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter and hurry up to his young wife's boudoir. He turned away with a face pale with emotion.

"Do all you can for her," he said. "Let nothing that will add to her comfort be spared."

The farmer's brow darkened. He laid a heavy hand like a grasp of steel on the young man's shoulder.

"What is the meaning of this change in you, Aleck?" he said sternly, "and who is responsible for this change in Daisy? I gave a beautiful, tender flower into your keeping, and charged you to guard it carefully. I find it crushed and broken. What does it mean?"

And the voice that asked the question trembled with mighty passion.

Alexander Hamilton looked calmly and unflinchingly into the wrathful face before him.

"I must refer you to your daughter, sir, for an answer," he said slowly.

"Then there is a reason for this bitter and awful change in my child!" thundered the farmer. "Hark you, Alexander Hamilton," he added, "if there is anything wrong for which you are accountable, you shall answer to me, her father, for it."

"I am perfectly willing," answered Aleck, wearily.

Farmer Gordon went directly to his daughter's room again, vowing to himself that he would find out what this meant. If there was a quarrel between Alexander and his young wife, he would probe the affair to the very bottom, and find out which was in the wrong.

But he must not speak of this matter yet to Daisy; she was too ill to hear it.

During the fortnight which followed Alexander Hamilton carried out strictly his compromise. He never went near that portion of the house in which Daisy's suit of rooms were situated, but he was careful to send every morning to her room to see if she were better.

All Farmer Gordon's attempts to get at the bottom of the mystery which separated these two who seemed to have loved each other so well were futile.

On the day the farmer had come so near having an altercation with Aleck Daisy had received a short note from Aleck, telling her of the count's arrest. He had gone to the tombs, on being sent for to certify to genuineness of the note found in the count's pocket; and how upon arriving there he had found the count dead.

"This ends all," Aleck wrote. "In all probability he took the secret which is between you unrevealed to the grave."

Only heaven knew what a relief it was to Daisy to hear this, aside from her natural regret for the sudden taking off of a human life. But her terrible secret was safe now—safe.

The papers spoke afterwards of the strange note—and still stranger leaf torn from some book which they found pinned on the count's breast—it appeared to have related to the last sad rites over the grave of some eccentric genius.

The words seemed to have struck the count's fancy, making a deep impression on his mind.

"My life has not been blameless," he wrote in his note—"my sins are many and my virtues few. No woman's white hand has pointed out to me the path that leads toward heaven. No woman's gentle voice has urged me to a better life, or perhaps my fate would have been different. It is useless to repine now. Be kind enough to grant my last request. Let those gather around me at the last who have known me at my best—and at my worst; and let these words be uttered over my grave; 'We here place in the bosom of the great mother earth, the remains of a true child of nature; a man of brilliant attainments, notwithstanding his misdirection and waste of splendid talents. He laid aside as a worthless bauble the most beautiful of poet's dreams—the doctrine of immortality—believing as the perfume of the rose is wafted away on a passing zephyr, never more to unite with the decayed petals, so is the spirit or soul extinguished in the dead; and here lies all there is.'"

His wishes were strictly carried out, and with his death Daisy realized she had lost her greatest foe.

Ah, if heaven would but give her Aleck's love again, that was the great hope that had sprung up in her heart.

She would make one great effort toward reconciliation. She had gone so far in deceiving Aleck—"one more deception could not matter much," she told herself piteously.

"I am going to send for Aleck this afternoon, papa," she told Farmer Gordon one afternoon. "I can endure this estrangement no longer."

"Of course it is best known to you two what this bitter quarrel has been about; but I say, if you are in the right, Daisy, you must not humble yourself to Aleck—show the true Gordon spirit, and the Gordon pride."

"Pride should not stand in the way of love, papa!" she sighed, "it must not—it is too cruel."

When the moon was shining on the trees, and the flowers and birds were asleep, she sent for Aleck.

He was out in the grounds smoking a cigar, one of the servants told her, but he would call him at once.

"Stay," said Daisy, "I will go to him there."

Throwing a light veil over her golden hair, she stole out into the grounds—she knew his usual haunt — the rose arbor near the fountain; but tonight he was not there.

A great desolation fell over her heart. Had he gone? Would days, perhaps weeks, drag wearily by before she should see him again? A kind of terror came over her at the thought.

Just then she heard his familiar step on the gravel path.

How lonely he looked and desolate—what a sad, far-away look there was in the dark, gloomy eyes. How her heart ached for him! Was he thinking of her, she wondered.

She took a few steps forward, whispering, timidly, "Aleck;" but the low, faint, fluttering voice died away over the nodding roses—he did not hear.

"Aleck," she murmured again, a little louder than before.

This time he turned impatiently.

"How foolish I am," he muttered, setting his white teeth hard together. "In every sigh of the wind as it mourns among the trees I fancy I hear Daisy's voice."

"You do hear Daisy's voice," she whispered, close to his elbow. "I—I have something to say to you, Aleck."

The impulse was strong upon him to turn quickly and clasp her in his arms.

Anecdotal.

At a recent dinner in New York the Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage told a story of a lady who was asked: "Do you ever think of getting married?" "Think," she answered with asperity, "I worry."

A Toronto man, father of an unusually numerous family, was visited by a Westerner. "I never saw anything like it, old man," remarked the stranger over the cigars; "every time I come you have a new baby." "Oh, don't mind it, my dear fellow; it isn't your fault," was the quick reply.

The late Lord Dufferin had put on record a Sheridan story which is worth repeating. Richard Brinsley Sheridan was one day remonstrating with his son in reference to some peccadillo, and finished by exclaiming, "Why, Tom, my father would never have permitted me to do such a thing." Like lightning came the repartee: "Sir, do you presume to compare your father with my father!"

A young heiress with a penchant for farming was explaining at length the many difficulties she encountered in pursuing her fad. "I really am a farmer," she protested, and then added, regretfully, "although it must be confessed that almost all I plant I lose." "Therein differing from me," courteously rejoined her table companion, a rising young physician, "for I find in my case that almost all I lose I plant."

An omnibus full of Parisian students was making its way along the Rue de Rivoli when a priest in his robes of office joined the party. The students hailed the newcomer with delight, and began at once to tell all the objectionable stories they could recall. The priest spoke not a word till he rose to get out. Then he said, politely: "Au revoir, messieurs." The French "au revoir" means literally, "till we see each other again." One of the students evidently had this in mind when he replied. "Um," he said, "we don't want to meet you again, old dismal!" "But, au revoir," repeated the cure; "we are sure to meet again. I am the chaplain of the Mazas prison."

Once when Sir Charles Hotham, Governor of Victoria, was out driving, his coachman nearly came into collision with a wood carter, an Irishman, in a narrow lane outside Melbourne. The Irishman would not pull off the middle of the road, as he had the heavier load, and, by the rough rule of such things, was thus entitled to keep there. The incensed governor thereupon put his head out of the carriage window and shouted: "Do you know who I am, my man? I'm Sir Charles Hotham, the Governor of Victoria!" "Ye are, are ye?" responded the other. "Well, ye've got a thunderin' foine billet, ould man, an' I'd advise ye to shtick to it!"

When called to take up mission work in Chicago, the late Bishop Whipple found busy railway yards close to his chapel. He asked the chief engineer how to reach railway operatives. "Read Lardner's 'Railway Economy' until you are able to ask a question of an engineer and he not think you a fool." So instructed, he dropped in one day on a group cleaning an engine, and ventured a question: "Which do you like the better, inside or outside connections?" A torrent of discussion followed on connections, steam-heaters, exhausts; and at the end of a half hour he remarked, in leaving: "Boys, I have a free church in Metropolitan Hall, where I should be glad to see you." The next Sunday every man was there.

In order to show the feeling of insecurity of the Czar of all the Russias amongst his subjects, Prince Bismarck related the following anecdote of the Emperor Nicholas: The court physician had prescribed massage for some ailment of the Czar, who, however, was unable to find a single person in his entourage to whom he cared to entrust the task. At his wit's end, he at last applied to Frederick William IV. for a few non-commissioned officers of the Prussian Guard; these were sent, and returned to Berlin after the completion of the rubbing "cure" heavily laden with presents. "So long as I can look my Russians in the face everything is well," Nicholas is reported to have said, "but I will not risk letting them work away at my back."

They Left.

"It does me good to see a smart Aleck get the worst of it," said the communicative conductor to the man on the back platform. "There were two of them on my car yesterday, and their game was to scare people into thinking that they were just recovering from smallpox. They talked loudly about it for the benefit of the other passengers, and the more nervous ones, especially the women, began to grow apprehensive.

"'Yes,' said one, 'my case was a pretty bad one, the doctors said.'

"'So was mine,' replied the other fellow. 'It seems good to get out of the Municipal Hospital, doesn't it?'

"'That's what it does,' said the first one.

"Sitting next to them was a man who had been taking it all in. At this point he leaned over and said:

"'Say, when did you fellows get out?'

"'Only yesterday,' loudly answered one of the kiddies.

"'Is that so,' exclaimed the man. 'So did I. What ward were you in?'

"Well, say, those fellows jumped off the car as though it had been struck by lightning."

The Cockade.

THE adoption of the cockade by President Roosevelt for his coachman and footmen has resuscitated the old question: Whose servants are entitled to wear a cockade? As a matter of fact, there is no right nor title to the cockade, but usage has, in England, where the cockade is more common than in any other country, confined it to the servants of the royal household, of the diplomatic corps, of officers of the Army and Navy—including the militia and volunteers—and to servants of justices and deputy lieutenants of counties. According to this unwritten law of custom, neither peers nor other persons of title, except they be royal, can confer the cockade on their servants unless they themselves hold one of the commissions already named. And here comes a strange anomaly: if they occupy a Government position, they can wear a cockade, although their servants cannot.

"Cockade," or, rather, the French equivalent of it, made its first appearance in the phrase "bonnet a la coquarde" of Rabelais. About sixty years after Rabelais's death, Randle Cotgrave, author of the first Anglo-French dictionary, defined "coquarde," now "cocarde," as "a Spanish cappe or fashion of bonnet, used by the most substantial men of yore—also any bonnet or cappe worn proudly or peartly on the side." But the most plausible origin given of the cockade of to-day is that it was derived from the tuft of cock's plumes worn by the Croatian soldiers, who in the seventeenth century served under France, and introduced the cravat to the world of fashion. At any rate, in 1688, men ambitious to become soldiers of France received cockades of paper; hence the expression, "prendre la cocarde," meaning "to enlist." Cockades appear to have fallen into innocuous desuetude, so far as France was concerned, until the Revolution, when the "cocarde tricolor" must have become obligatory, for, just before the fall of Robespierre, arrests were made for not wearing it.

The black cockade, now worn in England, was originally the distinctive badge of the House of Hanover, as the white cockade was that of the House of Stuart. It is said white was adopted by the adherents of the Stuarts because it was the emblem of the kings of France, who supported the Stuarts against the Hanoverians. The cockade worn by servants of the British royal household is a large half-disk which projects above the hat. Servants of naval officers wear a disk not projecting above the hat; those of army officers and other persons considering themselves entitled to carry cockades are fan-shaped, with a button, and they reach above the hat. The cockades of the servants of diplomats are in the colors of the country their masters represent, and many noble houses on the continent of Europe make their servants wear cockades matching their livery in color. When, many years ago, the war as to whose servants were entitled to a cockade was raging in England, the facts discovered were that no orders regulating their use were known to exist, but it was recorded that servants of officers of the London City Light Horse, a volunteer regiment, did not wear them. The conclusion arrived at was that the cockade was originally purely a military distinction; that the reason it was worn by servants of field officers was that, in former days, these servants had served in the army, that it was later adopted by servants who had never been in the army, and afterward by servants of naval officers.

There being no set rule in any country from which we have been in the habit of adopting social customs, it remains for us to follow the law that usage and good form has laid down. They have prescribed that the servants of ambassadors and foreign ministers of the United States abroad shall wear cockades, like the servants of foreign diplomats accredited to this country, the cockades of the coachman and footman giving the carriages a certain right of way. Ambassadors and ministers are entitled to the cockade after they have retired from the diplomatic service. But consuls are not members of the diplomatic service; they are merely commercial agents. Neither our consuls abroad nor consular representatives to this country have the right to the cockade, as consuls. Its adoption by an American citizen who represented a foreign country as consular agent in this city was authorized neither by usage nor good taste. That his family should continue to use it after his death is ridiculous vulgarity. Servants of officers of the United States army and navy, both regular and volunteer, are also entitled to wear the cockade.—Town Topics.

Eggs for The British Museum.

A notice of the collections recently bequeathed by the late Mr. Philip Crowley to the natural history branch of the British Museum appeared a few days ago in the "Times." A very important portion of the bequest is the collection of eggs, from which 16,300 specimens have been added to the series previously possessed by the museum. Among the gems in the Crowley cabinet are an egg of the great auk and one of the extinct pied Labrador duck. Both these specimens were acquired by Mr. Crowley from Canon Tristram. The great auk's egg is one of the last "batch" despatched in 1844 from Iceland to Denmark. The two specimens in the museum previous to this addition were both cracked and in otherwise poor condition. An interesting item in the collection is the number of clutches of eggs of various species of birds with a cuckoo's egg among them. The Crowley collection has added about 15 per cent. to the species of birds represented by their eggs in the museum, the increase being especially marked in Australian forms, in which the national collection was previously weak.

The Conscience Fund.

"I found eighteen umbrellas in the church yesterday," said the sexton to the minister the day after a rainy Sunday. "Oh, well," said the dominie, "take them to my study; they are probably intended as contributions to the conscience fund."—Yonkers "Statesman."

"Daring" Books.

It is women who write "daring" books, and it is women who read them. When once the fair do take their bonnets off they are not content with that; they throw them over the windmills, as the French say. Men do not like this kind of thing. It not only disgusts but bores them. It is a particular kind of woman, usually earnest and very stupid, who enjoys these excesses. Our men, if all this goes on, must provide [illegible] with done to blush behind. We must have the ladies before the [illegible] and [illegible] begin to [illegible].—Andrew Lang in "Longman's Magazine."

The Lament of the Adult.

IN one of Dickens's novels—those novels which we are tearfully assured nowadays are not in the least funny—an ungrateful brickmaker rejects the little volume which has been brought him, because "it's a book fit for a babby, and I'm not a babby. If you was to leave me a doll, I shouldn't nuss it."

Something of this unchastened spirit stirs within our middle-aged hearts when we read a modern story, or see a modern play. It is probably the nicest kind of a story, and the nicest kind of a play, and if we were only fourteen instead of forty, or fifteen instead of fifty, we should thoroughly enjoy them both. Nothing is better calculated to make us regret our lost youth than fiction and the drama as they exist to-day. With what glorious emotions we should have dilated in childhood over Mr. Crockett's desperate brigands, or Miss Johnston's dauntless heroes. How we should have steeped ourselves—figuratively speaking—in gore, and revelled in romance. Sicilian outlaws, noble Indians, cruel half-breeds, courtly villains and heroines of wild, unearthly beauty—time was when these things made our pulses jump. But now seventeen murders excite us less than one, and duels are no longer the thrilling episodes they were in the happy past. It is hard to grow old, and it is made harder by the fact that nobody, save one's family doctor, has anything to offer to age. We should still like, even at forty or fifty, to be amused, but nobody caters to our amusement. When a veteran actor like Mr. Drew—who ought to sympathise with adults—entertains us with a drama that calls to mind the school plays of happy infancy, and the last act of which must certainly have been written by Miss Edgeworth, we feel that we are indeed friendless in the evening of our lives.

It is cold comfort to be told that the drama is intended for the debutante, and the novel for her younger brothers and sisters. It is even less agreeable to hear it hinted that if we do not like these pure and wholesome performances, it is because we want something evil. Does nothing, then, interest the adult save sin? Are bankers and brewers, anxious mothers and hard-working spinsters indifferent to all but vice? Must we either frolic like lambs—being lambs no longer—or devote ourselves seriously to the meretricious? Life has issues, not wholly unimportant, yet disconnected with love-making of any kind. Men—middle-aged men—desire many things besides their neighbors' wives. Women—middle-aged women—are sometimes strangely indifferent to their neighbors' husbands. We may be pure of heart, yet unable to take pleasure in "The Old Homestead" or "Ben Hur." We may be virtuous and intelligent adults. Will no one write novels and plays for us?—Agnes Repplier in "Life."

Judge Roger S. Greene, for many years Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory, was eminent not only for his legal attainments, but also for the accuracy of his scholarship and scrupulously correct use of language. A mispronunciation was an offence that he could not permit to pass unnoticed.

In arguing a case before him one day an attorney cited Browne on Carriers, pronouncing the name of the author Brown-ey. The Judge interrupted the argument to give him the correct pronunciation, which he accepted for the moment, but soon relapsed into his error, whereupon the Judge again interrupted with:—

"Mr. ——, that author's name is not pronounced Browney, but Brown. As in the case of many similar words, the final 'e' is silent. There is an 'e' at the end of my name, but you would not call me 'Greeney,' would you?"

"I et depends," instantly replied the lawyer, "on how your Honor decides this case!"—New York Times.

Cancer Growing

Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.

—Victoria Day (May 24th) three weeks from to-morrow.

—The open season for trout fishing begins to-day.

—The writs for the elections will be issued on Monday.

—Go to Whiten when you want the best quality of photographs.

—The chief is after owners of dogs who have not taken out their dog tags.

—A government agent is expected here in a few days, to purchase horses for the British army in South Africa.

—Committee rooms for the use of the Liberal party have been opened in Mr. P. Glover's butcher shop, Ashburnham.

—If it wasn't for elections the working man would never find out the vast number of friends he has among the politicians.

—There are some men in Peterborough looking for prohibition that would not be hurt by a course at a gold cure institute.

—A telephone system is being put in at Havelock. The Standard says a metallic line is being strung to Hastings to connect with the trunk lines.

—Mr. H. G. Buck's new steamer, which will be put on Stony Lake waters, is approaching completion at Hastings. It will be taken by G. T. R. to Lakefield when completed.

—The man with the swelled-head does not suffer so much as those who are compelled to associate with him. We have, fortunately, few of such in Peterborough.

—A joint public meeting of the electors of East Northumberland and East Peterborough will be held in the town hall, Hastings, this evening, when addresses will be delivered by the Hon. F. R. Latchford, Minister of Public Works for Ontario, A. O. Simmons, Wm. Anderson, and others.

—A bad boy found the coat of Caretaker Cooney of Victoria park hanging on a post, and seeing an axe nearby, cut holes in the coat. Mr. Cooney had him up before Police Magistrate Dumble last night, when he was allowed to go after a warning.

—Lindsay Post.—The Str. Sunbeam, purchased by Messrs. Carew & Parker, will arrive in town to-morrow from Lakefield. The craft will be put in shape for the excursion season as soon as possible. We understand that Kirkfield people have chartered it to run an excursion from that village to Lindsay on May 24th.

—A well known boot and shoe man the other day came down from his place of business in the old post office block, to the city hall, and purchased a dog tag. When he got back home his canine had taken a French leave, and has not been seen since. Our friend now has a dog tag for sale cheap.

A Wonderful Tonic and Strengthener

Said a druggist to-day, "No doubt about it, the tonic that gives best results is the biggest seller, and that is Ferrozone. It enriches and purifies the blood, restores strength and energy to the feeble, and is a scientific reconstructor that was always popular. In Chlorosis, Anaemia, Tiredness, Languor, Brain Fag, Indigestion and Dyspepsia its action is prompt, and satisfactory cures always follow. Yes, I recommend Ferrozone to my customers because I believe it is the best tonic and strengthening medicine that money can buy." Large boxes cost 50c. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.

—Mr. W. C. T. Boyd, President of the Trent Valley Navigation Co., was in town yesterday.

—Mr. Ed Brown has gone to Preston springs for a few days, to recuperate.

—Hon. G. W. Ross visited Lindsay yesterday and addressed large meetings afternoon and evening.

—Miss Dolly Dutton, charmingly entertained a number of her young friends at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Dutton, London Street, last night.

—Mr. Robert Porter, of the 12th concession of Manvers, who was trampled on and gorded by a bull on Saturday last, died of his injuries yesterday afternoon.

—Venerable Archdeacon Casey, of Lindsay, was in town yesterday, attending the celebration of the thirteenth anniversary of Bishop O'Connor's consecration.

—The citizens of Peterborough will be pleased to learn that Mr. John Davis, solo clarionetist, lately with the 57th Regt. band, has decided to make Peterborough his home and will be found in the front ranks with the band in their concert this evening.

—Mr. Wm. Barrington, of Hastings, who has been a guest at the National Hotel for several weeks, has accepted the position of wine clerk at Idyl Wyld, the popular Rice Lake resort. Billy's friends will all be pleased to meet him there, especially his friends from Hastings.

—Mr. John Thompson, the energetic Manager of the Dickson Company's Mills at Lakefield, was in town yesterday. He told the Times that he expects to be in full operation about the 15th inst., and will run full swing until the river freezes in the fall.

—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Scott, who hav sold their beautiful home on Water Street to Mr. Frank Matthews will take their departure for Ottawa next week. Mrs. Scott and family will spend the summer months with Mrs. Scott's mother. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have made many friends in Peterborough in the few months that they have resided here, and their departure is much regretted.

The Late Charles Mills

On Saturday morning last Mr. Chas. Mills, of Emily township, passed away, after an illness extending over a period of seven months, caused by a kick from a horse. The deceased was well known throughout the district, and was highly esteemed. He was a loving husband and father, and a good neighbor. He leaves to mourn his loss, a wife, two sons, George and Charles at home, and six daughters, Mrs. J. H. Harvey, Dauphin, Manitoba, Annie, Lily, Eva, Olive and Florence, at home. The heartfelt sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved relatives.

An Old Picture

The Times was yesterday shown, by Col. H. C. Rogers, an old picture of the Otonabee bridge and part of Ashburnham, taken in 1865 by R. D. Ewing. It was the property of Mr. H. St. Baldwin, who was at that time a teller in the Toronto Bank here, and who generously presented it to the Victoria museum. The picture is an excellent one, and will prove very interesting to the old timers. The bridge, which shows up so plainly in the picture, was of wood, and was burned in 1876.

She Didn't Give It Up

"Robson, do you know why you are lik a donkey?"

"Like a donkey?" echoed Robson, opening his eyes wide. "I don't."

"Because your better half is stubborness itself."

The jest pleased Robson immensely, for he at once saw the opportunity of a glorious dig at his wife. So when he got home he said:

"Mrs. Robson, do you know why I am like a donkey?"

He waited a moment, expecting his wif to give it up. But she didn't. She looked at him somewhat pityingly as she answered: "I suppose it's because you wer born so."

Another Original Bard

Peterborough has at least six poets, without counting Mr. John W. Garvin or the junior reporter on this great family journal, each of whom will some day leave a name to literature. But we have still another, as will be seen by the following stanzas, selected from 22 which were sent for insertion in this g. f. j. The writer does not disclose his name, no doubt for good and sufficient reasons. At the risk of breaking the press, or causing heart failure amongst our millions of readers we let her go:

Oh, let our lives be good and pure—
Clear-sounding as a bell;
For heaven's sake, good people,
Let us not go to hell!

For there is fire and brimstone,
And more than I can tell,
Oh, may no engine switch me off
Upon the road to hell!

A STRAIGHT QUESTION

And as Straight an Answer as we Can Possibly Give

Yesterday the Times was asked the following question:

"Is the Times a Grit newspaper?"

If the consistent and unvarying advocacy of principles that go to make the country prosperous and happy is meant, then the Times is a Grit newspaper.

But if it is the consistent and unvarying support of every nomination and every rascal in office that makes a Grit, then the Times is not a Grit newspaper.

VICTORIA DAY

Falls on Saturday and Market Day will Probably be Friday

Mr. Robert Fair, President of the Retail Merchants' Protective Association, has written the following letter to the Mayor and Council. The matter will come up at the meeting of the Council on Monday night:

To the Mayor and Aldermen of the Town of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—On account of Victoria day falling on Saturday this year I have been requested on behalf of the Retail Merchants' Association to respectfully suggest to your body the propriety of making Friday, the 23rd of May the regular market day for that week, instead of Saturday.

In order to avoid any misunderstanding as to the date it is also suggested that the Town Clerk be requested to issue a public announcement regarding the change, for the information of farmers and others interested. I am sure that the newspapers of the town will also co-operate in announcing the change so that the first anniversary of our departed Queen may be fittingly commemorated and the celebration of the day held under as favorable conditions as possible. Yours Respectfully,

ROBERT FAIR,
President Retail Merchants' Association.

A PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Nuptials of Mr. Andrew Graham and Miss Mabel L. Armstrong

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday last, at the residence of Mr. John Penrose, 432 Sherbrooke st., when Miss Mabel Lillian, daughter of the late Christopher Armstrong, Esq., of Toronto, was united in marriage to Mr. Andrew Graham, of Messrs. E. Brown & Co., grocers, town. About 75 guests were present, and the ceremony was performed beneath a beautiful evergreen arch, in which tiny candles sparkled with brilliant effect.

The bride was assisted by Miss Letty Armitage, of Oakwood, and Mr. Jas. Fowler, of North Monaghan, performed a similar duty for the groom. The bride, who was given away by her cousin, Mr. Penrose, wore a veil, fastened with a pearl crescent and lilies of the valley. Her charming gown was of cream silk trimmed with applique and chiffon and her boquet, of white roses. The bridesmaid wore a becoming gown of nun's veiling trimmed with chiffon, and carried pink roses. Two pretty little maids of honor, Miss Flossie Armitage and Miss Myrtle Penrose, were dressed in white silk and carried baskets of flowers. Rev. D. O. Crowley tied the nuptial knot. The wedding march was played by Miss Maud Penrose.

After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served in the dining hall, where decorations of evergreens and Chinese lanterns were very artistic and much admired.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts, the groom's present being a beautiful diamond brooch with pearl setting.

Friends were present at the wedding from Toronto, Shelbourne, Lindsay, Boston, Campbellford and Cavanville. Mr. and Mrs. Graham will reside at 436 Sherbrooke street. The Times extends its hearty congratulations.

READY TO CHANGE BEDFELLOWS

How a Little Peterborough Lad Figured it Out

There is a bright little lad living not far from George Street Methodist Church if the following be true, which is vouched for by his father.

The other night little Tommie had been put to bed alone. It was upstairs, and the thunder rolled and lightening flashed unmercifully. He lay quietly until he could no longer stand it and then his little nightgowned figure appeared at the head of the stairs.

"Ma!" he cried.

"Yes, my son," came the calm rejoinder.

"I'm afraid, ma. It thunders so and I'm all alone."

"Go, back to bed, Tommie," came his mother's voice. "Don't you know nothing can hurt you?"

Tommie went back to bed, but not to stay.

"Ma!" he cried again, and this time the little figure was half way downstairs.

"Tommie," called his mother, "don't you know I have told you nothing can hurt you, God is always with you?"

"Then, ma," and this time there came an audible sniff from the weeping Tommie "you come up and sleep with God and let me sleep with pa."

For Your Welfare

You are Urged to Make Health Building your First Work for this Month

Paine's Celery Compound

PUTS YOU IN CONDITION TO WITHSTAND THE ENERVATING EFFECTS OF A HOT SUMMER

If you are ailing, sick or diseased, it is our earnest desire to interest you in your own perfect welfare. We try to do this by simply urging you to make health building your first work this month, as efforts to banish disease are much more difficult when, in addition to physical sufferings, you are obliged to contend with the enervating effects of a hot summer. Medical men know well that a sick person when treated with the proper medicine in May, has a much better chance for life and health than is possible in July or August.

The incalculable amount of good that Paine's Celery Compound is now doing in making sick people well, should compel the attention of every thinking man and woman now in sickness and suffering.

Faulty nutrition of the nervous system is the direct cause of nervous debility, headaches, dyspepsia and neuralgia—ailments that thousands are now suffering from. When people have blood that is pale, watery and full of impurities, their nerves cannot assimilate food properly and derive nourishment from it.

Paine's Celery Compound used in May cleanses the blood, begets greater nerve force, regulates the stomach and bowels, arouses a healthy appetite and brings about a normal action of the dormant liver. Paine's Celery Compound in every case gives a positive and permanent cure. It is the most thoroughly honest medicine that rundown and sickly men and women can employ. Its life-giving effect on nerves and blood is truly marvellous.

MR. STRATTON AND TEMPERANCE

The Times, though like all other sensible authorities it deplores, and would welcome any means to decrease, the admitted great evils of the intemperate use of strong drink, does not take much stock in prohibitory legislation as a means to seek such an end. But it has great respect for thousands of honest people who believe in prohibition, and believes that if the temperance people of Ontario want to make a trial of it they have a right to the opportunity of doing so. We don't believe in the high price of beef, but if we eat it we have to pay the price. We don't believe very much in prohibition, but if the people say we must have it, what the people say goes.

In this connection the attitude of the respective candidates now before the electors, is interesting, and it strikes The Times that the published reply given by Mr. Stratton to the "test" questions submitted is reasonable, and we think his position on prohibition should appeal to every reasonable elector. His course is the manly course, though the merit of this may be lessened by the fact that it is the only course he could consistently take. He is a member of the Ross Government, which has, in answer to the request of the temperance people, placed a prohibitory law upon the statute book—the best the Province has power to pass, and the Government has provided that the people shall have a chance to say whether they want it or not. This opportunity is presented through the referendum. This is objected to by many as requiring too large a vote, but The Times thinks that a prohibitory law to be any good—to be any better than that champion farce, the Scott Act, must have a thumping big majority to back it; otherwise it will do more harm than good, and will do less to help moral reform than a good license law, such as we now have. The present license law, as Mr. Stratton showed, is a good one, and has done much to lessen, not only drunkenness, but the chances to cultivate drunkenness. The Government of which Mr. Stratton is a member has done much to improve the drinking habits of the people by license law improvement, and it has done all that could be expected of it in giving the people a chance to have prohibition if they want it. If we can't get a good big majority for prohibition then the country is not ripe for it, and it would do more harm than good.

Major Miller, who was made the temperance and prohibition candidate yesterday is in a queer position. He is, at the same time, a prohibition candidate and the supporter of a party with a leader who opposes prohibition, and if he can turn two such sharp curves without upsetting he is cut out for a successful politician. Major Miller is rather too good a temperance man; he rather overdraws it. He subscribed to the cast-iron pledge out and out—he will support any temperance measure, no matter how labelled, though it may be introduced by a crank and if passed prove impracticable, and an actual injury to temperance. Mr. Anderson and Dr. Ford don't go it blind quite so strongly as Mr. Miller. They reserve a little play for their judgment, and will support such temperance measures as are good in their eyes. We should have temperance in drinking, eating and talking as well. It is possible to go a little too far in the anxiety to catch votes. If the Province ever gets workable prohibition it will be owing to moderate, rather than extreme, action.

DELAREY'S MEN MEET

London, April 30—There is no truth in the reports circulated in the United States to-day that General Delarey, with three Boer commandoes, has surrendered to the British in South Africa. The War Office received despatches from Lord Kitchener to-day, but he made no mention of surrenders. Operators on the Stock Exchange were busy with peace rumors, but they were all very intangible. Two Boer commandoes were said to have surrendered. This, later, was supplemented by the New York report that Delarey and three commandoes had given themselves up. As a matter of fact, Delarey arrived at Klerksdorp April 24, and his commandoes, under Kemp, were arranging to hold a meeting westward of that place during the present week.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

A NEW CONSTITUTION FOR RUSSIAN EMPIRE

Rumor that the Czar Will Give the People Political Freedom

HAD BEEN APPROVED BY THE CZAR'S FATHER

Gen. Melikoff'S Scheme for a Representative Assembly Presented Some Years Ago May be Revived

Special to The Times.

St. Petersburg, May 2.—It is reported here that Czar Nicholas will shortly make a pronouncement giving the Russian Empire a Constitution on the lines of the reform scheme drawn up some years ago by the late Gen. Louis Melikoff, Minister of the Interior to the Czar's father.

Gen. Loris Melikoff, whom Czar Alexander II, had appointed Supreme Executive at St. Petersburg during the troublous times in the year preceding the Czar's assassination, and who was later made Minister of the Interior, proposed to the new Czar, in 1881, a plan for establishing a representative Assembly. The project had received the approval of Czar Alexander before his death, and it was the first business of importance to which Melikoff directed the attention of Czar Nicholas. Melikoff's plan was for an Elective Redaction Commission to be chosen by the nobles, the cities and the rural magistracies for a revision of the public laws.

The questions which the representative assembly was to consider were the solution of the agrarian question by means of reductions of the purchase money for the peasants' lands and of the land taxes; the restoration of certain powers to the municipal and rural authorities and the enlargement of their sphere of activity; the cessation of the repressive policy in Poland and the other border lands; and the reform of all the local administrations from the communal up to the provincial governments.

Coupled with this scheme of an embryo Parliament was a plan for rendering the Ministers responsible in a greater degree and insuring their more harmonious action. According to the rules, every decision of the Cabinet Council must be by a unanimous vote, and, failing of this, the question must be submitted to the Czar. After his decision the Ministers whose votes had been over-ruled were expected to resign. Any Minister who had submitted these projects to the Council of Ministers which had been rejected was also expected to resign.

The proposition of Melikoff reached the stage of discussion by the Ministerial Council in a meeting called for the purpose. The plan for a representative assembly was disapproved by a majority as a reform which savored too much of a Constitution. The plan as affecting the Council was approved. A few days later a reactionary manifesto of the Czar, on May 11 1881, put an end to all of Melikoff's plans for reform.

TO DREDGE THE RIVER

A Strong Deputation Wait on Hon. Mr. Tarte at Ottawa

A strong deputation from town, headed by Mayor D[illegible], waited on the Minister of Public Works on Wednesday, and urged that the river be dredged from the Little Lake to the Cereal Company's building. The deputation consisted of His Worship Mayor Denne, T. A. S. Hay, Town Engineer, R. Stuart, of the American Cereal Co., and Mr. Richards, the Traffic Manager of the same. At Ottawa the deputation was joined by Hon. Senator Cox, Mr. Douglass and Mr. Keefer of the Cereal Company.

Hon. Senator Cox, Mayor Denne and Mr. R. Stuart addressed the Minister, and were attentively listened to.

Hon. Mr. Tarte, in reply, assured them that the work would be undertaken, and more than this, that it would be commenced at once. He was deeply impressed with the importance of the work, and saw nothing to prevent it being accomplished.

Later on in the evening, Senator Cox was assured that arrangements had been made for the work to proceed forthwith.

MR. GREEN'S ENTERPRISE.

Great Improvements Made in His Machine Shop and Factory.

Mr. G. Waller Green, the progressive and enterprising Pump and Windmill manufacturer, on Macdonnell street, has made great improvements in his works during the past year or so. The principal change has taken place in the western portion of the building, where the blacksmith shop and storage rooms were situated. This department has been entirely remodelled and fitted up in a very convenient manner with labour-saving machinery for boring and turning pumps. Additional new devices have been installed, so that in this section Mr. Green can now boast of having a most complete equipment for turning out work more rapidly than heretofore. The machine shop has also been overhauled and put into condition for more efficient service. Mr. Green reports business unusually brisk. He has just erected a fine Brantford New Imperial Steel Mill at Gore's Landing for Capt. Harris. This mill has a 70 foot tower and 12 foot wheel, and is capable of forcing water through 2000 feet of piping.

SUPPLY DEPOT OF THE WORLD

Canada Destined to Supply the United States and Europe with Paper

WATER POWER AND SPRUCE

Prospectus of a New Paper Company Contains Rich Food for Reflection

The Shareholder, a leading financial paper in Montreal, has a strong article on the pulp and paper industry in Canada, and says:

The exceptional advantages which Canada enjoys in relation to pulp material for the manufacture of paper, the inexhaustible supply of raw material, the excellence and availability of her water supply and its ready applicability for use as a motive power, offer strong inducements to capitalists desirous of seeking investment in profitable undertakings. That Canada can supply all the quarters of the globe with paper, on conditions in no way inferior, but in many superior, to competing countries, is a well established fact, and justifies the expectation that this industry, which is already in a thriving condition, will yet become, and that at no distant day, one of the leading and most profitable industries of the country. As demand regulates the supply, and as the demand for the product of pulpwood has virtually no limit, the future is increasingly promising for this industry. It is highly desirable that the material should be manufactured in this country, and, then only, exported in the finished state. If other countries can manufacture our raw material to advantage that is all the more reason why we should see to it that the benefit they derive should be kept here. We are gratified, therefore, to know that efforts are being put forth to accomplish this desirable result, and we believe that these efforts will meet with that success which they deserve. Among the most recent enterprises in this direction is the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company (limited) which has been organized to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of Pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, where it is confidently believed that these products can be manufactured equally economically, if not more so, than in any other place in America. The company proposes to manufacture for export trade, and the position of its works on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without transhipment, an advantage the value of which cannot be too highly estimated. In order to enable the company to complete the additional necessary works and secure sufficient capital it now offers for sale $850,000 of 7 per cent. cumulative preference stock at par, payable 10 per cent. on application, 20 per cent. on allotment, 20 per cent. two months, 25 per cent. four months, and a like sum six months after allotment. The prospectus fully sets out the objects contemplated, while the composition of the Board of Directors is a strong guarantee of the faith that experienced, practical business men have in the success of the undertaking. The investor seeking remunerative employment for his idle capital will find rich food for reflection in the statements contained in the prospectus issued by the company.

GENERAL BOER MEETING

Pretoria, May 1 — The general meeting of the Boer leaders, at which a final decision on the subject of the peace negotiations is expected, will take place at Vereeniging, Transvaal, May 15.

It is officially asserted that subsequent to the deliberations of the Boer leaders at Vereeniging, they will proceed to Pretoria, and deliver to Lord Kitchener their decision in regard to the peace terms they are prepared to accept.

GENERAL DELAREY A GREAT LEADER

Traits of the Boer Who Made Lord Methuen Prisoner.

KNEW EVERY INCH OF COUNTRY

Instances of His Keen Military Insight—Got Away When Cronje Was Trapped—Of Huguenot Descent and Deeply Religious—Praise From Foe.

London, May 3.—It was a characteristic act of Commandant Delarey that he sent his fallen antagonist back to Klerksdorp to be attended to as soon as he found that Gen. Methuen was fit to be moved. The possession in his hands of a live British General was not calculated to disturb the clear judgment of this remarkable descendant of the old French Huguenots and lead him into personal reprisals.

A record of the strategy and tactics of J. H. Delarey, the prosperous landowner and leader of the burghers of Lichtenburg for many years of peace, would probably furnish the most valuable matter for scientific students of warfare that is to be found on either side in the South African struggle. But apart from a military genius that recalls the personality of some of his ancestral compatriots in the first French Republic, there is another side to Delarey as a man.

When the Boers struck their first blow in the western campaign by capturing the British armored train on the Mafeking line and occupying Vryburg, the Boer operations were directed by Delarey. When Vryburg, which lies out in the flat, wholly unsheltered and was an easy capture, found itself without a constituted government, the neutrals began to help themselves freely to the household furniture of the British residents, who hurried south into Cape Colony.

Delarey himself moved south with his Lichtenburg commando, collecting burghers as he went, and held the railway south of Kimberly. But as soon as he learned that proceedings which were not in accord with his sense of the art of war had followed the Boer occupation he ordered every stick of property in Vryburg to be returned to its rightful owner, and at once set up a municipal system which was found working in perfect order eight months afterward, when the overwhelming numbers and widespread disposition of Lord Roberts's columns moving north necessitated a Boer movement back into the middle Transvaal.

It was he who overruled Piet Cronje when the older man insisted on sticking to the old style of fighting, seeking the hillsides and from improved stone schanzes using the purchase of the higher positions to throw back attackers, as had been successfully done in the Kaffir wars. Delarey said:

"No; they will assume that we are on the kopje. Let us go somewhere else."

He had his way at Magersfontein, when he moved the Boer front line forward and to the left into the long, low bank of roughflat, away from the big hill, and thereby trapped the Highlanders. How right he was may be judged by the fact that Lord Methuen poured lyddite all the previous afternoon on the hillside, where it subsequently appeared there was nobody.

Again when Gen. French struck round to the east for the relief of Kimberley, Delarey was against Cronje's plan of falling back along the Modder, and the Lichtenburg man got his commando away north to Boshof, taking with him the big gun that had been turned against Methuen's camp at the Modder for the previous two months. He also got away the Boer siege guns outside Kimberley and took them all up to his new base without a casualty.

His habitually accurate reasoning led to Delarey's being frequently taken away from his western Transvaalers to devise positions for other Boer leaders.

Since the British occupation of the railway line and the stretching out of the block house system have made personal meetings among the Boer leaders more difficult, he has remained in the western Transvaal, of which—excepting the towns—he is still practically master.

He is a humane, companionable man, not at all cynical, otherwise his release of Methuen might have been accompanied by the expression of an earnest wish that they might again meet soon in battle.

Before the war Delarey was a leader among the liberal Transvaalers and not on very cordial terms with the Pretoria Government. He is an older man than Christian De Wet or Louis Botha, is as deeply religious as his Huguenot forbears and has great personal influence among the country Boers, who in the west of the Transvaal include a large proportion of men of his race.

SUSPICIOUS OF THE GREAT SHIP DEAL

The Reassuring Statements Not Accepted by the British People

REAL PURPOSE OF AGREEMENT

Think the Motive is Hidden, and that the Combination is Merely a Pooling of Interests and not a Merger

Special to The Times.

London, May 3.—The Liverpool Express says that there has been no sale of British ships to Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan's syndicate, and it asserts that the combination is not adverse to British interests. The combination is formed on a basis of the normal capital of the companies and of the individual value of each boat, cargo vessels and passenger vessels being valued separately. With regard to companies which are not in the combination, provision is made by which they may come in at any time on similar terms, all that is necessary being an increase of the nominal capital.

The Westminster Gazette remarks that the combination, as now explained, is really a pooling arrangement. There will be no competition at the ports with which particular lines have been identified. There has been no sale of shares, simply an exchange. The name of the new corporation will, says the Gazette, be announced in a few days, and the promised circular will then be issued by the companies concerned.

Sir J. C. Colomb will on Thursday put a question in the House of Commons to Mr. Gerald Balfour, President of the Board of Trade, asking whether the Admiralty, before adopting in 1887 the policy of subsidizing merchant vessels with a view to retaining them for war purposes, consulted the Board of Trade as to the probable effects of depriving the carrying trade, in the event of war, of those vessels best able to escape capture by an enemy.

The Pall Mall Gazette to-day says that the feeling of alarm occasioned in this country by the announcement of the shipping combination is giving way in London to an opinion that it is not too late to organize hostilities by which the completion of the deal may be prevented. It is not to be inferred that any attempt is being made to form a rival trust, but the companies which have kept aloof from the movement are prepared to memorialize the Government urging it to veto the proposed scheme if possible, or to pass a special act by which British ports shall not remain open to vessels run by the trust.

The Pall Mall Gazette adds that there is little doubt that action on these lines would have the approval of the people of the country, who feel that the methods of commercial warfare now attempted are unfair. Much depends upon the action of the Cunard company. Should that company elect to join the trust, the best authorities believe that sufficient pressure can be brought to bear to frustrate the whole deal and to save British shipping from what is nothing less than a great disaster.

MARRIED IN HASTINGS

Nuptials of Mr. James Ryan, of Town, to Miss Lena Lynch, Asphodel

In St. Mary's church, Hastings, on Wednesday last, the marriage was solemnized of Miss Lena Lynch, eldest daughter of Mr. Michael Lynch, of Asphodel, and Mr. Jas. Ryan, of Peterborough. The ceremony was performed by Rev. P. McGuire. The bride was assisted by her sister, Miss Bessie Lynch, and Mr. Foley, of Keene, was best man.

After the ceremony a reception was tendered the newly wedded couple at the home of the bride's father. Mr. and Mrs. Ryan will take up their home in Westwood.

The Day of Miracles not Past

A Toronto "Star" reporter investigated the case of Mr. Geo. Warner, and found that after thirteen years of almost total deafness, he had been cured by inhaling Catarrhozone.

This proves that where Catarrhozone treatment is employed, impaired hearing and deafness can be cured. Catarrhozone always brings quick relief, and is warranted to give lasting satisfaction. All sufferers from impaired Hearing, Deafness, Head Noises and Ringing in the Ears are advised to inhale Catarrhozone and derive the great benefit it is capable of affording. GEN. DE WET IS URGING THE BOERS TO GIVE UP

Frankly Admits that It Would be Useless for the Boers to Keep Up the Struggle

THE BOFRS TO BALLOT FOR PEACE OR WAR

200 Representatives of Commandoes to Meet at Vereeniging on May 15—Government is Silent

London, Friday, May 2—A despatch to the Central News from Pretoria says that at the meeting of Boers at Vereeniging on May 15 representatives from every commando, numbering 200, will be present. It is probable that the final vote on the question of peace or war will be taken by ballot.

The Pretoria correspondent of the Daily Standard says he understands that the meetings of the Boers have thus far shown a majority in favor of peace, though possibly some of the irreconcilables may hold out, however generous the terms offered.

A despatch to the Telegraph from Pretoria says that the Boer leaders are certainly placing the issue before the burghers plainly and without reservation. General DeWet is moving everywhere among his people setting forth the facts most honorably. He has frankly stated that in his opinion the struggle is now hopeless, and that the British terms are reasonable and generous.

GOVERNMENT IS SILENT

London, May 1.— In the House of Commons this afternoon Mr. A. J. Balfour said there was no information in possession of the Government in regard to the prospect of peace in South Africa that he could impart to the House. The Cabinet will meet to-morrow.

WILL MEET KITCHENER

London, May 1 — It is officially asserted that subsequent to the deliberations of the Boer leaders at Vereeniging, they will proceed to Pretoria and deliver to Lord Kitchener their decision in regard to the peace terms they are prepared to accept.

Ottawa, Ont., May 1—A cable to His Excellency announces that Troopers Kr[illegible], of Palmerston, and McClinchey, of Montreal, both of the South African Constabulary, reported missing from Klerksdorp since March 27th, have rejoined.

WAS TWICE CAPTURED

Ottawa, May 1 — A letter dated Klerksdorp, March 27, was received this week, telling of the doings of the 2nd C.M.R. It says: "We started at daybreak to drive the country back towards Klerksdorp. Soon after starting we killed two Boers and captured 22. By noon we had captured a few more; also a Boer convoy, with one transport of pom-pom ammunition. Our horses were played out. On that account some of our men fell behind our column. Dr. Jackson, of Ottawa, lost his rifle and stopped to look for it. He was captured by the Boers, and his horse and saddle taken from him. He had only been released two hours when he was recaptured by four Boers and stripped of watch, money, boots, pants, and coat. They gave him a pair of cotton pants and a pair of low shoes. After he was released he wandered around till he found his way to the L. H. lines. There they gave him a pair of pants and something to eat, and allowed him to ride on their transport till they reached our camp. On the whole our drive was very successful, capturing 135 and quite a number killed, also capturing 1,200 head of cattle, two large guns, three pom-poms, 50 rifles, a wagon load of ammunition, a number of horses and mules, and 26 transport wagons. Our loss was four killed and twelve wounded."

Leo's Health, Vitality and Mental Clearness a Marvel

An American who Visited His Holiness Speaks of the Wonderful Old Man

New York, May 3.—W. Bourke Cockran, who finds the sea his best physician, got home yesterday from Europe on the Kron prinz Wilhelm. He was gone just five weeks on this trip, spending a week in Rome, three days in London, one in Paris and the rest in travel. In Rome he had an audience with Pope Leo.

"I think it quite possible that the Pope will live to be 100 years old," said Mr. Cockran. "His health, vitality, clearness of mind and intellectual grasp make one of God's marvels. He received me on Tuesday of my stay in Rome.

"Those to whom the Pope gives an audience find him in a little room at the Vatican. An attendant throws open the doors, you enter and the name is announced. The attendant did not catch my name correctly, and announced 'Signor Bourke.' Instantly the Pope corrected him.

"'No, it is Signor Bourke Cockran,' he said, and remarked that it was two years since we had met. That was the only error of memory I discovered. It was five years since I had the privilege of an audience.

"He referred several times to subjects we had discussed at that earlier meeting. There was no noticeable change in his voice; his eye was as keen as five years ago. Indeed, I came away with the impression that the Pope is in better health than he was then. When our interview was at an end he received a pilgrimage of Hungarians.

"On the following Thursday I was one of 40,000 people who saw him go to St. Peter's to celebrate mass. He was carried to the cathedral in his sedan chair, and took his accustomed place at the altar behind the main altar of the church. We saw him personally receive 200 persons and later, as he passed the Cardinals, he greeted each one with a word or a question.

"The ordeal of the morning would have tired a vigorous man of fifty. The Pope's exhibition of endurance was significant of the unwaning vitality of his body and his brain. He will outlive some of the present candidates for the chair of St. Peter.

"I know that many people believe that the stories of the Pope's vigor are mere fiction—that he is on the verge of the grave. I shall not be surprised if the Pope I saw rounds out a century."

Mr. Cockran said that the Pope asked questions about America and the progress of the American Church.

One of Mr. Cockran's first acts on reaching his office was to inquire for the health of Archbishop Corrigan, of whose illness he had learned on shipboard. He had something to say, too, about the Beef Trust.

"No trust which advances prices can survive," said he. "A combination which lowers prices may be tolerable. It [illegible]

Married in Hamilton

The Hamilton Herald contains the following reference to the marriage of Mr. Chas. H. Mann, formerly of town: At the residence of the groom, 230 Hughson street north, Rev. W. F. Wilson, of the First Methodist church, spoke the words which joined together, Chas. H. Mann of Hamilton, and Miss M. E. Bustin, in the bonds of holy matrimony. Miss Aggie H. Mann, sister of the groom, assisted the bride, while the groom was ably supported by Prof. A. E. Randell. After the ceremony was performed, a dainty repast was partaken of, and the evening was enjoyably spent in music and games. Mr. and Mrs. Mann have the best wishes of their many friends for a happy and successful wedded life.

THE PHILIPPINE ATROCITIES.

General J. H. Smith, of the United States army, has pleaded guilty to ordering his men "to kill and burn and make Samar a howling wilderness; to kill all over ten years old." In the face of such a terrible admission, coupled with the evidence of subordinate officers that the order was carried out, even the shocking revelations of the torture of thousands of Filipinos by the "water cure" sink into comparative insignificance. The eyes of the civilized world will turn upon the United States inquiringly to see what that nation proposes to do with a general officer who admits the responsibility for atrocities which scarcely find a parallel in civilized warfare. The wholesale denunciation by a section of the American press of the humane and paternal conduct of the war by the British in South Africa will not make it any easier for the government to purge themselves of the odium of a state of affairs in their own campaign which is not an isolated instance of cruelty but a mere incident of a policy of ruthless extermination towards their enemies which, according to sworn testimony of their own soldiers, has been in progress for two years or more. The United States press was apparently so busy exploiting the mote in the eye of John Bull that it quite ignored the beam in that of Uncle Sam. But what is to be said of the government which must have had cognizance of these proceedings in the Philippines for a long time past and is only now taking tardy action? The orders under which these reported atrocities were practised must have existed in writing, and, in the natural order of things, would come to the attention of the chief officers of the government at Washington long before the matter was brought to the attention of the world through the revelations before congressional committees and from evidence in military courts strangely convened to punish subordinates for executing orders issued by a general commanding a department.

ABOUT FLYING.

We have heard with great interest a few days ago Lord Kelvin confirm the opinion expressed by The Times after Santos-Dumont's first flight that his system was useless. A flying machine occupying a thousand times the bulk of the man it carries, and of gossamer-like material, shows a practical absurdity.

There is another factor in sight, however, which, while this great family journal cannot believe that it will ever make the Santos-Dumont form of airship practicable, is at least worthy of consideration.

We are already telegraphing without wires. We shall doubtless witness before long the wireless transmission of electrical power. When that is perfected, the power-making part of the present balloon engine, which constitutes, of course, the greater part of its weight, can be dispensed with, and the machinery to work the airship's driving propellers can be kept going from some station on the land. And the same energy applied to another set of propellers might make the machine rise so as to do away with the balloon.

This g.f.j. respectfully submits this suggestion to Lord Kelvin.

Farm Butter Making.

At the recent convention of the Illinois Dairy Association W. R. Hostetter, one of the leading dairymen of Illinois, discussed butter making on the farm, and pointed out that the comparatively low grade of farm butter was due to the lack of conveniences and to the small quantity made. He is convinced, however, that good butter can be made on the farm, and in order to do this the dairy house and the surroundings must have excellent drainage and must be so constructed as to get the maximum amount of sunshine. He advises getting the very best tinware for dairy purposes, as it is so much easier to keep good utensils clean. Never buy cheap cans, pails or strainers.

Get a good separator, and use some kind of power for running it, as it is exceedingly difficult to maintain a uniform speed when turning by hand. He has no set temperature for cooling cream and churning, as so much depends on weather, the dairy house, etc. As a general rule, he likes to ripen his cream at a high temperature and to churn at as low a temperature as possible. He usually churns at 55 degrees in winter and 40 to 45 degrees in summer. The churn must be stopped at just the right time, or when the butter granules are about the size of a grain of wheat. He adds a little salt just before washing. The amount of salt to be used depends upon the taste of the customers. He believes it is advisable to try to get customers to use fresh butter, so that it can be delivered once or twice a week. Formerly he had customers who wanted him to pack butter in the winter for next summer's use. Gradually they have all abandoned the practice. He advises putting up butter in neat packages, as this will do much toward making sales.—Dairy World.

Profit in Pigs.

One cannot hope to make swine a profitable farm product unless he goes permanently into the business. Too many who try to make money from swine find it unprofitable one year, and abandon it, or because after two years of fair success the third season proves unsatisfactory, they conclude that the best days for the business have passed, and they try their hand at something else. My experience has always been that swine breeding requires more persistent and continuous work than most other lines of farming. As a continuous business, carried on, not one or two or three years, but ten, fifteen and twenty years, it has no superior, and the man who pursues it thus will get his sure reward. Each succeeding year we learn more about the work, and find out where we made mistakes, and where we could have made improvements. We become so familiar with the whole subject that we are competent judges as to whether we should raise this or that breed. We also grow accustomed to anticipating the markets, which is a great thing in these days of fluctuations. Then, too, we learn how best to feed the animals—how to get the most from every ton of feed, grass or hay.

If one is going into swine breeding for a continuous industry, he can then well afford to start out with the best bred animals he can afford, and by an intelligent system of selections and breeding, he will in time grade up his flock to a standard of excellence which his neighbor cannot equal except at great cost. When a man starts in each year or two to purchase new breeds and high-bred swine, it is a costly experience, and he hardly reaps much reward from it. There is quite a difference, however, when he deliberately adds each year a little new blood to his stock, increasing the quality as well as the quantity. The outlay is thus small each season for pure-bred animals, and the returns correspondingly good.

Likewise in regard to food, it requires a policy of continuous farming along certain lines which will enable one to look years ahead. The grass, forage and grain crops that can be planned for an intelligent rotation system will all help toward the same general end. The cost of feeding will thus up to a certain point be steadily reduced. One finds good pasture fields established in the course of time, land made rich and fertile for corn and grain through a rotation of crops, and hay and forage crops prepared ahead of time for each winter. In the course of time the work becomes almost automatic, and the swine produce profits on the average from year to year that must prove satisfactory.—E. P. Smith, in American Cultivator.

Medium Horses for the Farm.

What would a pair of these 1,800 to 2,300 pound horses do on a plough or harrow in the spring, when their feet sank in the mud almost as deep as the plough? They might not feel the weight of the plough, but they would feel their own weight before night. With a pair of the little Vermont Morgans, the two of them not as heavy as one of those big fellows, we could draw a heavier load through a miry place or a snowdrift than we ever saw a pair of those big ones draw in a bad place.

And when on the road they could trot eight or ten miles an hour or walk four or five miles on a dirt road, not for one hour only, but for five or six hours a day for as many days as there are in the week, and that not in a rubber-tired sulky, but a good, honestly made farm waggon with from two to four persons in it.

That is the kind of horses that used to be bred in Vermont, and some of them, not quite as compactly built, in Maine, and some of them, a little coarser built, came here from Canada, with legs about as large and hairy as the Clydes. None of them ever got spavins or crooked knees or tender feet, if they had decent usage, for they did not go down the street, as if they had taken a contract to pound down the paving stones.

The breed of these horses cannot be entirely exhausted. There must be some farmers who have good breed mares yet, and there may be a few stallions that have the Morgan blood in them. If such can be bred, we venture a prediction that in five years they will be in demand, and in ten years more popular on our New England farms and hilly roads than the heaviest western-bred horse that may be offered at the sale stables in the city. Do not make the mistake of trying to put too much weight into them by trying to breed from the heavy stallions, nor too long legs on them in the hope to get the two-minute horse; but try to get a good, honest, well-built horse of 1,000 to 1,100 pounds, with the disposition of a lamb, the willingness of the ox and the endurance of the mule.

"MANY FALSE PROPHETS SHALL RISE."

BY REV. P. Z. EASTON.

When our Lord was asked what would be the signs by which His people might know that His coming was near at hand, He mentioned, among others, (Matt. 24: 5), that many would come in His name, saying I am Christ, and would deceive many. If it were possible, He added, "they will deceive the very elect." It is evident that such teachers must be very subtle and have much that is true in their teaching, otherwise sincere people would not be deceived. As the counterfeit coin would not pass if it was all base metal, but is accepted the more readily the more silver it has in it, so the most dangerous teaching is that which contains a leaven of truth.

This fact was brought impressively to my mind by an utterance of one of our ablest scholars. Lecturing to students, he stopped suddenly and spoke to them with great earnestness, to the following effect:—"If you forget all that I have taught you, there is one thing which I desire that you should remember. The danger which threatens the church is not what most people suppose it to be. It is a matter concerning which ninety-nine people out of a hundred are ignorant. The faith is being undermined; and in no long time the church will be called to pass through a crisis more severe than anything in her past history." He then went on to point out that the wicked Haman, who was plotting the destruction of the church, was the insidious Pantheistic teaching of the day. Nine years have passed since this utterance, and it is evident to-day not only that the same condition exists, but that we are rapidly hastening toward the crisis then spoken of. It is not the church alone, it is the State and the family also, whose very foundations are being undermined.

One of the essential characteristics of Pantheism is its esoteric character—one thing to the outside world, and another to those who are initiated into the system; one thing again to the catechumen who is yet in the initial stage, and another to the adept who has gone through all the degrees. If it be asked how can we know anything about a system which is thus wrapped up in mystery, the answer is, the system is old, its sects many, and by comparing these sects and studying their literary remains we have very valuable literary and historical data upon which to base a judgment.

One of the amazing things about all these sects is the extraordinary fascination and seductive influence which they exert upon their followers. It is the story of the pied piper of Hamelin, with this difference, that it is not children, nor even women, but strong men also, who are borne along by the current. It is, in fact, a sort of spiritual intoxication, not to say delirium, which seizes upon them in which the senses are drowned and the voice of reason is not heard. It is impossible to argue with them, because there is no common ground on which to stand. That which the common sense of mankind declares to be black is to them white; that which is manifest folly is to them the highest wisdom. Talk not to them of a future heaven; they are in heaven now; nor of the beatific vision, for they have heard, and seen, and handled. Not all, it is true, are thus crazy. We are speaking here more particularly of Oriental Pantheists; but something of this same character is seen in all forms of the delusion.

How shall we account for the fact? We must bear in mind that the Pantheistic tempter is not the devil in horns and hoofs, but the devil transformed into an angel of light, who comes to mankind to-day as he did to the Saviour in the wilderness, with the offer of the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them on the one sole condition of accepting him as Lord and master. This is all he asks. No change of religion and no change of life. All things to all men in a sense somewhat different from that of the apostle. He is an exceedingly obliging and courteous individual. He is also a very pious individual and a very self-sacrificing one, ready in many cases even to lay down his life for the cause. Is it any wonder that he has deceived many, and that many have been moved to inveigh with righteous indignation against the hard-heartedness of those who would impugn the motives of such an excellent person. What grace, they cry; what goodness, what heavenly language! Would that his uncharitable accusers were half as good as he! Nevertheless, let us listen to the great Persian writer when he cries: "O how much sugar-like sweetness within which poison was concealed." In the story of the wily vizier that master mind has drawn just such a character, a strange combination of saint and devil, a character by no means uncommon in Persian history. Let the reader ponder these and other like words of Scripture: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." (I. Tim. 4:1).

Pretty

Is an adjective which seems to have become monopolized by the young lady at the typewriter. It is astonishing what an array of beautiful women are found in stores and offices. In fact, the typical American beauty will be found sitting at the typewriter rather than lolling in a carriage in the park.

And yet this pretty young girl needs always to be reminded that "beauty is only skin deep," unless it roots in health. When the health is undermined by womanly diseases, the luster soon passes from the eyes, the cheeks grow thin, the body loses its plumpness.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures diseases which weaken women and which destroy their strength and beauty. It establishes regularity, stops weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"Several years ago I suffered severely from female weakness, prolapsus and menorrhagia, and used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription with splendid effect," writes Fannie Shelton, of Washington, Iowa. "Glad I have not needed it for a few years past, but if I should ever have any return of the old trouble would surely try 'Favorite Prescription.' I have recommended it to a number of my lady friends. I always tell them to try a bottle, and if they are not benefited by it I will pay for the medicine. In every case they have spoken in praise of it."

NEW SPRING NOVELTIES JUST RECEIVED

PETERBOROUGH'S NEW WALL PAPER STORE,

We have decided to embark in the Wall Paper business, and ask our friends and the public to call and inspect our stock and prices.

LIVING WITH IT

You must live with your pictures, books, wall paper and furniture. Therefore, have them to please you, particularly the wall paper, for it occupies more space in your range of walls than anything else.

In the new wall papers we have to show you there are to be found particularly pleasing patterns—such as will brighten your walls and delight all who see them.

WITH PRIDE.

You may point with pride to your selection of any of the new patterns in wall paper we show you. They are in color, design and texture the correct thing and cannot be equaled by any other house here. They represent the new schools of design and show a delightful background as well as decorative foregrounds distinctive new.

WELL NAMED.

Our new wall papers are the kind which require no pictures upon the walls. They are art papers, pictures in themselves, and very beautiful, but abounding, too, in those light and delicate tones associated with boudoirs, parlor and bed rooms.

THE CROWNING POINT

The floor may be carpeted, draperies may be abundant and beautiful, but without a beautiful background, the effect is very poor. The crowning point in the decoration scheme is reached in the wall coverings. The beginning and the end papers are fit for royal homes.

A NOTABLE PROCESSION

A procession noteworthy and beautiful is that of our new wall papers. They are unrolled to hundreds of admirers, and we hope to count you among them. The wall papers are distinctive, interesting and beautiful. They are the correct thing!

IN DAYS OF OLD WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

My lady, the chatelaine, wove in beautiful designs and embroideries the tapestries from which we have borrowed some beautiful ideas in our wall paper.

My lady of 1902 will find many things in our stock to her liking.

OUR PRICES ARE FROM 10 TO 40 PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN ELSEWHERE.

Dr. Chaillu's Animals.

In a long review of Paul Du Chaillu's "The World of the Great Forest," The Spectator, London, declares the book's only fault is the failure to supply all the details the reader wants to know about its furred and feathered heroes and heroines.

"Do the hippopotami of the West Coast river really go across country for a swim in the Atlantic on moonlight nights?" asks The Spectator. "Where is the 'land of plenty' to which the monkeys migrate? What are the fish which regularly travel up the rivers from the sea in the dry season to spawn? Where is the place where the forest eagles cross that great continent to rear their young? These questions are among many suggested by the book.

"The description of the bathing of the 'hippo' 'trippers,' from their cautious entry into the sea to their return at 4 a.m., 'when each family went back to its shoal,' hardly bears quoting, but the idea is novel and amusing. The illustrations of the life of these creatures and of their seaside party by Mr. Gleeson are really admirable.

"The native names of most animals are short. An exception is that of the great forest eagle, the monkey-eater. It is one of the crested hawk-eagles, of which the native name is 'guanionien.' The difficulties of these birds' life when monkeys are scarce; their power of soaring to such vast heights as to be invisible to the monkeys, and of dropping down from the blue, whence their keen eyes see the monkeys on the tree-tops, of their hovering over the tops of certain trees on which fruit grows which the monkeys will probably come to gather—are all fresh and vivid."

A Canadian Herd Record.

The following letter is published by Hoard's Dairyman:—

Enclosed you will find a brief report of our dairy of twelve cows for the year 1901:—

No. lbs. milk for year	62,596
No. lbs. cream from same	8,560
No. lbs. skim milk	54,036
Cream was shipped to Montreal and averaged me about 78 cents a gallon of 10 lbs., or	$670.80
54,036 lbs. skim milk, 20 cents	108.07
Total	$778.87
Average milk per cow	5,216 lbs.
Average money per cow	$64.90
Average of milk per hundred lbs.	$1.24½

You will see that I value the skim milk at 20 cents per hundred. I consider it worth this to me to feed at home. My cows are grade Durhams and Jerseys. We have a silo; have used it seven years, and consider it the cheapest feed we can raise here. Had about four acres last season, and had 65 double loads to put in silo. Thought we had nearly 60 tons. Am feeding it twice a day in winter, and find our cows do just as well. I have water in stable. Cows have only been out once this winter. Stable is well lighted, and has a ventilator in it. Cellar under stable, and in this way think we save the liquid manure.

Turkeys For Profit.

Mr. B. L. Davis, Meshoppen, Penn., writes to The New York Tribune Farmer:—

I have been fairly successful in raising turkeys for profit, and this is my method: I raise my own hens, keeping from four to six, and always selecting the finest specimens. I never mate them akin, but purchase the finest bronze gobbler I can get, keeping him until two years old. When it is time for them to begin laying, which is usually about April 1, I watch them carefully, as they are very sly about hiding their nests; but they are never lousy if permitted to do so. I gather the eggs every day, marking each one with date, keeping in a cool place and turning twice a week. I do not keep them longer than four weeks before setting. I have learned by experience that June is the month for turkeys, the weather being dry and warm, which is essential for them.

I do not allow them to set the first time they are broody. They break up easily and will begin laying within ten days. When the turkey wants to set the second time, I fix the nest carefully, giving her eighteen eggs, covering some brush over to protect from crows. At the same time I set a hen on nine eggs, giving all the poults to the mother turkey. They hatch in twenty-eight days, and must not be disturbed while hatching.

When the poults are twenty-four hours old remove them carefully from the nest so as not to injure them (for they are very tender or frighten the mother, and place them in a triangular pen made from three boards 12 inches in width and 14 feet in length, placed in the orchard, where they will get the morning sun and the shade during the hottest part of the day. I feed the mother corn or buckwheat night and morning, and the little turkeys stale bread soaked until soft in sweet milk, with a dash of black pepper every other day. I squeeze the bread dry, only putting down a little at a time on a clean board, and taking care not to feed so much as it will cause bowel trouble.

While in the pen I feed them four times a day—at 5 o'clock in the morning, at 10, at 2 and at 7 in the evening, supplying them with crushed eggshells, pure sweet milk and water at all times. I keep them in the pen until they are strong enough to jump out, which will be in from ten days to two weeks. After this feed mostly cornbread in the same way as the whites, but only twice a day —early in the morning and in the evening—and let them roam at will; but if they are not at their feeding place by 6 o'clock I hunt them up, as I always feed them in the same place. They soon learn to come of themselves. As they grow older I give crushed oyster shells in place of eggshells. When ten weeks old they will need feed only evenings.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

Only heaven knew how his heart yearned toward her— and how great an effort it was to restrain his great, passionate love.

He tossed his cigar aside and stood quite still, folding his arms calmly over his broad chest.

"I am at your service as long as you live," he said gently.

"Let me come nearer to you, Aleck," she said timidly, but, oh, so wistfully and piteously. "I— I cannot talk to you so far away."

He led her to a garden bench and placed himself by her side.

"Now, Daisy," he said— still in that cold, courteous voice— "what is it?"

"I have come to make peace with you, Aleck," she sobbed, "and tell you —all."

He clasped the little hands that fluttered out toward him in such an uncertain way. Ah, how wondrously fair the lovely girlish face looked in the soft, white light of the moon.

"It was all a cruel mistake, Aleck," she began incoherently. "Now that the— the count is dead, I may tell you why he was there— where— you —saw— him. I had come upon him suddenly, taking our jewels, but for Olive's sake— because she loved him, I would not give him up to shame and disgrace. I would have shielded him, Aleck, even though you thought —you thought——"

He had caught her in his strong arms, covering the quivering mouth with kisses.

Oh, what a world of doubt was removed from his mind— fool that he had been— why had not such a possibility as this occurred to him before, he wondered.

It was such a happy reconciliation, quite worth the price of their estrangement, Aleck laughingly declared.

He could not understand the strange shadow that still lingered on Daisy's face.

At first he quite imagined this must be only his fancy, until all doubt was set at rest in a very casual manner.

He had been down to Highgate to look over a tract of land he thought of purchasing, when on his way back to the villa he had encountered Dr. Thompson— the old family physician.

"I was just thinking of driving over to see you, Aleck, my dear boy," he said, shaking the young man heartily by the hand, "I am glad I ran across you."

After a few casual remarks the doctor turned a serious face to Aleck.

"I have something to tell you, my dear boy," he said, "but you must promise me first not to be startled— I— have made a grave and painful discovery, and I feel that I would be guilty of a sin if I did not warn you."

"Warn me," repeated Aleck—"about what, my dear sir?"

"About your young wife," was the startling answer that nearly took his breath away.

CHAPTER XXVI.

How the Tragedy Began.

"I must warn you about your wife," repeated the doctor gravely. "Do you remember some little time ago you called me professionally to attend your wife? I told you then that there was something on her mind which was troubling her, and unless the cause was removed, it would end in madness. I am grieved to tell you I observe the malady gaining steadily day by day."

"There could be nothing on her mind— no secret thought which I do not share," declared Aleck, emphatically.

"Watch patiently, and see for yourself," said the doctor, sagely. "I have had a life-time of experience. I know whereof I speak."

Aleck did watch Daisy closely, and he saw for himself there was still something she was keeping back from him.

She was recklessly gay. How was he to know that it was the feverish gayety born of despair? She was clinging to Aleck's love from day to day— as a drowning man clings to a drifting straw.

This state of affairs culminated in a strange manner. Cards had been out for a grand garden party at a neighboring villa, and Aleck and Daisy had decided to go.

It was a great crush, but amidst all that throng of fashion and beauty Daisy reigned queen of them all by right of her royal loveliness.

As they saw her then they remembered her for long years afterward.

She had chosen one of Worth's marvels— an evening dress of silver and blue, that suited her fair beauty as nothing else could have done. She held a superb bouquet of white rosebuds and forget-me-nots half hidden by silver leaves in her hand, and a white rose nestled in the meshes of her shining, golden hair.

Aleck was proud and pleased at the attention she elicited.

When they had made the tour of the lawn he suddenly stopped short and touched her on the arm.

"Do you see who that is, Daisy?" he said, "that lovely woman leaning against the railing of the fountain, looking with pensive eyes this way. She sees us and bows— she is coming this way—as I live it is Lillian Ruthven, the heiress. You remember her, don't you Daisy?"

Ah, God! could she ever forget Lillian Ruthven, the heiress, and how strangely her path had crossed her own?

The answer died away on her lips, and at that moment Lillian joined them.

"I am so glad to see you both!" she exclaimed, in the old, impulsive way. "A friend's face among strangers is always a welcome sight."

As they looked at Lillian they could not help observing how greatly changed she was.

The fair young face was peaked with lines that should never have been there, and the bright, clustering hair was heavily streaked with silver threads; even her eyes had lost their brightness.

It was strange she did not observe Daisy's terrible emotion as she stooped to kiss her white lips, but she did not.

It was not until they were alone together that Daisy dared trust herself to speak of the past and ask Lillian if she had ever seen or heard of Harold St. John since the night of that terrible midnight marriage.

A terrible shudder passed over Lillian's slender frame. Tears sprang to her blue eyes, but she dashed them away with an impatient hand.

"He has fairly haunted me ever since!" she replied, bitterly. "Haunted and hunted me down until sometimes I wonder if there is mercy on earth or justice in heaven."

NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

N.B.—Since the Prospectus of the Company was issued (about the First of April), the Company has received two offers for the purchase of its entire output of paper. These offers are entirely unsolicited, and are from parties whose standing is such as to guarantee the performance of any contract they may undertake. One of these offers covers the first year of production, and the other covers the first three years. Either offer, if accepted, would be sufficiently profitable to assure the payment of the full dividend on the Preferred Stock, provide the amount required by the Charter for a Reserve Fund, and leave a balance sufficient to pay a large dividend on the Common Stock, if no unforeseen contingencies should arise. This does not include profits estimated from the sale of sulphite pulp or from the saw mill, which, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be sufficient to cover all unexpected contingencies.

PROSPECTUS

OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY

The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been organized in order to take advantage of the unrivalled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond on the Baie des Chaleurs, and by its charter, has powers of the fullest description. It is confidently believed that pulp and paper can be more economically manufactured there than any other place in America.

The essentials to the success of such a concern are:

1. Cheap and unlimited pulp wood;
2. Adequate water power cheaply developed;
3. Pure water for the manufacturer;
4. Cheap labor;
5. Low transportation charges;
6. Efficient management.

It will be seen that the facilities possessed by this Company assure a point of cheapness in the production of paper never attained before, while the situation of the mills on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without trans-shipment. As the Company proposes to confine itself almost exclusively to the export trade, it will readily be seen that this gives it further advantage over all other companies.

1. WOOD SUPPLY.—No paper mill in Canada has greater advantages in point of situation. Many companies do not own their own limits, being entirely dependent on outside purchases, and subject to fluctuations of supply and price. Other companies owning limits have to transport their wood from great distances by water or rail. Thus we find mills at Merriton and Niagara Falls are bringing their pulpwood from Central Quebec. Some prosperous paper companies even buy their pulp in the manufactured state. The mills of the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, will be built about two miles from the limits, where there will also be a very large mill-pond capable of holding several million logs. The Little Cascapedia River flows from end to end through the center of the limits, and the large number of tributary streams does away with the greater part of the hauling usually entailed in getting out pulp wood, thereby greatly decreasing the cost.

2. WATER POWER.—Mr. George F. Hardy of New York, the foremost American authority on this subject, has made a thorough examination of the water power that can be developed on the Little Cascapedia River at a point immediately adjoining the proposed mill site, and his report shows that sufficient power can be developed to run mills of even greater capacity.

This report can be seen at the office of the undersigned, or at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited.

3. WATER SUPPLY.—Pure and clean water is one of the most important factors in connection with pulp and paper-making. The bed of the Little Cascapedia River is rocky, and owing to its crystal-like clearness and purity the water in the river is suitable for making the finest grades of paper without the expense of filtering, which is almost invariably required at other mills.

4. COST OF LABOR.—The labor employed in the mills and woods cost less than probably any other American mill, as far as known, as competent men in this section of the country, on account of the cheapness of living, ask very low wages.

5. TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.—The shipping facilities of this Company are certainly unequalled by any similar enterprise in Canada, the situation of the mills on the Baie des Chaleurs giving every possible advantage for export trade, which is probably the most profitable field. Arrangements can be made with Atlantic steamship lines to run steamers from New Richmond for eight months in the year, as required. During the winter months favorable winter rates have been arranged with the Railway Companies to St. John and Halifax, New Richmond being on the line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which will be connected with the mills by a siding.

6. MANAGEMENT.—The Company has been fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, formerly Mechanical Superintendent with the Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, who will act as Manager of the construction and operation of the mills. Mr. McIntyre has had over twenty years experience in pulp and paper-making, and is regarded as an authority on the manufacture of pulp and paper.

PROPERTIES

The properties and limits acquired by the Company contain about three hundred and two square miles, or one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred acres, more or less. The wood is principally spruce, and there is also a large quantity of cedar, pine, birch, balsam, balm of Gilead, and poplar. The Company has reports on this property made by five different expert Rangers, acting independently. Copies of these may be seen at any office of the National Trust Company, Limited, or at the office of the undersigned.

The following is an extract from one of the reports:

"I have been working in the lumber woods for twenty years or more, and have traveled and examined limits in the State of Maine, New Brunswick, and Quebec, and worked in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and I am sure this is the best pulp limit I have ever seen or traveled over."

On the basis of any one of these reports a conservative estimate shows that there is sufficient pulpwood now on the limits to supply the proposed mills for more than 65 years. As spruce wood will replace itself in from twenty-four to thirty years, it will be seen that there is sufficient wood on the limits to afford a perpetual supply to a mill double the capacity of that now contemplated.

The freehold property consists of twenty acres where the saw mill, dwellings, and office are situated, and 364½ acres on the bank of the Little Cascapedia River, where it is proposed to build the Pulp and Paper Mills.

THE PULP AND PAPER MILLS

It is proposed to erect—

A Paper Mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons.
A Ground Wood Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons, and
A Sulphite Pulp Mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons.

Mr. George F. Hardy has estimated the cost of erecting the Pulp and Paper Mills and of developing the water power at $650,000. The balance from the sale of the Preferred Stock will be sufficient to complete the payments for the limits, water power, saw mill, etc., provide working capital, and leave a substantial balance for contingencies.

THE SAW MILL

There is on the property a saw mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery, capable of turning out from 35,000 to 40,000 superficial feet of sawn lumber in ten hours, and is equipped with all necessary power, gearing, shafting, etc., for the installation of another saw, which would double the capacity.

MARKETS

The markets will be chiefly foreign, including the Eastern States and Great Britain. In view of the expected advances in the price of paper in the Eastern States it is probable that the greater part of the output will be marketed there. Situated as the mills will be on the seaboard, paper can be laid down in Liverpool and New York, duty paid, at such a price as to defy competition.

Freight quotations can be seen at the offices of the National Trust Company, or the undersigned.

ESTIMATE OF BUSINESS AND PROFITS

Estimating the cost of pulp wood at $2.25 a cord, careful estimates made for the Company show that the ground wood pulp should not cost over $6.00 a ton, and sulphite pulp not over $16.00 a ton. The actual cost of newspaper from pulp, estimated at these prices, should not be over $16.94 a ton. This is after making all necessary allowance for depreciation and renewal of plant, and all charges of management and selling.

The following estimate of the annual output of the mills has been prepared by Mr. Wm. M. McIntyre, a practical pulp and paper manufacturer, and is believed to be conservative and well within the mark, and includes allowances for salaries and contingencies:

16,902 tons of newspaper at $37.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	$625,374.00
8,294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $30.00 a ton f.o.b. at mills	248,835.00
		$874,209.00
Cost of producing same:
16,902 tons of newspaper, at $16.94 a ton	286,319.88
8294½ tons of sulphite pulp at $16 a ton	132,712.00
		419,031.88
Showing a profit of		$455,177.12
7 per cent on $1,500,000 Preference Stock		105,000.00
Available for Reserve Fund and further Dividends		$350,177.12

The ground wood pulp and the balance of sulphite pulp will be consumed in the paper mill of the Company.

The estimated profits from the operation of the saw mill are not included in these figures, but owing to the enormous quantities of cedar on the limits, substantial profits should be made from the manufacture of railway ties, shingles, etc. The Laurentide Pulp Company, Limited, in its annual report, June 30th, 1900, stated that the Company's saw mill added to the year's profits an amount equal to its entire cost, although it was operated for only three months of the year, and estimated that the future profits from this source would cover the interest on the entire bond issue of the Company.

ISSUE OF STOCK

For the acquiring of the said property, equipment of the pulp and paper mills, the development of the water power, building the railway siding to the mills, and the furnishing of sufficient working capital, the present issue of Preference Stock is made. The whole of the Seven Per Cent. Cumulative Preference Stock has been authorized to be issued on the following terms:

For every two shares of Seven per cent. Cumulative Preference Stock subscribed and paid for, there will be allotted by way of bonus one share of fully paid Common Stock.

The Seven Per Cent. Preferred Stock is Cumulative, carries yearly dividends, and has priority over the Common Stock as to both divide and assets.

After the payment of the dividend on the Preferred Stock, and before any payment of dividend on the Common Stock, a further sum of one per cent. must be applied to a Reserve Fund under the charter. This fund will be for the further assuring of the dividends on the Preferred Stock.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the shares of the Company on the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges.

Applications for Preferred Shares should be forwarded to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited, Toronto, Montreal, or Winnipeg; or to SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, Brokers, Ottawa, Canada.

Checks, drafts, etc., are to be made payable to the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, Limited.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Further Information and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of SUTHERLAND & CAMERON, 48 SPARKS STREET, OTTAWA CANADA, or the NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, TORONTO, MONTREAL, and WINNIPEG.

We offer the Preferred Stock for sale on the above terms.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The county council will meet next month.

—We have a couple of coal stoves for sale cheap, at The Times Office.

—Go to Whiten when you want the best quality of photographs.

—We have 50 good-sized second hand packing cases for sale cheap at The Times Bookstore.

—The directors of the Little Lake Cemetery Co. officially visited the cemetery yesterday.

—Lindsay proposes to hold a big demonstration on July 12th. It should soon come Peterborough's turn.

—Mr. W. A. Given, of the Reporter, Millbrook, was elected Reeve of the village, Monday, in place of Mr. Russell, resigned.

—The Board of Works, the Finance, Property, Appointments and Health committees of the town council met last night.

—About 320 dog tags have been taken out this year so far, which is only about half the number of dogs in town, according to Chief Rossel. The time for taking out tags is extended for two days.

—Yesterday the horse buyers were in town buying horses for South Africa. They obtained a number of fine animals, for which good prices were paid.

—The directors of Peterborough, Lindsay, Orillia and Midland Fall Fairs have entered into an agreement by which first-class special attractions will be secured for each fair.

—Mr. G. M. Whiten, the up-to-date photographer, has had his splendid studio thoroughly overhauled and improved. Painters and paper hangers have been at work, and everything is now in first class order. Mr. Whiten's reputation for doing only first class work is known far and near.

—Lindsay Watchman-Warder: Mr. Robert Arnott, of Peterborough, has purchased Bark Bros.' cheese box factory, town, and will conduct it in the future. Anyone wanting this make of box can send their order to Mr. Arnott at Peterborough.

—Toronto Evening News: The butchers were to have met last night to arrange for a hoist in the price of beef. But they didn't, and they probably will not. It is stated that the country is full of lean cattle, and that shortly there will be a fall in the present high rate.

—Perhaps the Beautiful Snow is about as clean as anything that is white, but it is no cleaner than the linen which comes from the Parker's steam Laundry. This laundry does not agree to iron or starch the button holes proper. The holes will be removed, if patrons request it, while the articles are being laundered. At first glance one might think it would not be much trouble to remove a hole from a garment, but if you will think this over you will conclude that May Be It Is.

—The Millbrook Reporter says: — A young man named Pierson from Buckhorn was up before Mr. Gillett, J. P. on Tuesday, for stealing a bicycle from Mr. Duncan. He rented the wheel for three hours to go to Mount Pleasant, so he said, but neglected to show up until arrested by a constable from Peterborough at Buckhorn and brought back. His plea was that he had no intention of keeping the wheel, but His Worship did not agree with him and sent him down for trial, agreeing to accept bail of $100.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. J. H. McClellan is home for a few days.

—Mrs. Mellville is visiting Mrs. G. A. Duncan.

—Mr. R. A. Dutton returned from Montreal last night.

—Mr. Del Fowse of Lakefield was in town yesterday and gave the Times a call.

—Rev. W. J. Joliffe has been invited to the pastorate of the Charlotte st. Methodist church.

—It gives us great pleasure to state that the condition of Mr. Macfarlane Wilson is steadily improving.

—Mrs. George Hankinson of town, is visiting her mother, Mrs. T. B. Thomas, in Campbellford.

—Miss Annie Irwin, who has been attending Havergal's Ladies' College, Toronto, is home for a brief vacation.

—The many friends of Mrs. Wm. Irwin will be pleased to learn that she is recovering from her recent severe illness.

—Mrs. W. R. Russell and sons, Jack and Hartley, of Quebec, who have been visiting in town for the past three weeks, left for Quebec yesterday.

—Mrs. Thos. Henry has left Peterborough to visit with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Drain, in Dunkirk, N. Y. Miss Annie Henry accompanied her mother.

—Mr. A. C. P. Poussette, of the Sovereign Bank of Canada, Toronto, has been notified of his appointment as accountant of the Amherstburg branch, and has assumed his position.

Mr. J. F. Kennedy, a member of the well known firm of Dick, Ridout & Co., Toronto, was in town yesterday, and paid his respects to The Times. Mr. Kennedy reports business good. He speaks hopefully of his intended return to Peterborough in June, to take in the Olympic excursion. Mr. K. is genial, full of happiness, and makes friends wherever he goes.

—There is quite a party of Peterborough people staying at Preston Springs just now. They are: His Honor Judge Weller, Mr. R. LeBrun, Mr. Ed. Brown, and last but not least Mr. William Snowden, the genial proprietor of the hostelry that bears his name. The judge is seeking renewed vigor after his serious illness last winter; Mr. LeBrun is suffering from rheumatism, and we are pleased to say is on the mend; Mr. Brown is recruiting exhausted energies after a stiff winter's business, and Mr. Snowden simply resting. May they all return hale and hearty, and entirely free from every ache or ailment, is the wish of their hosts of Peterborough friends.

High Tea and Sale

A sale of useful and fancy articles, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society, will be held in the School Room of St Paul's Church on Tuesday, May 6th, commencing at 3 p.m.

A high tea will be served from 5 p.m. to 7.30. All those contributing to the sale will kindly send their contributions to the school room early on Monday afternoon.

Lightning Remedy for Cramps

Some people have cramps pretty often, others only now and again. But when you do have them it is a mighty quick relief you want. Polson's Nerviline is as sure as death to relieve cramps in five seconds—it's instantaneous, just a few drops in sweetened water and the pain is gone. Buy a bottle of Nerviline to-day, and keep it handy. Nerviline is a common household necessity and only costs 25 cents.

"The Sermon."

Are the dead really alive? Are they conscious and do they linger near us? Is there a wireless telegraphy between earth and heaven? Is Spiritualism all fact or all delusion, or part fact and part delusion? Does the Bible favor or condemn Spiritualism? These and a hundred other interesting questions are discussed in an instructive pro and con way in The Sermon Monthly Magazine of Toronto. Any of our readers can get a free copy by writing to The Austin Publ. Co., Toronto, Can.

In New Premises

Messrs. Jordan Bros., the enterprising florists, have moved into larger and more commodious quarters, next to Mr. H. Long's confectionery store, George street. The store is modern in every particular, and will be kept constantly stocked with the latest novelties in flowers and foliage plants. This progressive firm found the old premises too small for their rapidly increasing trade. Take a look at their beautiful window. It is worth seeing.

THREE BLACKS That Have a World-Wide Reputation

In that unique and wondrous collection of Diamond Dye colors, are three Blacks which have obtained a world-wide reputation for first class work; they are called, Fast Diamond Dye Black for Wool, Fast Diamond Dye Black for Silk and Feathers, and Fast Diamond Dye Black for Cotton and Mixed Goods. These three Blacks are used in thousands of Canadian homes each day, and are prized for their beauty, fastness and great richness. When you purchase Black Dyes for home dyeing, see that your dealer gives you the "Diamond;" they are the best and only reliable.

Have you tried to make a hooked Mat or Rug? If you would make a pretty floor ornament, send your address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited 200 Mountain St., Montreal, P. Q., and you will be furnished free of cost with new and pretty designs from which you can select.

—Some editors have very intense imaginations, as witness the following: "An editor was being escorted into heaven by an angel who had been sent out for that purpose. May I look at the other place before we ascend to eternal happiness? 'Easily,' said the angel. So they went below and skirmished around, taking in the sights. The angel lost track of the editor, and looked around about to find him. He found him sitting by a furnace, fanning himself, and gazing with rapture upon a lot of people in a fire. There was a sign on the furnace which said: 'Delinquent Subscribers.' 'Come,' said the angel, 'we must be going.' 'You go on,' said the editor; 'I'm not coming. This is heaven enough for me.'"

MISS MIGHT PRESENTED

With an Address and Beautiful Gift, Yesterday Afternoon

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Might, of the Central school, was presented with an address, accompanied by a beautiful present, by the teachers and pupils of the school. The pleasing affair took place in the school room, where the teachers and scholars assembled.

Miss Might, who has severed her connection with the school, carries with her into her new home the hearty good will of hundreds of scholars who have passed through her hands since she became a teacher, besides the teachers, with whom she has always been popular, and who esteem her very highly.

Paine's Celery Compound

Thousands of Physicians, Men and Women of Note and Position, and People in Humbler Circumstances Say it is Unequalled as a Spring Medicine

A STARTLING PROOF OF ITS POWER OVER DISEASE AND SUFFERING

It is by true merit, and true merit alone that Paine's Celery Compound has won its wondrous popularity in every part of the civilized world.

When all other medicines fail; when the best directed efforts of physicians accomplish but little for the banishing of desperate and dangerous disease, Paine's Celery Compound saves life and restores health.

It is natural therefore, that men and women rescued from the agonies of rheumatism and neuralgia, and from the deadly perils of kidney disease, liver complaint and blood diseases, should acquaint their friends—the sick and well—of what was accomplished for them by Paine's Celery Compound. In this way the glad tidings of prompt and effectual cures have spread from day to day to the remotest towns and villages, and the blessed work of life saving progresses in every direction.

One of the most remarkable cures of recent years affected by Paine's Celery Compound, is the case of Mr. R. G. Morris, of Brockville, Ont. Neuralgia, with its sharp, darting and excruciating pains for two years made life a misery for Mr. Morris. The skill of doctors and the use of common advertised medicines failed to give even a brief term of relief. It was only when Paine's Celery Compound was used that a blessed and happy change was wrought. Mr. Morris writes thus:

"Having suffered with neuralgia in the head for two years, I tested the skill of doctors, and made used of many kinds of medicines as well as the electric battery, but got no relief from any of these sources. I decided to give Paine's Celery Compound a trial, as I noted by the press that it was highly recommended for my trouble. I used several bottles and it cured the neuralgia as well as the dyspepsia from which I suffered. Now I am able to work all winter. I am happy to say the neuralgia has not troubled me for a year."

Presentation to Mr. W. H. Walkey

District Deputy Grand Master W. H. Walkey made his official visit to Peterborough Lodge, No. 155, A.F. & A.M., last night. One of the most pleasing features of the communication was a presentation to Mr. Walkey, from Peterborough Lodge, of an exceedingly handsome Past District Deputy Grand Master's regalia, as a token of the esteem and honor in which he is held by his brother Masons. Wor. Brother Rossel made the presentation, which was preceded by a very appropriate address by Wor. Bro. Armitage. D. D. G. M. Walkey is a member of Peterborough Lodge, the brethren of which took advantage of his official visit as a Grand Lodge officer to practically demonstrate their appreciation of his untiring energy in the lodge's interests, and his devotion to Masonry in General.

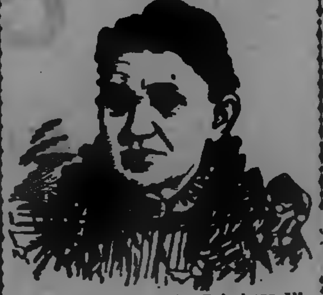
Solicitors for the Administratrix.

A MINISTER'S BUSY WIFE.

Pe-ru-na a Prompt and Permanent Cure for Nervousness.



Mrs. Anna B. Fleharty, Galesburg, Ill.

Mrs. Anna B. Fleharty, recent superintendent of the W. C. T. U. headquarters, at Galesburg, Ill., was for ten years one of the leading women there. Her husband, when living, was first President of the Nebraska Wesleyan University, at Lincoln, Neb.

In a letter written from 401 Sixty Seventh street, W., Chicago, Ill., Mrs. Fleharty says the following in regard to Peruna:

"Having lived a very active life as wife and working partner of a busy minister my health failed me a few years ago. I lost my husband about the same time and gradually I seemed to lose health and spirit. My daughter is a confirmed invalid, and we both felt great need of an invigorator.

"One of my neighbors advised me to try Peruna. A bottle was immediately secured and a great change took place in my daughter's, as well as in my own health. Our appetites improved very greatly, the digestion seemed much helped, and restful sleep soon improved us, so that we seemed like new women.

"I would not be without Peruna for ten times its cost."—MRS. ANNA B. FLEHARTY.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where those wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

WELLAND CANAL
NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sealed Tenders addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for substructure of Bridge," will be delivered at this office until 16 o'clock on Monday 5th May, 1902, for the substructure of the new Bridge at Marlott's Crossing of the old Welland Canal.

Plans and specifications of the work may be seen on and after Wednesday, 23rd, April, 1902, at the office of the Superintending Engineer of the Welland Canal, St. Catharines where forms of tender may be obtained.

In the case of firms there must be attached to the tender the actual signatures of the full name, of the nature of the occupation, and residence of each member of the same, and further, an accepted bank check for the sum of $500 must accompany the tender. This accepted check must be endorsed over to the Honorable the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines to enter into contract for the work at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The accepted check thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

How These Colossal Sums Were Raised — A Wonderful Financial Shewing

Special to The Times.

London, May 5.—A Parliamentary paper just published shows a total estimated charge on account of the war in South Africa to March 31, 1902, of £222,970,000, and in support of operations in China a total of £4,610,000.

A second table shows that the proceeds of the new taxes from 1900 to March 31, 1902, amount to an increase in revenue of £76,025,000, of which the greatest part is supplied by the income tax, which aggregates £30,877,000. The sugar duty from its imposition until March, 1902, is estimated to produce £11,300,000. The revenue set free by the suspension of the sinking fund amounts to £13,963,000. This, together with the proceeds of new taxation, minus £16,097,000, the excess expenditure over revenue for the period, leaves a balance for war expenditure to be charged to capital account of £155,140,000.

A third table sets down the total amount borrowed at £159,000,000, the cash proceeds of which are stated at £152,425,000.

The Hague, May 3.—Advices from Het Loo say that Queen Wilhelmina passed a quiet night. All symptoms of her disease indicate a steady improvement in her condition.

London, May 1—According to the Liverpool Post, one-third of the £34,000,000 of the capital of the shipping combine will be required to liquidate the White Star Line interests. The paper also says that a substantial proportion of the preference shares will be handed over to the owners of the White Star Line, who will also get £3,000,000 in cash for the sale of the debentures.

Albany, May 3.—Chief Judge Alton B. Parker, of the Court of appeals, has refused to grant a certificate of reasonable doubt in the case of John Most, of New York City.

Most was found guilty of having published an article entitled, "Murder vs. Murder," in his newspaper called the Freiheit, just prior to the assassination of President McKinley, and was sentenced to one year's penitentiary.

He appealed, and the Appellate Division unanimously affirmed the judgement. Under that decision he would be compelled to begin the service of his term, notwithstanding that an appeal had been taken by him to the Court of Appeals.

A certificate of reasonable doubt was desired in order that he need not go to prison pending the disposition of his case by the Court of Appeals. Judge Parker, in denying the application, writes:

"I am unable to certify, in view of the condition of the record as it comes to this court, that there is reasonable doubt whether the judgment should stand, and hence must refuse to make a certificate to that effect."

Montreal, May 2—The Canadian Pacific has acquired the stock of the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company, which comprises the Pontiac and Pacific, the Alexandra Bridge, and the Hull Electric Railway. The Gatineau Valley Railway also falls under this deal, as it is controlled by the Pontiac and Pacific. A joint meeting of Canadian Pacific and Ottawa, Northern and Western Directors was called for this afternoon, at the office of Henson Bros., the firm which has been for some time past financing the Ottawa road and conducting negotiations for its sale to the Canadian Pacific. It is not stated at what figure the one thousand shares of stock were purchased, but the actual purchase price is under $4,000,000, sufficient, however, to give Mr. H. J. Beemer and his Montreal associates a profit of a cool million dollars. The road evidently is to be run on the same lines as the Kingston & Pembroke road, which is operated under the presidency and general management of Mr .O. W. Spencer, and it is understood Mr. Spencer will have his already extensive jurisdiction extended over the new acquisition.

The original stock was 1,000 shares of $100 each, but there is now a bill before Parliament to increase this to $10,000,000 to become law on the 1st of July next.

St. Petersburg, May 1 — Duke Alexander, of Ouldenbourgs celebrated Chateau of Romone, in the Government of Voronej, has been burned by revolted peasants, who practically ruined the estate. The Duke is the father-in-law of the Czar's sister Olga, who married his son, Duke Peter, last year.

The seriousness of the situation in South Russia is apparent from the fact that Dragomiroff, Governor-General of Kieff, Pocaroff, Vice-Director of the Department of Police, and other officials have joined Von Plehwe, the Minister of the Interior, at Kharjoff. The Voronej sugar refiners have especially suffered from the outbreak during which the Duke of Oldenbourg's estate was dismantled.

It now develops that the agitators who are chiefly responsible for the spread of the revolutionary movement among the Hungary peasants used a curious political canard to bring the former serfs and the landowners into collision. A rumor was industriously circulated that the Czar had ordered the lands of the nobles to be divided among the emancipated serfs. The peasants thereupon formed committees under the commune officials, which waited on the landowners, and ordered them to vacate the land withheld. The peasants chose their own agents and proceeded to distribute the land and moveables, leaving the noblemen from 16 to 20 acres each. The proceedings, which were orderly, were conducted with the utmost gravity until the authorities interfered. Thereafter there was riot, arson and devastation.

Montreal, May 5.—The Shareholder, a leading financial paper in Montreal, has a strong article on the pulp and paper industry in Canada, and says:—

The exceptional advantages which Canada enjoys in relation to pulp material for the manufacture of paper, the inexhaustible supply of raw material, the excellence and availability of her water supply and its ready applicability for use as a motive power, offer strong inducements to capitalists desirous of seeking investment in profitable undertakings. That Canada can supply all the quarters of the globe with paper on conditions in no way inferior, but in many superior, to competing countries, is a well-established fact, and justifies the expectation that this industry which is already in a thriving condition will yet become, and that at no distant day one of the leading and most profitable industries of the country. As demand regulates supply, and as the demand for the product of pulpwood has virtually no limit, the future is increasingly promising for this industry. It is highly desirable that the material should be manufactured in this country, and, then only, exported in the finished state. If other countries can manufacture our raw material to advantage, that is all the more reason why we should see to it that the benefit they derive should be kept here. We are gratified, therefore, to know that efforts are being put forth to accomplish this desirable result, and we believe that success which they deserve. Among the most recent enterprises in this direction is the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company (limited), which has been organized to take advantage of the unrivaled facilities for the manufacture of pulp and paper at New Richmond, on the Baie des Chaleurs, where it is confidently believed that these products can be manufactured equally economically, if not more so, than in any other place in America. The company proposes to manufacture for export trade, and the position of its works on the Atlantic seaboard makes it possible to ship to all foreign ports by water without transhipment, an advantage, the value of which cannot be too highly estimated. In order to enable the company to complete the additional necessary works and secure sufficient capital it now offers for sale $250,000 of 7 per cent. cumulative preference stock at par, payable 10 per cent. on application, 20 per cent. on allotment, 20 per cent. two months, 25 per cent. four months, and a like sum six months after allotment. The prospectus fully sets out the objects contemplated, while the composition of the Board of Directors is a strong guarantee of the faith that experienced, practical business men have in the success of the undertaking. The investor seeking remunerative employment for his idle capital will find rich food for reflection in the statements contained in the prospectus issued by the company.

ENGLAND TO STUDY AMERICAN METHODS

British Millionaire Will Try to Arouse Emulation of America

COMMISSION IS COMING SOON

Alfred Mosely has been Taking Notes and Finds that we are far Ahead of Britain in many Ways

New York, May 5.—Alfred Mosely, who has been taking notes of American commerce for a month past, will soon leave for England to bring out commissions to study American educational and industrial methods. To the question "What are your exact plans with regar to the commissions you are bringing over?" he replied to-day:

"What I want to do is to arouse British trade to the necessity of waking up, and the best method of achieving that object appears to me to be the selection of picked men who can investigate the methods by which our commercial rivals are flourishing."

"How did you first think of the necessity of this investigation?"

"It first dawned upon me in Africa that something was wrong. It seemed to me somehow incorrect that all the large mercantile businesses were in the hands of German firms, while had not American engineers come along and revolutionized the mines and mining methods, we should have become almost bankrupt. So, later on, I took a trip through Canada and the United States to examine industrial developments.

"I was amazed at what I saw. I saw that unless we reform our methods England would be reduced to the place o a third-place industrial power. All the new industrials of the world which were in our hands 60 years ago are now in the hands of others. All the great manufactures which call for enormous consolidated plant will pass from us and we will be left with the odds and ends of trade.

"I am fitting out two commissions. One of these, which I shall conduct to Germany and America, will be to inquire into the educational method pursued abroad. The other will visit this country only, to investigate the relations of labor and capital. Both missions have for their object to ascertain how it is that England is being outstripped by America, and to some extent by Germany, in the race for the world's trade. Both missions are undertaken with the encouragement of the British Government, to which they will report the result of their inquiries. The mission on education will leave England in October for Germany, and will then proceed to New York and travel through the country. At a certain point in the West it will be joined by the labor commission, and then the two commissions will visit the same places together, returning to England next Christmas.

"It is hoped that the English people will be at last awakened out of their present blissful state of complacency the more time during the strike period. These disputes between labor and capital create a feeling of uncertainty which results in the paralysis of industry. Capitalists refuse to invest money in new business or in extensions because they do not know when fresh trouble may come. It is my personal belief that our improvement must come along the lines of education and conciliation between capital and labor.

"In England the object and effect of trade unionism is to reduce every man to a dead level of mediocrity. In this country, however, free play is given to individualism, and trade unionism aims to develop each man's abilities to the utmost. That is just the point upon which I feel convinced that my labor commission will gain most valuable knowledge. I am so impressed with the immense scope which America offers to every kind of enterprise that if I were a young man, and had my time over again, and knew that I could achieve a success in Africa, I would prefer to try my fortune in America."

"But what do you think will be the final outcome of all this? Your commissions will publish their reports, a few men will read them and then they will be placed in libraries. Do you think the general mass of the people will be so stirred that any Government action will follow?

"It may or it may not. I do not anticipate too much from the commissions, but I shall be satisfied if some useful hints are gleaned on the visit which afterward become incorporated with our educational and trade systems. You cannot, after all, pigeonhole ideas.

"Now, will you say what you have done since your arrival?"

"I have been observing. I see very much what I expected. There are signs of tremendous progress, and you are busily solving many of the problems which we have hardly yet touched, both concerning the higher education of the masses and the conflict between labor and capital."

TWO COAL CONTRACTS

The Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Take Half Million Tons

Special to The Times.

Montreal, May 5.—The Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways, it is understood, have closed contracts with the Dominion Coal Company, which aggregate half a million tons. That of the Canadian Pacific is for the current year, while the Grand Trunk's contract is for next season. The greater portion will be delivered in the port of Montreal during the present season of navigation.

AN ALL DAY FIGHT

A Battle Between Loyalists and Rebels in Colombia

Special to The Times.

Colon, Colombia, May 5.—The gunboat General Pinzon and a canal steam launch have returned from Bocas del Toro.

An important engagement was fought on Sunday at Punta Opera, near Chiriqui Grande. The battle lasted all day. The Government forces, numbering 500 men, under Gen. Gomez, penetrated seven miles into the interior and attacked the insurgents, 800 strong, who were entrenched. The losses of the insurgents are estimated to have been one hundred. The Government lost sixty killed and wounded.

The wounded, including Gen. Ferrero and Col. Lopez, were brought here.

Gov. Velez has received from the executive presidential powers over the republic.

Dr. San Clemente was President of Colombia when the present war started. He was deposed by Vice-President Marroquin of his own party and put in prison. His death was reported a few weeks ago. Marroquin declared himself President.

BRIGHAM YOUNG REUNION

Over 1,000 Descendants Invited to a Meeting at Salt Lake

Salt Lake May 5.—Arrangements were made to-day for the first reunion of the descendants of the late Brigham Young, President of the Mormon Church. For the first time the number of the descendants of the founder of the Church was announced by the family. There were fifty-six children, forty-seven of whom survived Mr. Young. From these sprang 204 grandchildren and there are 7[illegible] great-grandchildren. This makes a total of over 1,000 descendants of a man who has died since the Civil War. They are scattered in all parts of the world, some by change of residence, some on missions, and others travelling.

No building in Salt Lake is large enough for the reunion and it will be held in the open air. Despite the great number of his children, the descendants say that President Young knew them all by name. Brigham's young grandson said to-day:

"Grandfather knew every one of his own children by name. He always carried sugar in his pocket to give us. He loved children."

This does not agree with a story that is currently believed. Just before he died, President Young met three little boys on the street smoking cigarettes. He stopped them, and asked, "Don't you know you are committing a sin to smoke? Didn't your father ever tell you this was wrong?"

"Why, pa," chimed in the three boys, "don't you know us?"

The Young family denies this story.

The Hollywood Paint Company, Hamilton

A visit to their factory reveals the fact that they are now actively engaged manufacturing and are securing their share of spring business. Their factory is equipped with the very latest improved machinery driven by electric power, so that their methods of producing are most economical and places them on a par with their competitors. Their principal product is Hollywood Mixed Paint, in semi paste form, in connection with which their manager, Mr. Norman A. Jones, says: "The painters throughout Canada have so often been induced to believe that the various brands of liquid paints submitted to them use were pure and made with the very best linseed oil, only to find out later, that they had been grossly deceived, we have decided to put on the market a semi paste product of the very best lead and zinc so that the buyer could purchase his own linseed oil and be satisfied that he is getting the very best. In this way the house-holder and practical painter knows beyond any question or doubt that he is getting the very best material for his money." Their proposition to the consumer says, "one gallon of Pure Raw Linseed Oil added to one gallon of Hollywood Mixed Paint will give two gallons of Pure Mixed Paint," a proposition never before offered to the buying public. With their paints, the Hollywood Paint Company give a five-year guarantee of durability and satisfaction, so that their offer to painters and consumers is certainly an attractive one. The trade have asked the company to put their paint up in a form ready for the brush, and they are also putting it up in this way so that the small consumer may no have the trouble of mixing. The company are also making a floor paint which has been very favorably received by the trade, and will dry hard enough to walk on and have a high gloss in seven hours. In addition to mixed paints they will also manufacture colors in oil, dryers, varnishes and everything that is used in the decoration of a house, except wall paper, glass and brushes.

Mr. Jones reports that he has secured from one of the principal producers of turpentine in the Southern States, the Canadian Agency for Turpentine Spirits, besides which their company has been appointed the exclusive Agent for a number of American products greatly to be [illegible] by paint consumers.

ENTHUSIASTIC RALLY OF LIBERAL WORKERS

In Mr. Stratton's Committee Rooms on Saturday Night

MR. STRATTON'S PROSPECTS

For a Large Majority Very Encouraging—Number of Other Speakers Delivered Short Addresses.

Hon. J. R. Stratton addressed a meeting of his working supporters in the committee rooms on Saturday evening. There was a very large attendance, the large rooms being crowded to their utmost capacity.

Mr. William Yelland occupied the chair. In a capital speech Mr. Yelland showed the inconsistent attitude of a wing of the local Conservatives, who were trying to use temperance to advance the interests of the Review-Lindsay-Whitney candidate. It was quite evident, Mr. Yelland said, that it was Toryism, not temperance, these persons were trying to advance. He thought that no more injurious meeting to the temperance cause was ever held in Peterborough than the political temperance convention held on Tuesday afternoon last. If the temperance people allowed the wool to be pulled over their eyes by such a clique of politicians, they were responsible for doing a serious injury to the temperance cause. He was quite satisfied that the temperance people would resent this attempt to drag through the mire of politics the temperance organizations of the country. He was a strong temperance man himself, but they couldn't pull the wool over his eyes (applause).

Mr. M. S. Madole, the Liberal candidate for Lennox, who was in town a few hours on business, made a stirring speech, which was enthusiastically received. He dwelt upon the importance of the best classes of the community giving their support to the Ross Government, which was the most progressive Government the Province ever had. Its finances were in excellent condition. The public institutions under its charge ever were tutions under its charge never were better, the laws were all that the policy of the government gave hope and strength and vitality to the growth of the province. No greater calamity could come to Ontario than to place in power a party who were willing to arouse all sorts of cries to gain power to serve their own ends. He paid a warm compliment to the Hon. Mr. Stratton, who enjoyed and deserved as high a popularity throughout the province as he did in his own riding. Mr. Madole concluded by pointing out that the Ross Government would be stronger in the next parliament than it was in the last, as there were several seats in the eastern part of the province which would be redeemed.
